"Jimmy fought back in the only way he knew—nonco-operation. He defied parental authority whenever he safely could, fled the house in terror when his father's anger exploded. He greeted the arrival of the twins glumly; here were two more interlopers. And

CONTINUED ON PAGE 168

Here today... gone tomorrow?

Now you see it—one outfit with all the latest fashion features—flattering Puritan collar, long-bodied over-blouse, slim skirt. Get it in monochrome linen, wear it as separates, too.

Now you don't want to see it! No matter how "carefully" you wash them, some linens—and some cottons—shrink. Be "careful" when you buy—SEE the "Sanforized" label.

Fit for any occasion. Dresses like this checked cotton are always popular for summer. Here the long-torso look combines with a flared skirt. Wear it with or without a belt.

Fit for kid sister. Some dresses can shrink out of fit in just a few washings. Dresses marked "Sanforized" have permanent fit. Why gamble when you can buy a sure thing?

Like a breath of spring! Fashion's hardy perennial, the dress with fitted bodice and flowing skirt is everywhere. Frame-the-shoulder neckline, sheer cotton print adds newness.

Like the last rose of summer! Don't let shrinkage cut it down before you get your money's worth. Dresses labeled "Sanforized" won't shrink out of fit . . . out of style.

Moral:

No matter where you buy your cottons and linens, no matter how much you pay, make sure you see the "Sanforized" trade-mark before you buy.

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1%, by the Government's standard test.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 168

mosity between father and son already had a flourishing start. It smoldered for several years and then, with Jimmy's adolescence, burst into blaze.

"As soon as Jimmy became a ward of the Children's Court, Judge Smyth arranged for him to be tested and interviewed by our county psychiatrist. The psychiatric report read in part: 'Jimmy is seriously disturbed emotionally and is already set in a pattern of delinquency and antisocial behavior which will get him into further trouble with the law unless his living conditions are radically changed. What this boy needs is to be taken from his home and placed where he will have an opportunity to experience stable family life, guidance and understanding combined with firmness.'

"A stable home was easier to recommend for Jimmy than to find," the probation officer went on ruefully. "We had no suitable and available family to whom he could be sent. Few foster homes will accept a boy like Jimmy. Confinement in a state institution would be likely to confirm his delinquent tendencies. The only answer was to send him back to his parents. If he was to be helped, it was plain to Judge Smyth that our county social agencies must go all out to help and guide his parents. His father, in particular.

"Miller Robinson was the real key to the situation. This father was responsible in large measure for his son's difficulties. Of course he didn't realize it. Instead, he felt cheated in his own life, burdened with a weak and inefficient wife, harassed by a troublesome, ungrateful boy. Miller Robinson was accustomed to taking out his disappointments and frustrations in volcanic bursts of temper. His violence served to make matters worse for all concerned.

"Jimmy did not dare to answer his father's violence in kind, but he did dare to lead a destructive raid on his school and thereby avenge his injured feelings.

"Miller and Mary Robinson, after their conferences with the judge, became sold on the idea he wanted to assist them as well as their boy. They agreed to attend the Mental Hygiene Clinic in their community. Here, for the first time in their lives, these two confused and unhappy adults discussed and thought impersonally about themselves, their problems, their children. Both benefited. Miller Robinson soon came to see that in his handling of Jimmy he had been subconsciously mirroring the behavior of his own father—whom he detested. He acknowledged it was foolish and unjust for him to abuse and mistreat Jimmy simply because he himself had been abused and mistreated as a boy. From this new understanding arose a determination to change his ways.

"Mary Robinson was encouraged enough to improve her cooking, to budget her time and her money, to organize her housekeeping duties on a more rational and systematic basis. Then, too, at the suggestion of the clinic, both Robinsons visited a doctor for a medical checkup. Mrs. Robinson was found to be completely durable, but not her husband. There was a logical explanation for those abdominal pains about which he so frequently complained: he had a stomach ulcer.

"My immediate job was Jimmy himself," said the probation officer. "I saw him at least once a week, sometimes oftener. I set out to win his friendship, his confidence and respect, and eventually I was successful. Some time before Jimmy warmed to me, I warmed to Jimmy. Whatever his faults—and they were many—he had one shining virtue: he was truthful. One by one we commenced to thresh out his problems. His teachers at school helped greatly in the reorientation.

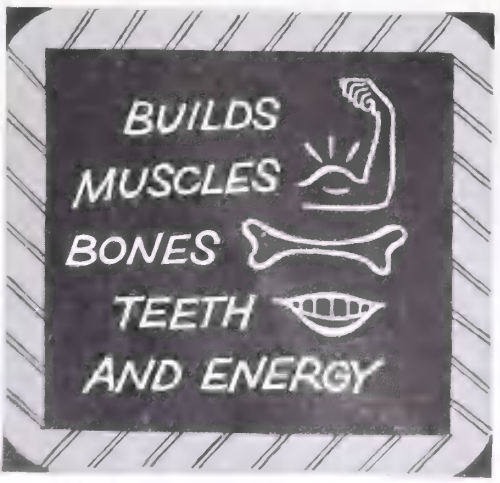
"When Jimmy told me he could not study in his noisy home, I reported to the judge and he discussed the matter with Frank Sealy, the school coach. The Sealys lived near the school, and Jimmy began to spend an hour there every afternoon doing his homework. Under this regimen his grades quickly improved. He joined the basketball squad and, in the spring, made the baseball team. The music teacher saw to it that Jimmy got another clarinet, and Jimmy returned—with genuine pleasure—to the band. The school music fund put up money for the clarinet with the proviso that he pay for it in installments out of his earnings as a caddie. These various activities drained off some of his adolescent energies and reduced the temptation to hang around the candy store and bowling alley where youthful hoodlums gathered.

"THE following June the Sealys invited Jimmy to spend the summer with them on their Maine farm. This was a vacation for Jimmy; it was more than a vacation for his parents. Without Jimmy on the scene to whet their differences, they achieved during those peaceful weeks an approximation of harmony. Self-examination had disclosed to Miller Robinson that his extreme penuriousness was not due to economic necessity, but to fears born of his depressed childhood. Medication and diet soothed his ulcer pains and sweetened his disposition. He became more financially generous and as a direct corollary his wife became more thrifty. Mary and Miller set themselves to greet Jimmy with love and understanding upon his return in September.

"The rehabilitation of a delinquent seldom proceeds in a steady upward curve. Usually there is progress and then retrogression. Like military tacticians, we counselors in a period of retrogression try to hold as much gained ground as possible. At times it almost seems that problem youngsters must get worse before they get better. This was the case with Jimmy.

"When he returned from Maine he had a chip on his shoulder. He seemed indifferent to the changes in his household, contemptuous of the concessions toward his welfare made by his parents. He had hated his father; now, in our weekly meetings, he included his mother in his acid criticisms. Perhaps his glimpse into the Sealys' well-regulated family life had made him more demanding. His father presented him with a new suit of clothes and got no thanks for it. And at a time when his mother's housekeeping had improved immeasurably,

You'll call it "milk magic"
NEW INSTANT STARLAC®



FROM BORDEN'S, GREATEST NAME IN MILK

Mixes instantly Yes, even in ice water, new Instant Starlac dissolves swish! just by stirring or gentle shaking. No lumps. You get the same amount of proteins, B vitamins, and calcium found in Borden's finest pasteurized milk. Cost? 8¢ a quart!

Tastes so good . . . so milk-sweet you'll enjoy it the way you do milk. Women say it tastes better than any other "instant." They can hardly believe it's made from a powder. You'd expect that. Only the finest comes from Borden's, famous name in milk.

Use it as you would milk for drinking, cooking and baking, for Starlac is milk with the water and fat removed.

In blue economy package for . . .

ABOUT 8¢ A QUART!

Copyright, The Borden Company

Also in red, 3 qt. pre-measured envelope package at a slightly higher price bitterly informed me that he was ashamed ring friends to his home.

Actually, in some confused and aberrant , I think Jimmy missed the drama and ence of a divided household. His mother once been his ally against his father; readjustment may have seemed to him an of treachery. At school his behavior deorated. He became a bully in the hallways on the playground. He stopped making ments on his clarinet. Most surprising of he was skipping band practice, and, once in, he was staying out too late at night.

Eventually I discovered his new interest. as a girl—the wrong kind of girl. She was years older than Jimmy already apprenticing self for an ancient proion. She served a pure in bringing the boy's problems to a speedy ax. One evening, roamthe streets, Jimmy and girl friend came upon a nk automobile parked curb. The key was in ignition. They 'bored' the car, drove it nty or thirty miles. When Jimmy brought car back he was recognized and the incit was at once reported to me.

This second offense was a danger signal judge was unwilling to ignore. In Westter County the court maintains a 'detencottage' which accommodates fifteen s. It is a rather handsome Georgian resice presided over by a housemother and sefather. The food is good, the treatment ndly, but windows and doors are kept sely bolted and there are firm rules and regions which, to the inmate, foreshadow the men he will encounter if he is sent to a state tution. In other words, the boys get a e of what it is like to be away from their ilies, confined among strangers—and are wed to reflect on what compass course they to plot their future.

Jimmy was sent to this detention cottage a period of three weeks. I talked to him e and he did a lot of thinking on his own. t of all, he decided to break off with his flamboyant girl friend. After ten days he sent Judge Smyth a letter. 'If I am given another chance,' he wrote, 'I will never get into trouble again. This is a solemn promise.'

"Jimmy kept his promise. When he was released, he was a chastened and much more serious youngster; he listened to counseling with gravity. Jimmy was intelligent. The threat of losing his home had clearly made him appreciate its virtues. He admitted to me that he wasn't entitled to be paid for the smallest chores, that the son of a family could reasonably be expected to perform certain duties. He also admitted there was nothing to be gained by his deliberately provoking his father, as he had often done in the past. He even understood when I pointed out to him that he and his father were two men of a pattern; both of them had extraordinary ability with tools and with their hands, and an intolerance for the inept. In a guarded way they began to become acquainted with each other. After a month or so, they began to build together the long-promised bedroom. That was the pay-off. At last they admired each other's skills.

One of the best rules of conversation is, never to say a thing which any of the company can reasonably wish had been left unsaid.
—SWIFT

"Jimmy is eighteen years old now and long since has passed out of the authority of the court. When he completes his stint in the Army, he and his father expect to open on their own an electrical-repair shop. What did the court do for Jimmy? Well, I guess I'll settle for Judge Smyth's words:

"'In doing our work, we must ever remember that the individuals before us are not criminals, but unfortunate children in need of aid, protection and help. This is our guiding motive—help.

"'We must, belatedly, do for children what their parents should have done in the first place. And we must also try to give the parents guidance in their personal relationships with their children.'"

Editors' Note: This case history was compiled and condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

SOME SUNDAY IN MAY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 79

n. Steaks 2" thick require 30–35 minutes are and 35–40 for medium.

Tomato surprise? No. There are few surs left to mortal man. "I was never so rised in my life" doesn't mean that. Look to last Friday or last Christmas or to erday and you might as truthfully say were as surprised or more so. Isn't it so?

The tomato has it. A little observation and tation and a short test will teach you that see here a stuffed tomato. If you are sured, then I'm a crystal gazer and need a tent a county fair. But I'll guarantee you'll be sed and no mistake!

BAKED STUFFED TOMATOES

the tops off 6 ripe tomatoes; scoop out pulp, then turn tomatoes upside down drain. Sauté about 1½ cups frozen cut in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine ⅓ cup chopped green pepper and ½ cup ped onion, seasoning with ½ teaspoon and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Finally add ⅓ firm tomato pulp, diced, and ¼ cup soft d crumbs. Season tomatoes with salt and per, fill with corn mixture and bake in a erate oven, 350° F., for 15 to 20 minutes. p hot in warming oven while steak broils ou have a one-oven range and the broiler the oven.

Worthy of a queen's table. Our grand e is poetically called an angel pie. We ect it will arouse a thoroughly earthy ape. Hope so, anyway.

PEACH ANGEL PIE

ase well and flour a 9" or 10" pie plate t to the edge. Beat the whites of 6 eggs ¼ teaspoon salt until stiff but not dry. Add gradually, very gradually, 1 cup sugar, beating well after each addition. Add 2 teaspoons vanilla and another cup of sugar, very slowly, alternating with 2 teaspoons lemon juice. Beat until all the sugar is dissolved and the meringue is very stiff. Put the meringue into the pie plate, having it higher in the middle than around the edge. It should look more or less like a dome. Bake 1 hour and 30 minutes in a slow oven, 275° F., and then for 30 minutes at 300° F. It will puff and then crack. As it cools, the center will sink somewhat. Cool thoroughly. But not in the refrigerator. (There's no snow, so that's out too.) Drain two 10-ounce packages frozen sliced peaches. Just before serving whip 1½ cups heavy cream with ½ teaspoon almond extract and 1 tablespoon sugar. Spread a layer of the cream on the pie, then a layer of the peaches, another layer of cream and more peaches on top. Do not put the pie in the refrigerator. It does not improve the meringue. Spoils it, as a matter of fact. Cut as you would a pie—loosen the edges with a spatula first to make the coming out easier and more successful. It will be one of the best successes you ever had—if you ask me.

A RHYME IN TIME

With angel pie I said good-by,
And all the summer through
I know that you'll be making this,
It's lighter than a lover's kiss
When hearts no more are big with bliss—
And love's deserted you.
It may be—yes, it could be—
Come June and roses, too,
That angel pie
Your tears will dry
And bring him back to you.

YOURS, ANNIE

Secrets from the

Sunkist Kitchen

European gourmets have a secret we can steal. Even the simplest foods become more tantalizing, they say, if you follow this rule: "A little lemon emphasizes flavor . . . more lemon adds flavor." Apply this to meat, fish, soups and vegetables.

When the honeymoon's over it's time to try lemon pie! A grouchy husband just can't resist a delicious treat like this one.

MAGIC LEMON PIE

8-inch baked pie shell
2 egg yolks, beaten well 2 tbsp. sugar
½ cup Sunkist lemon juice
1 can (1⅓ cups) Borden's Eagle Brand condensed milk
1 tbsp. grated lemon peel

Thoroughly combine all ingredients. The filling will thicken as though cooked. Pour into a baked pastry shell or a crumb crust. Cover with meringue.

MERINGUE

1 tsp. lemon juice
2 egg whites 4 tbsp. sugar

Beat egg whites and lemon juice until stiff, gradually adding sugar. Spread on pie. Bake at 400° F. until golden brown.

FREE: 10 prize-winning Lemon Pie recipes. Write Sunkist, Section 205, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, California.

When the doctor says, "No salt"—foods are so flat and tasteless it's hard to eat. Thousands placed by their doctors on low-salt diets have found fresh lemons are able all by themselves to make foods appetizing without salt! Only under doctor's orders should salt be restricted or eliminated from the diet. But when he says, "No salt," put a dish of juicy lemon wedges on the table every meal. Squeeze their tangy juice generously instead of using salt. Foods will taste good again.

To help you in cooking and serving for the low-salt dieter we have prepared a valuable recipe booklet, "Salt or No Salt." Free. Just write Sunkist, Section 205, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, California.

We Americans are learning that the simple "tea break"—morning and afternoon—sends us back to work more refreshed. Lemon . . . fragrant drops of fresh juice . . . works magic even your eyes can see: your tea turns instantly from brown to amber-clear. And delicious? Ah-h-h! What a difference fresh lemon makes!

Crepes suz-lemons—for a scrumptious, simple dessert, squeeze lemon over a large, thin buttered pancake. Sprinkle with sugar. Roll like a jelly roll and cut in bite sizes.

COUNTING CALORIES?

Here's an easy way to drop 200 to 300 calories from your daily diet:

Whether you're dieting strenuously or just trying your best to hold that waistline, there's no easier way to cut calories than this:

1. Instead of mayonnaise or oil dressing, make your salads tasty and tantalizing with a generous sprinkling of fresh Sunkist lemon juice!

2. Instead of topping hot vegetables with a pat of butter, squeeze over them a generous wedge of Sunkist Lemon—and discover how magically fresh lemon enhances vegetable flavors!

A lemon wedge contains, of course, almost no calories, yet adds valuable vitamins and minerals.

Why, shucks, you can use lemons for just about everything through the meal—from canape to finger bowl!

Don't forget fresh lemons the next time you shop—only fresh lemons give you the true lemon flavor!

Fresh Sunkist Lemons

California-Arizona

For easy days...

Perfect Rice Without Cooking!

1. It's prepared instantly. Just add Minute Rice to boiling water!
2. It's trouble-free. No washing! No boiling! No draining! No sticky pans!
3. It's foolproof. White, fluffy delicious rice—perfect every time!
4. It's just plain good eating—the easiest way to round out a well-balanced meal!

Product of General Foods

Birthdays come almost every month, with a cake and party for each. Nine children live at home with George (Uncle Billie), Jo and "Pop" Paulhill. So the table for twelve has to stretch from dining room straight into the living room.

"From now on you live here," Uncle Billie gently told the children. Four days later Mrs. Morris found their mother's note in a Bible.

"please take my children"

Four years ago, George and Josephine Morris were childless.

Today, nine foster children fill their life in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

BY ROSEMARY JONES • PHOTOGRAPHS BY DICK SAUNDERS

HOW AMERICA LIVES

"I USED to say it couldn't be done," George Morris said, laughter in his deep voice. "I always said people should have their kids when they're young and can stand it! All that running around to heat bottles and chase two-year-olds takes more energy than middle-aged folks have left."

He paused while Fanny Rebecca, four years old and the youngest in the Morris's foster family of nine, stretched up to put her lips close to Mrs. Morris's ear. "Mommy, can we have some jel-ly?" she whispered. Mrs. Morris smiled, shook her head, and whispered back, "Wait for dinner."

"Well, we found out I was wrong," Mr. Morris went on. "Nobody around here's dead yet!"

Four years ago George and Josephine Morris, then in the middle forties, and Mrs. Morris's father, affectionately called "Pop" Paulhill, were living quietly and comfortably in the eight-room row house the Morrises had bought soon after their marriage in 1942. They had no children, but together George and Josephine had built a rich life which was all the richer in their eyes because both had worked so long to reach it. After years of literally stretching every penny, hard years during which his first wife died, George Morris had built the labor organization and the career in labor he had dreamed of. For the first time he was able to save regularly.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 173

The TV set is in big demand, but Uncle Billie insists on parliamentary procedure. If children can't agree, they vote on what program to see. Janett (on floor) is on the losing side this time. She and Fanny always vote with mommy—a solid block of thr Neat brick "row house," one of many alike in the block, was bought by Morrises in 1942. Girls bunk in 1 room, boys in 2. Problem! There's only 1 bath.

"Our richest years began when our savings disappeared." First purchase: $60 worth of sheets and pillowcases.

Biscuits for dinner—3 panfuls—are appreciatively eyed by Janett, 5. Aunt Jo's big help comes from teen-agers Josephine and Pattie and from Adelaide, who is only 11 but can turn out a dinner for fifteen people.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

All the family are active in the Baptist Church, "and thank God every night for all the wonderful things he has given us." John and "Butch" are members of older boys' Sunday-school class.

First-floor hall is the only "free space" used for play, sorting laundry, checking off chores on a blackboard. Married Donald's 2-year-old son also tries it out for basketball.

Senior member of the house is "Pop" Paulhill, Aunt Jo's father. He works nights, walks 5 miles for exercise, and will teach a jitterbug step to any child who wants dancing help.

Home haircuts save money, but the older boys object. Uncle Billie has begun to talk over finances with them, explains that a small fund of money "has to take care of all your little brothers and sisters."

After-school snacks help use up 6 to 7 loaves of bread a day. Aunt Jo buys fruit and vegetables by the bushel, meat in bulk to go into the freezer. The food bill runs to a minimum of $70 a week.

Fanny yawns after an exciting day (all her days are exciting!) nd Aunt Jo relaxes—but she'll be wide awake again for the good-night chat over coffee with Uncle Billie.

TINUED FROM PAGE 171 Josephine was saving She still worked for the Main Line family e she had been the highly prized cook and ekeeper for more than twenty-five years. (She n work when she was seventeen.)

Mr. Billie" (Mrs. Morris's nickname for her and dates from their courting days) and Jo proud of the wide-screen television set in the g room, the dining-room suite in polished ogany with a glass-fronted cabinet for Jo's dishes. She was perhaps even prouder of the ning new refrigerator and range in her kitchen.

en in the early-morning hours of Easter Sat-, 1951, Josephine's younger sister, Amanda, unexpectedly after the birth of her ninth . The older children were staying in the is home while their mother was in the hos- A few hours after Josephine telephoned the from the hospital, George Morris called the en together and said simply, "Your mother d. From now on you live here."

ere had been no time to talk with Jo about hen he said, "You live here," he spoke on lse, thinking of the days just ahead. Because ildren almost never saw their father, Amanda been their security, the center of their lives. was no way to soften the news of her death, George Morris wanted to assure them at of a home and someone to care what hap- to them.

. Billie, Jo and "Pop" Paulhill held a rence the next day. The children's father, new, would not help. "He is the type of per- ho just doesn't care," Jo admits privately;

Pattie (lower bunk) and "Sweetie Pie" listen in while young Jo hears the little girls' prayers. Janett (right) still has trouble saying words plainly, hides her face when she makes a mistake.

"We can't give them much . . .
our food isn't fancy,
they have to wear
hand-me-downs.
But this is a happy house."

the Morrises never say anything to the children against their father "but you can't make them love him. I can't understand anybody not wanting that love they give ——"

The Morrises were the only relatives able to take the children and keep them together as a family. Donald, the oldest, was away in service in the Air Force. State authorities would see that the other eight, from Fanny Rebecca, not yet two days old, to Lawrence, fourteen, were placed in institutions or foster homes. The children would, of course, be separated. In addition to losing their mother and their home, they would lose each other. The older boys, fourteen, twelve and nine, were already having adolescent "growing pains," adjustment difficulties about which Amanda had been consulting Mr. Billie before her death. All of them, boys and girls, needed to belong. What would happen if all the order they had known were wiped out at once?

For Josephine, who had always been especially close to her younger sister and who loved Amanda's children dearly, there was no alternative. "There was nothing else to do," she says simply. But she admits she will never forget her wonder that Mr. Billie should agree, unhesitatingly, to give and do so much for children who were "not his people, but mine."

Mr. Paulhill, who has the family's sense of fun in full measure plus a stamina many younger men might envy, agreed to the Morrises' decision. From now on life for all of them would be totally different. CONTINUED ON PAGE 176

Only one Cleanser Bleaches Porcelains White as New... so easy, too!

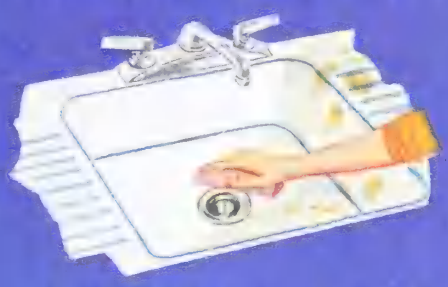
New! BAB-O WITH BLEACH



actually bleaches as it cleans!

SEEING IS BELIEVING! True . . . but you'll hardly believe your eyes when you see how quickly new Bab-O with Bleach gets your sinks and tubs brilliantly white and bright. Millions of tiny bleach bubbles of activated oxygen give Bab-O its amazing whitening power. Only new Bab-O bleaches as it cleans, yet costs no more than "half-way" cleansers.

COMPARISON PROVES! If your present cleanser doesn't bleach as it cleans, it's only doing half the job. Try new Bab-O with Bleach . . . see the difference! Get new Bab-O in the regular or giant economy size, today!

SAFE... for all fast colors, colored porcelains. Safe as a beauty soap for lovely hands.
And M-m-m . . . new Bab-O smells nice, too!

SAVES RUBS — SAVES SCRUBS...
BLEACHES STAINS FROM SINKS, TUBS

New Bab-O with Bleach bleaches out coffee, tea, fruit stains as no other cleanser can!

CUTS 4 TIMES MORE GREASE...
FASTER THAN ANY OTHER CLEANSER

Bab-O's new bleach "bubble-action" makes pots and pans shine. Try Bab-O with Bleach!

"Takes the hurry-hurry out of mealtimes"

"Haven't you often had to cook and stir a half-dozen things and tend the children, all at the same time? Well, with my new Club Aluminum utensils, everything cooks evenly; I never worry about scorching, and I've lots more time with my children. The store said that thick-cast Club Aluminum spreads the heat and prevents hot spots. All I know is that results are wonderful!"

Mrs. Frank C. Steinbruegge
2027 N. Druid Hills Rd., Atlanta, Ga.

For yourself or as gifts, see the complete Club Aluminum line at your favorite store. Also send for Free Recipe Folder No. LJ5

Cast to last a lifetime!

Club Aluminum

HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 14

Top cooks praise this new 3-package strip

Now! the yeast prize-winning cooks prefer

in NEW "THRIFTY THREE'S"

Now you can buy Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast in handier, thriftier 3-package strips. You'll find the new "Thrifty Three's" are more economical to buy and they're so much easier to store on your shelf.

You'll like the easy-to-use dry yeast inside each package, too. This is the yeast that prize-winning cooks prefer—Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. It always rises fast and keeps for months on your shelf. When you bake at home, use the best. Get Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast . . . now in handy new "Thrifty Three's."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 174

So it happened that for the Morrises there was nothing gradual about parenthood. With their ready-made family, they found that problems and concerns which many parents face one or two at a time, and over a period of years, "just fell in our laps all at once." In addition to the newborn baby, not yet home from the hospital, there were a two-year-old just beginning to feel independent; a five-year-old starting kindergarten; three children, seven, nine and eleven, in elementary school; a twelve-year-old just ready for junior high school; a fourteen-year-old who would enter high school within months; and a boy in service soon to be sent to Korea.

The decision was made in love, but neither Mr. Billie nor Aunt Jo underestimated the changes in their own lives this decision would bring. Financially they went back to pinching pennies. The house and furniture Mrs. Morris had taken such pride in would not stay the same now that the eight small rooms, ample for three people, were to be crowded with living. "At least put the dining-room furniture away, Jo—for a few years anyway," a cousin urged. But Mrs. Morris laughed and refused, saying, "They made more than one set."

Mrs. Morris would have to leave the Main Line household, whom she had served so long, and so happily, that they seemed to her a second family. The constant care of a new baby and a two-year-old would keep her on her feet many more hours, day and night, than she was used to.

Uncle Billie and Aunt Jo each worried secretly about the effect the new life would have on the other (and they still do), but both felt, deeply, that they had to try.

"The first year was tough," they admit. The children never went back to the house where they had lived with their mother. During those first weeks the new baby's crib was a market basket. Until the Morrises could get more beds, some of the children slept on pallets, with the front bedroom an improvised dormitory for the boys, the back bedroom for the girls. Mrs. Morris's first purchase was $60 worth of sheets and pillowcases. Until they could get chests to provide more drawer space, she used a large table in one of the bedrooms for the children's clothes. Each child went to his own pile of underthings and shirts or blouses. They ate meals in two shifts or, when the family did sit down to dinner together, in different rooms. The overflow from the dining room ate at the kitchen table.

ONE of the first projects was to have the long oversized table made for a corner of the kitchen (the dining room isn't large enough to hold it) because "we hated not being able to sit down together." Wall benches were covered in soft yellow plastic cloth to match the bright formica tabletop. Then a new heating system for the house, a freezer, an automatic washer, bunk beds and chests quickly reduced savings to the vanishing point.

But the Morrises were almost too busy to notice, certainly too busy to worry then. Though they had known the children since they were born, and the children—drawn by the loadstone attractions of television in the living room and Aunt Jo's cooking in the kitchen—had dropped in at the house on Gratz Street so often that it was like a second home, still the Morrises, now that they were undertaking twenty-four-hour-a-day parenthood, felt they were getting acquainted for the first time.

"I couldn't get used to socks and shoes a over the place. Every week somebody neede a new pair of shoes!" Mrs. Morris says. " couldn't figure out why they wore the knee out of their pants so fast. Turned out to b marble shooting."

With four in elementary school and two junior high, Mrs. Morris joined two P.T.A. (she belongs to three now), and she and Unc Billie began having their occasional talks wi the children's teachers. Luckily all the childre make good marks (or can!) and all of them, s far, like school and hate to miss more than day.

MRS. MORRIS is gratified that the children teachers agree with her on one point. "W can't give them much: our food isn't fanc they have to wear hand-me-downs; we can afford allowances. But this is a happy hous Our kids go off to school happy, and the teac ers say that's the most important thing."

With a new baby and Janett, not quite tw to look after, Aunt Jo found that the only w to work out the early-morning scramble getting six off to school was to establish a fo rules: about the order of precedence in the o bathroom; about who would help get brea fast; who would he get Victor ready f kindergarten. Th she saw that the ru were followed and the young ones g themselves off.

The two old girls have been valuable help fr the beginnin "Sweetie Pie" (s can't remember th anyone except h teachers has ev called her by h name, Adelaide) w just seven when h mother died, ev then showing gr skill in the kitch Today at eleven, s is the first down the morning, g breakfast for eve one, packs lunc for those who v need them. Josep ine (named for A Jo), three years ol than Sweetie Pie a the most const reader of the family, could turn her hand to a household job (except cooking, at fir Young Jo had had rheumatic fever when was seven and had to be watched to see t she didn't push herself too hard.

For the older children that first year v "tough" too. The boys, especially, found justment to a new household and new ru hard. Lawrence and John, in junior high sch were just beginning to feel independent. Ni year-old Butch (Clarence), the family's sta thinking up—and doing—the unexpected, going through his "rebellious" period w there was trouble about money, trouble ab running away, though he is naturally as af tionate as he is inventive.

The three boys didn't like having to permission when they went out (but the M rises, with so many on their minds, felt t had to know where the children were); t didn't like having to be in by a certain h each evening. For this problem, Mrs. Mc says, television has been a godsend. Except special occasions, the children are in, al them, by 8:30 every evening. (Philadelph new 10 P.M. curfew for teen-agers doe bother the Morrises.)

For the Morrises the days and week those first years as parents run togethe their memories. Getting the children enro in Sunday school; getting everyone clean spruce and off to church on Sundays. Get new glasses for Sweetie Pie and young Jo, ting the boys to keep dental appointme seeing John and Butch off on their first Scout hike, meeting new teachers as the dren moved from one grade to the next

CONTINUED ON PAGE 178

NEXT MONTH

Ten years ago, after a dance, a girl named Anne sent a bag of jelly beans to a West Point cadet named Pat. He sent her a funny letter and they fell in love. And then history caught the class of '44 in a maelstrom.

For Pat there was war in Europe—starvation and imprisonment, liberation and occupation—and then Korea. For Anne there were fearful waits and long moves and four babies. As the tenth anniversary of the end of World War II rolls around, Maj. Oliver B. Patton and his wife Anne review

VICTORY TEN YEARS AFTER

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the June JOURNAL

Now...

INSTANT OATMEAL

WITH NEW QUICK QUAKER OR MOTHER'S OATS

cooks creamy in 50-60 seconds

Something wonderful has happened to Quick Quaker Oats and to Quick Mother's Oats.

Now—in just moments you have fully cooked oatmeal. Smoother oatmeal. Creamier. With the same full flavor—the same bountiful nourishment—of oatmeal that used to take hours of cooking.

Yes, these New Quick oat flakes—cut in tiny pieces—are rolled to a new tissue thinness. They cook in just 50 to 60 seconds in boiling water.

So isn't it smart to eat a good hot oatmeal breakfast—when it's quick as coffee? New Quick Quaker Oats and New Quick Mother's Oats are in stores now. Look for the Yellow Ribbon on the label.

All the protein nourishment of old fashioned oatmeal is present in this new, quick product. It helps keep adults fit—not fat, because it is so high in protein.

Best cereal for growing children. High-protein Quaker or Mother's Oats helps children grow strong, healthy bodies. Gives them stamina they need for school and play.

Mother's Oats and Quaker Oats are exactly the same

QUAKER OATS

America's most popular cereal ... hot or cold

First Real Dust Mop Improvement in Fifty Years!

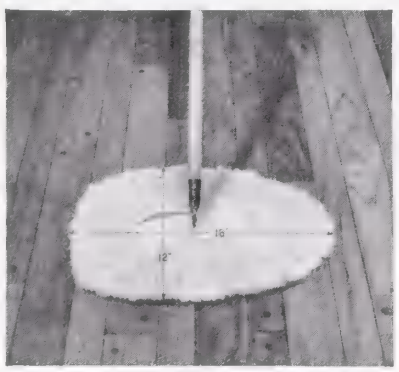
new O cedar

"Every-Which-Way"

NYLON DUST MOP

with the amazing

"MAGIC-ACTION" SWIVEL SOCKET



Takes the work out of dusting

Washes easily like your nylon stockings

Flick of the wrist and it goes around corners

Twist of the handle adjusts pad to dust 50% wider path

O-Cedar's sensational new "Every-Which-Way" Nylon Dust Mop adjusts to any position with no effort at all. It twists in and out of hard-to-dust places . . . steers around chair and table legs . . . glides under low, heavy furniture. The big 100% virgin Nylon pad creates an electrostatic action that picks up and holds more dust . . . it stays in the pad until you shake it free. Washes and dries quickly . . . remains soft and fluffy. Choice of white or blue Nylon, $3.95. In fine cotton yarn, $2.59. Ask for the mop that goes "every-which-way."

Available where you buy cleaning supplies

O-CEDAR CORP'N
Chicago, Illinois—Subsidiary of AMERICAN-MARIETTA COMPANY
O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd., Stratford, Ontario

A New O-Cedar Product Worth $1.79

FIRST TIME AVAILABLE!

FREE Nylon Dust Mit

with purchase of ANY O-Cedar Dust Mop

Not yet on the market, this unique, easy-to-wash, long-wearing Dust Mit with all the advantages of Nylon, lets you zip through furniture dusting like magic. As proof of purchase just send a paid receipt or the plastic cover bag from any model O-Cedar Dust Mop you buy (it folds easily into an envelope) together with this coupon and 10¢ to cover mailing to: Betty Woods, O-Cedar Home Service Institute, P. O. Box 366, Park Ridge, Illinois. You'll receive your Nylon Dust Mit by return mail.

(Offer good in U.S.A. only, expires August 31, 1955)

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 176

ranging for dancing lessons (from a friend nearby) for the older girls. Urging Janett to speak instead of pointing at everything she wanted, watching eagerly for Fanny's first tooth (Uncle Billie, impatient as any new father, decided in despair that Fanny would be walking long before she had a single tooth).

Aunt Jo remembers her fright the day the older boys were sliding down the banisters and one played "dead." One minute the house had been shaking with the boys' uproar, the next minute Butch lay limp and still on the floor at the foot of the stairs. Aunt Jo says her heart nearly stopped, until he opened his eyes and grinned up at her.

And the fun. From the beginning fun has outweighed all the problems and concerns at the Morrises' house. The excitement when Donald, stationed in Texas, got an unexpected four-day leave and, as a member of the Air Force, hitchhiked by plane all the way to Phil..delphia to see the family—how they ate! "Turkey, candied sweets, peas, turnips, cranberries, good brown tasty gravy . . . all nine ate till they were filled to the brim!" Uncle Billie remembers. Later they all went to the airport to see Donald off and he put on his parachute outside the plane so his family could see.

There was the day young Josephine, who was taking home economics, brought home the first sample of her cooking, a biscuit. It was so good Aunt Jo let her make biscuits for the whole family for supper, and while everyone stood around watching, Josephine proudly set her book before her, got out all the materials she needed, and set to work. The biscuits, everyone agreed, were the best they'd eaten.

There was the afternoon Janett suddenly said "Milk!" clearly and distinctly, and when Aunt Jo, too delighted to speak, gave her milk, Janett said, "Thank you." Uncle Billie, teasing, says she hasn't stopped talking since. She still gets so excited and her words come so fast that outsiders sometimes don't understand a word. But her family can interpret everything.

DONALD came home again at Thanksgiving, his last visit before going to Korea, and Fanny crawled for the first time (but still had not a tooth!) while Donald was home. Butch, who had planned for years to be a prize fighter, suddenly gave up the idea. He and Uncle Billie had been studying fights on television, and Butch had been enrolled with the Police Athletic League. A few bouts with boys his own age, a few falls, and he changed his mind.

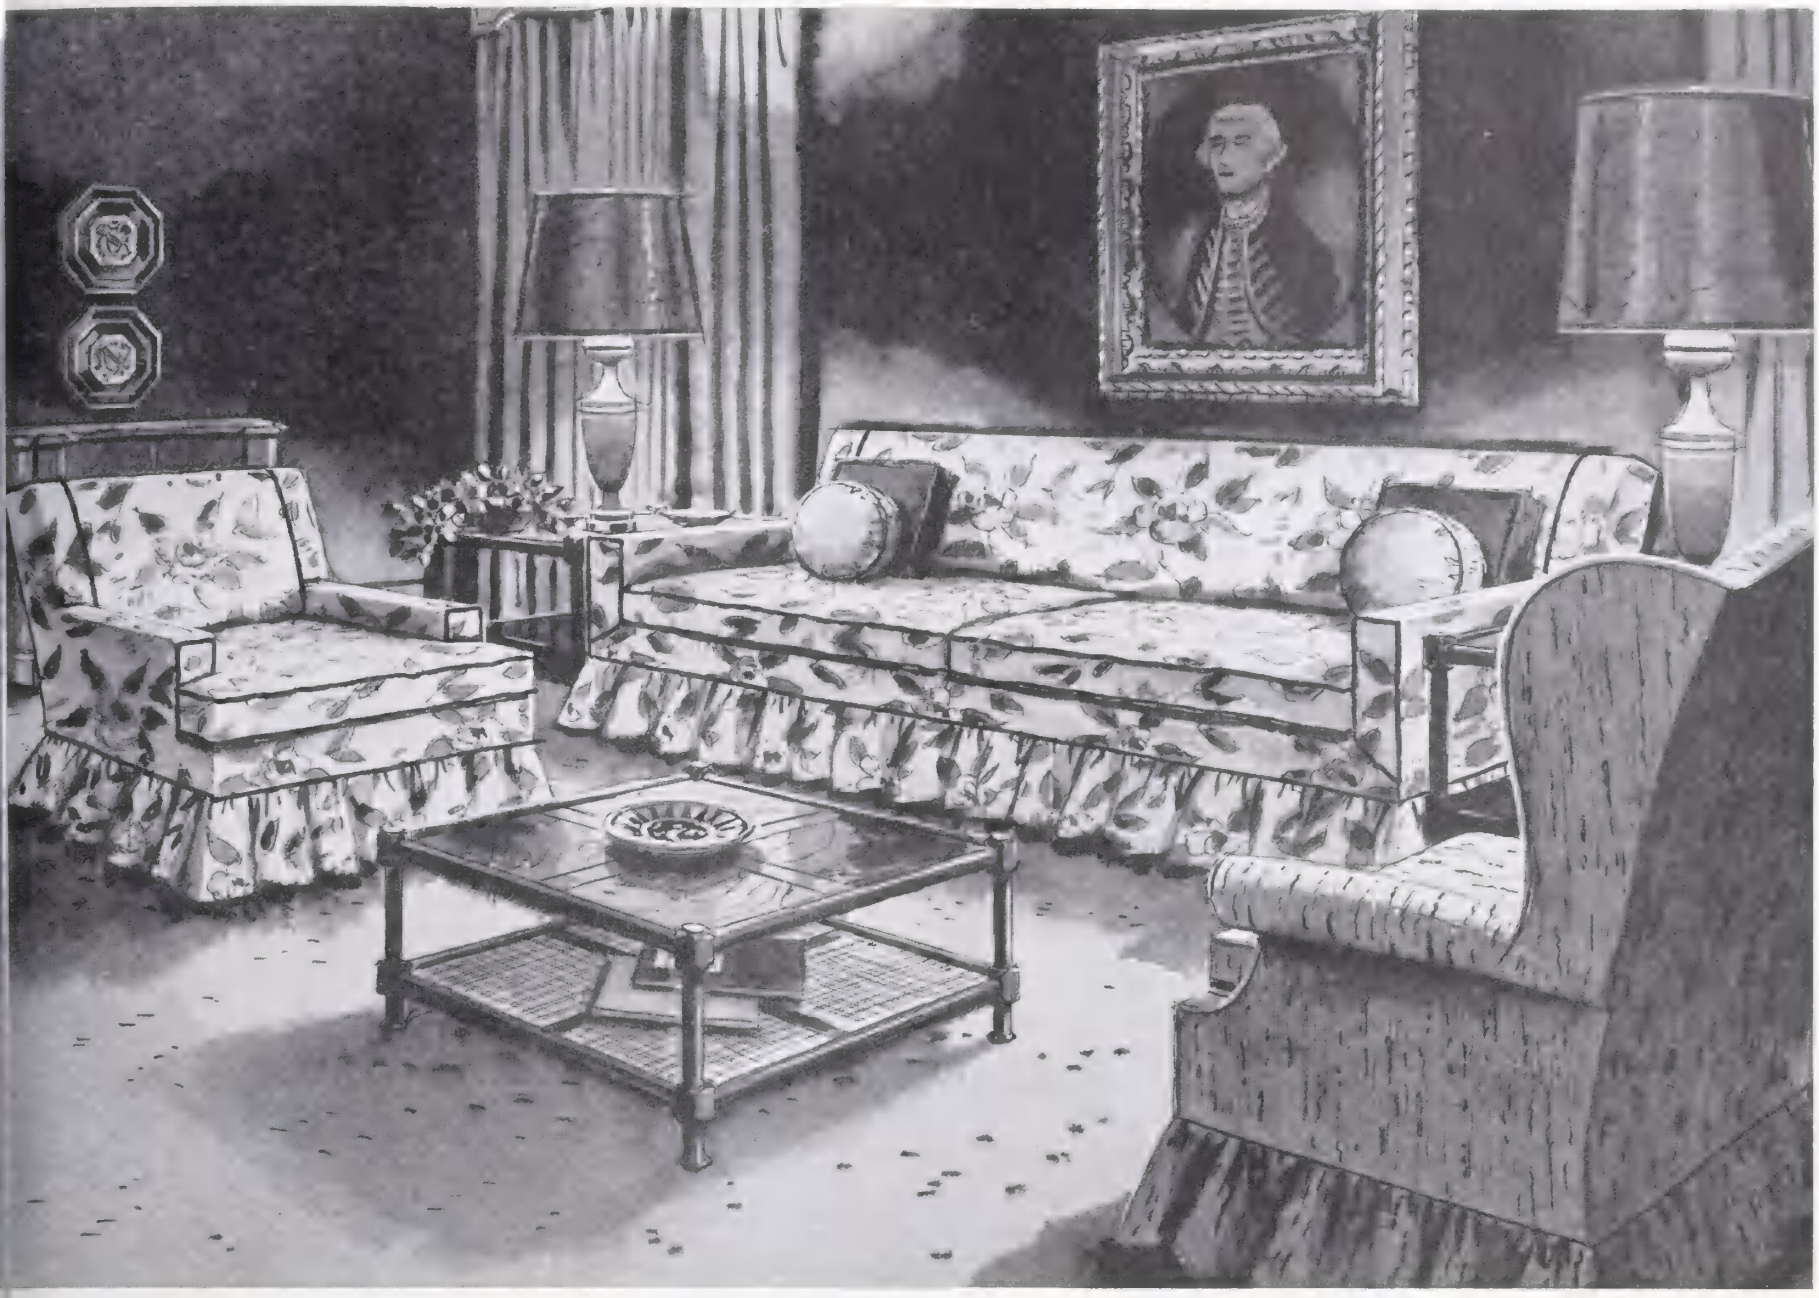
There was the day Josephine was graduated from elementary school in the morning and Lawrence from junior high school that same afternoon. Uncle Billie and Aunt Jo went to both ceremonies, had a proud day watching "our kids" march up the aisle. Josephine wa winning so many honors and offices in schoo that Uncle Billie warned he was "watching he head to be sure it didn't get too large for he hats." Lawrence took his interest in sport into high school and soon was playing footbal and basketball. Uncle Billie and Aunt Jo wer in the audience at night basketball games a often as possible. "That boy can run back wards just as well—and maybe even faster— as he can forwards!"

When Lawrence, in his junior year, won Philadelphia Union League Boys Award fc good citizenship (he was one of 50 Negroe among 250 boys in the greater metropolita area honored for good sportsmanship and cit zenship), the whole neighborhood was a proud as the Morrises.

SIX weeks before Fanny's first birthda Janett and the baby both came down wit measles—Aunt Jo's first experience with illne in her large family. Janett was soon well, ar fretful, but Fanny developed an ear infectio and an aftermath of complications which se her fever shooting up; she had to be rushed the hospital at four in the morning. She w kept there ten days, and the Morrises had t most anxious time they'd known yet.

Two weeks after she came home from t hospital Fanny walked for the first time. "V had ice cream, and she loves it," Mrs. Mor says, her eyes shining as she remembers. "S walked right to me!"

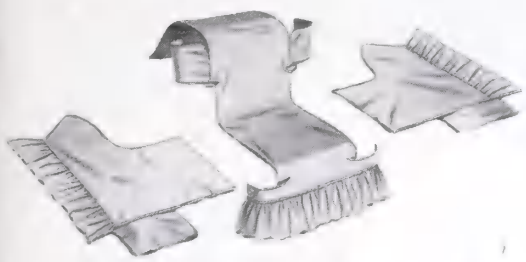
With every memory shared the new fam has grown closer. As each Thanksgiving a Christmas finds the family together, the ch dren happy and growing, the Morrises gi added thanks—and happily buy a larger t key (32 pounds last Christmas). Though th have not been together long, as family life counted, the change in the children is asto ishing—for these have been the "growi years." "When they first came," Uncle Bi points out, "we could look down on all their heads except Donald's. Now Lawre and John tower above us, and Josephi Butch and Pattie can all look us in the ey He says this with an air of discovery, but Aunt Jo, in charge of the clothing proble the children's growth is no surprise.



Pattie, newest addition to the family, ca to the Morrises a year ago, when she was th teen. Daughter of Mrs. Morris's brot Collis, Pattie was just a month old when mother ran away. Her father placed the ch first with one family, then another, in Bro lyn and in the Bronx, and she spent most of

CONTINUED ON PAGE 180

HOW THE MORRISES SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH



The state allows Mr. and Mrs. Morris $189.80 a month toward the care of their foster children. With Mr. Morris's salary ($95 a week) their monthly income is approximately $598. The Morrises own their own home and, with so many dependents, pay no income tax, but money is still short. Out of the $40 left unallotted each month come all the unpredictable expenses—clothing for all the children (and Mrs. Morris gratefully makes use of friends' gifts) plus household and furnishing supplies and emergency maintenance bills (there is always a repair of some kind needed, particularly for plumbing—that one-bathroom problem). The Morrises estimate other monthly bills as follows:

Food and milk (about $70 a week)	$300.00	Contributions to charities	5.00
Gas and electricity	14.00	Installments (on bunk beds, freezer, oil burner)	28.10
Fuel (average over year)	22.00	Car (including $50 payment)	90.00
Phone	12.00	School transportation and supplies and school milk for Janett	15.00
Property tax ($94 a year)	7.90	Cleaning, shoe repair	20.00
Life insurance ($400 each on Mr. and Mrs. Morris)	6.00	Laundry (sheets and cases only)	7.00
Medicine and supplies (the state pays the children's medical and dental bills, except Pattie's)	10.00	Newspapers	2.00
Recreation for all children	10.00	Cigarettes for Mr. Morris	4.00
Church	5.00	Total	$558.00

Unique Customagic method assures custom slipcover fit!

The secret of the Customagic fit is in the prefabricated parts that are custom-adjustable. Special screw pin fasteners hold each part securely in place.

Never again pay custom-made prices for custom slipcovers. Virtually any chair or sofa — styles that were impossible to fit with ready-made slipcovers — can now be fitted with the new Customagic slipcovers. Fitted smoothly, trimly, tautly, like the finest custom-made. You simply fasten Customagic pre-fabricated parts that are custom-adjustable! No forcing the furniture to fit the slipcover — each Customagic part shapes itself to the exact contour of your chair or sofa. No other slipcover in the world is like Customagic!

The beautiful Customagic fit is deservingly enhanced by fabrics in the costly custom cover class, handsome Bark or Troll cloth in truly distinctive textures, traditional and contemporary prints and solid colors in exclusive decorator shades. See the Customagic method demonstrated at your local store today. You'll be amazed!

	For chairs	For sofas
IN TROLL CLOTH	$12.98	$24.98
IN BARK CLOTH	$14.98	$27.98

Slightly higher West of the Rockies

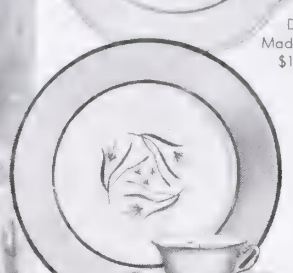
UPHOLSTERY COVERS TOO, BY THE CUSTOMAGIC METHOD! Don't fail to see the remarkable new Customagic Upholstery Covers . . . ready-to-put-on . . . no cutting, no sewing, no waiting . . . and no custom prices!

FOR CHAIRS—$14.98 FOR SOFAS—$27.98

Customagic®

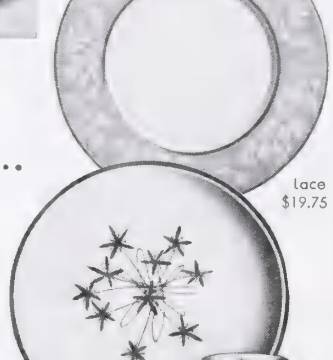
READY-TO-PUT-ON

SLIPCOVERS



AND UPHOLSTERY COVERS

THE COMFY MANUFACTURING CO., 295 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 16



Dolly Madison $17.75

New! Flair $19.75

Lace $19.75

New! Constellation $18.75

the beautiful things...

like real love, wear so well there is no end to what they do for you. Castleton China has this long-giving grace ... rewarding you forever for your choice.
Fine jewelers and department stores have it in a superb range of patterns. Ask about the available purchase plans tailored to fit your budget.

Write Jane Castle for pattern folio and booklet: "What you should know about Castleton Fine China," 25 cents—and, for brides-to-be, Castleton's "Wedding Etiquette"—also 25 cents. Please specify booklet desired. Castleton China, Inc., New Castle 19, Pa.

CASTLETON China

Prices are for 5-piece place settings. Also available piece-by-piece.

Top doubles as a serving tray!

COSCO® TRAY CART

• Enjoy pleasanter parties and happier homemaking with this Cosco Tray Cart. An extra work surface, an extra storage unit, a handsome serving cart ... in one! 29½" high, 16½" x 23½". Three-inch casters. Chromium or black legs. COSCOAT wood-grain finish in four colors. Get yours in time for spring housecleaning!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Buy with Confidence THIS IS A GENUINE COSCO PRODUCT Famous for Quality and Value

COPYRIGHT 1955

Model 8-W $14.95*

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • COLUMBUS, INDIANA
COSCO Metal Household Furniture

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 178

holidays with the Morrises and her cousins. One day last April she called Aunt Jo long distance to ask if she could come stay with them. "We had been worried about her for some time," Mrs. Morris explains. Again the Morrises didn't hesitate. Pattie made the train trip from New York to Philadelphia alone the next day, a Saturday; she was enrolled in junior high school and went to her first classes, with Butch and Josephine, on Monday.

Pattie has had adjustment problems too—Uncle Billie had to be firm about strong language until the habit was finally broken—but she is gradually fitting into her cousins' way of life, and there is no quicker way to bring her into line than to say she can't stay if she won't do her part. Fortunately the Morrises, who hate threats, almost never have to say it any more.

Though there have been grumbling and some of the shirking expected of any children, the Morrises feel that their nine have co-operated to an amazing extent. The children know how much it means to be together. The older ones, especially, understand from acquaintances at school that even having to tell where you are going and having to be in by a certain time is better than having no one to care whether you come home or not. Listening to Fanny and Janett arguing about who's eating the most at dinner, or to Victor bragging about his spelling lesson, may be tiresome at times, but it's better than living in a house where people never sit down to a meal together from one year to the next. They know kids who belong to families like that too.

Part of the accord, too, comes from the children's background. Thanks to Amanda, they came to the Morrises with the habit of love and of being a family, and with the habit of work. Amanda had kept them together, and happy, on even less means than the Morrises have. But "somehow she always managed a party for each birthday," Mr. Morris remembers. "They weren't much, just cake and a churn of ice cream—but every kid in the neighborhood was invited. Amanda's place was known to be a welcome house." Before leaving for the hospital that last time she had already bought little candy chickens for her children's Easter. Wrapped in such love, the children had worked as a matter of course to help their mother. Now they help the Morrises and grandpop.

The house on North Gratz Street doesn't really come alive until the children start arriving home from school in the afternoon.

After the morning rush to get everyone off to work and school, Uncle Billie, last to leave, kisses his two housekeepers, Aunt Jo and Fanny, good-by—and an unnatural quiet falls. Lunch is quiet too. Only Sweetie Pie, Victor and Janett come home at noon, and Aunt Jo catches up on all their interests then. (Later they may be shouted down by the older ones.)

LAWRENCE and John get home from high school between 2:30 and 3:00. The junior-high contingent—Josephine, Pattie and Butch—comes soon after, and Sweetie Pie and Victor a half hour later still. The pile of coats and scarves, caps and mittens grows higher and higher on the narrow hall table, and voices rise high, too, with the excitement of being free of classrooms.

But there is an order of events under all the noise and fun. First comes the change from school clothes to jeans or old slacks and skirts. Then to the kitchen for food—school is the hungriest work in the world! Aunt Jo, picking up the news of the day from each arrival, automatically says every minutes or so, "No cooking back th (The kitchen would be impossibl enter by dinnertime if all the would-be burger and hot-dog chefs were given fre after school; they are limited to the t and two to three loaves of bread, plus rolls of bologna, liverwurst and cheese s in the refrigerator for such emergencies.

BACK at the long kitchen table where sprinkling the early-morning load of cl Aunt Jo has part of her mind on the child chores to come. Victor didn't clean the tub this morning, or if he did, the effect noticeable. He'll have to go over it again he'll want to get it done before Hop Cassidy time. Butch still has the stairs t Pattie can get the little girls dressed after naps and then help Sweetie Pie with d The sprinkled clothes are sorted into pil John and Josephine, who'll be busy at th ironing boards in the basement for an or so.

John, taking a pile of tightly rolled s mutters, "Can't this floor get dirty!" and Jo smiles. Keeping the kitchen floor scr is another of John's after-school duties.

Victor comes i takes a World sits down across Aunt Jo at the k table and starts lo for words he's le to spell. The s World Books is k a white cabinet especially for them the kitchen table doubles for hom sessions in the eve Uncle Billie laughs the World Book other early purcha got them so I coul in the house!" found that nine c children who thi knows everythin fill every waking n with questions.

The children their work with Janett, awake fro nap, wanders do sit on the basemen and talk to Jos while she irons. U someone has turn television and the comes clearly through the basement c Young Jo nods her head in time to the and listens with half an ear to Janett a favorite story of Goldilocks.

Janett lives every minute of the story telling, and now her bright brown eyes tense and her voice deep for Papa Bear run and she run . . ." and the little feet and down in panic on the steps. "He's a man, a mean man, Gran'pa Bear—he eat her all up, right?"

Upstairs Aunt Jo checks the stew Sweetie Pie and Pattie are making for

"Can I go to the dance after school t row?" Pattie asks, and Aunt Jo says Pattie has the quarter fee saved. ("Pattie dance all day and all night if she h chance," Mrs. Morris says. The junio school has lunch-hour dances twice a and a two-hour afternoon dance on F Pattie rarely misses one.)

When Uncle Billie comes home a litt six, chores and homework are nearly television cowboys are riding hard in t ing room, and dinner ready to go on the George Morris was born on a farm in land and worked his way through Ha Institute in Hampton, Virginia. Wh came to Philadelphia with his machinis tificate he couldn't get a job without a card and he couldn't join a union wit job. So he took the first work he coul cleaning windows. Window cleaners an tors were not organized in the early tw "We had a terrible trade—some drunks with spirits broken, all looked down He and a friend decided to change this p and the two men worked for twenty

A CURIOUS SONG

By ELIZABETH GRAHAM

I have forgotten you at last!
I have forgotten how you walk
With a get-there step, and how Laughter obeys you . . . do you talk

All in a rush when joy rides high?
I have forgotten. And if your eyes
Are devil-song blue, the fact
Just now escapes me; memory-wise,

I cannot find you anywhere.
Oh, and I revel in this view,
And I am astonished that my heart
Still goes on feeling torn in two.

etimes with nothing to eat but bean soup with no enthusiasm to count on except own. To make himself more effective, Morris took special courses in writing and king. Today he is business agent of the dow Cleaners and Maintenance Union, l 125, AFL. He helps with all first-level ration. He is a member or officer of erous committees and organizations for ation, labor, and racial understanding. As vice-president of Philadelphia's NAACP inaugurating a new educational and mem- hip campaign. Though weekday nights often taken up by meetings, he tries to the weekends for the family and rarely es the little talk with Aunt Jo over a last of coffee before they go to bed. Then they pare notes, and Uncle Billie catches up is wife's and children's activities.

strong right arm to the Morrises in rais- heir ready-made family is Josephine's fa- Matt Paulhill. On the mantel in the living n, next to a framed photograph of Donald s Air Force uniform, stands a small snap- of "Grandpop's" mother, who was a in Georgia. Her hair is snow-white, but eyes are snapping, her face strong and -humored. Grandpop's amazing stamina come from her. He can do a buck-and- or modern jitterbug (to show the kids have nothing on him). He can outwalk body else in the family. He often walks iladelphia's central shopping district and , about five miles, and when Jo protests "That little walk! . . . You can't learn ridin', you know," he adds. "You find lot more things walkin'!"

delights in teasing and tries to fool the y with his straight face, but his eyes shine fun. Grandpop is also a power in the hold. Smaller now than any of the boys t Victor, he can still, on the rare occa- when he decides the kids have gone too in a battle with any of them. The family emembers with delight and awe the ing when John and Butch, in the bath- , wouldn't come out, thus delaying the family schedule. The uproar reached pop in the front bedroom. He pays lit- ention to the ordinary chaos of family ing on around, but he doesn't like "dis- ice," and decided this was one. He got loses, the strap (called Moses "because t so much influence!"), jerked the bath- door so hard the hinges nearly came off another minute had both boys out and run.

ndpop moved his five children from ome in a small town in Georgia to Phil- ia when Josephine, the middle daugh- as seventeen. She had finished one year h school and began working at once. a skillful, creative cook, and is teaching girls to be the same. She likes to experi- with new ways to freeze foods, likes to everal cakes at once (birthdays are still occasions, and at the Morrises there thdays almost every month!), puts the nes away for future use.

skill in preparing good food at low cost en invaluable, now that there are so nouths to feed on a limited budget. She ies in a sixteen-inch piepan. The family dozen eggs a week, six to seven loaves d daily (that after-school snack!). She verything in quantity: potatoes by the meat in bulk (to go into the freezer), r dishwashing in 25-pound boxes.

ouse needs new paper and paint out. Chairs have been broken, the springs gave completely (Uncle Billie is lly proud of the good job Butch did in him board up the bottom of the couch it together), stair treads have worn d been replaced. The family is on its et of linoleum rugs. But they feel lucky ey already had the television set, the ood refrigerator and range. "I wouldn't to buy such pieces now," Mrs. Morris e tries to keep installment buying to a m, hates "having bills hanging over d."

inancial strain has been great. But the s regularly take boxes of the children's vn clothes to people in real need— rris hears the names through one or of the organizations he works with. The Morrises sometimes worry that they cannot save a penny, but they are deeply thankful that they have been able to keep food on the table, clothes and shoes in the closets for their children.

It has been hard, "but if it had been even harder, we would still do it." They don't think in terms of reward, but they remember when Victor says proudly, "Me 'n' Uncle Billie are the best whistlers in this house," puts two fingers in his mouth and lets out a shrill blast to prove it; when Sweetie Pie asked Uncle Billie to give a talk at her club on parliamentary procedure; when Josephine asks Aunt Jo, "Are there any more clothes sprinkled?"; when Butch, in the hospital briefly for a finger injured in basketball, called Aunt Jo three times in one day just to see how things were going at home; when Mr. Morris, after a late meeting, finds Fanny in bed with Aunt Jo because "I have to watch mommy so won't nobody come and get her!" The Morrises say their richest years began when their savings disappeared.

They believe deeply that they are not alone and could not have succeeded alone in their project. "I never remember going to bed without praying," Mrs. Morris says, "and I have the children thank God every night for all the wonderful things He has given us." "Every successful year for our children is a blessing from God," Mr. Morris wrote after their second Christmas together.

Four days after they had made the decision to take the children Mrs. Morris, putting away Amanda's personal things, looked in her sister's Bible and found a letter she had not dreamed existed; Amanda had not even hinted at her private fear.

"My Sister Josephine please take my children and do all you can for them." Tucked in beside the letter were three dollar bills, all that Amanda had. "I prayed to God on my knees," Mrs. Morris says simply, "to show us how to keep the children." END

Wherever you dwell on a farm in a dell or on a lone rock in the seas—home is cozy and bright and the housekeeping's light with Those Heavenly Carpets by Lees.

...those heavenly carpets by LEES

Home means more with carpet on the floor.
Any home's a haven with safe, soft, colorful Lees Carpets underfoot.
They add a lot to family life and make housework a breeze.
You can buy Lees today and enjoy them while you pay.
A few dimes a day will do it.
Choose yours now from the new Lees Selector at your dealer.
See how simple it is to start living on Lees.

JAMES LEES AND SONS COMPANY, BRIDGEPORT, PENNA. MAKERS OF QUALITY CARPETS AND RUGS

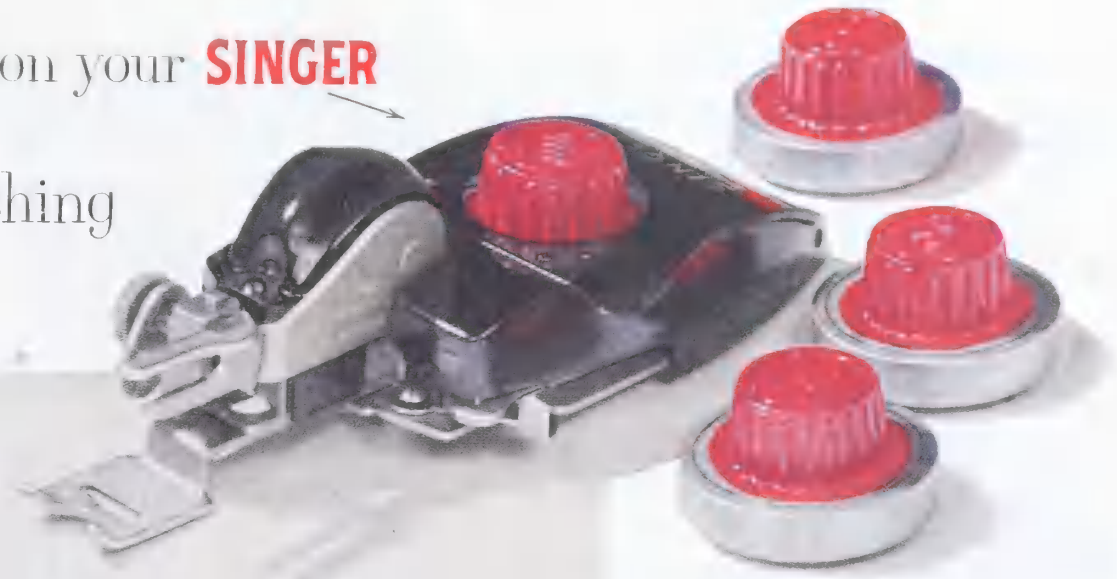
PHOTOS BY FOWLER

A pleasant, sunny room for casual living brings outdoor colors and textures inside. Shades of green and blue combine with neutral colors for a cool yet inviting look.

Breezeway into Livingroom

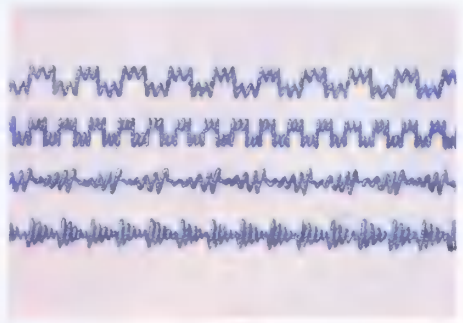
Dining furniture is weather resistant, can be taken outdoors. Window is pass-through to kitchen.

By CYNTHIA McADOO WHEATLAND



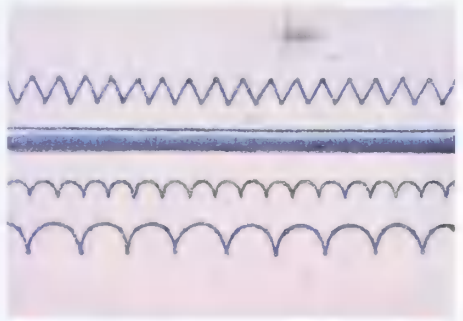
More and more the breezeway is growing up with the family. All over the country the low, ground-hugging houses are prevalent; the idea of outdoor living, eating and entertaining is enjoying a great vogue. A breezeway begins its life as an open porch; later it may become semi-closed-in; still later when a growing family needs more space it may be turned into an extra room. Here you see the breezeway in its adult phase, and a versatile room it is too. The two long walls are of whitened plywood paneling. The jalousie windows at either end bring in sun and sky by day, are cozily curtained in a beige, open-weave casement at night; these also provide excellent light control.

Ease of living is the keynote, ease of upkeep a joy to the homemaker. Plenty of guests can congregate and listen to music (the tile-topped cabinets store radio-phonograph equipment, records), or dine indoors or out. Spongeable surfaces are the laminated plastic dining-table top; coffee table covered in self-adhesive material that imitates marble; ceramic tile topping on the wall-to-wall cabinets. Floor is green cement, a pretty background for the woven hemp rug, a complement to the grooved paneling. Sofa-cushion covers are of linen in a big, bold plaid in sea shades.



Here's a maximum of comfort, a functional plan that makes this room convenient, casual and easy to care for.

Put this on your SINGER



...and do decorative stitching automatically!

Fancy stitches. Arrowheads, dominoes—fascinating designs! The Automatic Zigzagger makes them as simple to do as straight sewing. Lovely for borders, trim monograms, decorating children's clothes and table linens.

Finishing stitches. Zigzag, blind-stitch—a whole variety! So useful for expert mending, appliquéing, overcasting seams, hemming. Do them all automatically—on your SINGER* Sewing Machine—with the amazing new Zigzagger!

It's the astounding new AUTOMATIC ZIGZAGGER!

WONDER of wonders! Now SINGER brings you an invention that lets a straight-stitching SINGER form like an automatic zigzag machine.

's the astounding new Automatic Zigzagger. Fits Slant-Needle*—and most Straight-Needle GER models, cabinet or portable.

oes on in a jiffy. Comes with a set of "Stitch erns," each marked with the design it produces. ns out literally dozens of decorative stitch varias—from arrowheads to zigzagging—automatically.

e the Automatic Zigzagger . . . exclusive, patented . . . available only at your SINGER SEWING CENTER, listed in the phone book under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

Discover how you can enjoy automatic zigzag sewing . . . not only with the fabulous SINGER Automatic Machine . . . but now with a variety of Straight or Slant-Needle models and this new Zigzagger.

Only at SINGER...Only $14.95

* SINGER SEWING CENTERS

*A Trade-Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. Copyright, U. S. A., 1955, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries

Best for Mother's rest...a Stratolounger

...covered in Armor-Weight Elast

Boltaflex

READING

RELAXING

RECLINING

Her favorite chair for a moment's rest or the entire evening! The amazing Stratolounger lets her read, rest or recline in wonderful, healthful comfort . . . because it provides ideal support of the entire body in every position. Try it—at your nearest dealer listed on the opposite page.

The ARMOR-WEIGHT ELASTIC BOLTAFLEX upholstery adds an extra measure of comfort for Mother. The comfort of knowing that a damp cloth will easily wash away dirt and grime and greasy spots —plus the comforting thought that this rich leather-like finish won't scuff, peel, crack or fade.

Then add the wonderfully soft, comfortable "feel" of this truly luxurious upholstery—and you'll have the complete picture why it's "best for Mother's rest"!

There are many beautiful fabric-like Boltaflex patterns, too—also in the very latest decorator colors. When you buy—be sure it's Boltaflex.

BOLTA PRODUCTS · Lawrence, Mass.

Division of The General Tire & Rubber Co.

See STRATOLOUNGER at the authorized dealers listed below:

ALABAMA
rmingham — Hood-McPherson Furn. Co.
rmingham — Loveman's rmingham — Rhodes-Carroll Furn. Co. rmingham — Sokol Furn. Co.
ssden — Rhodes Furn. Co. ntsville — Mason's bile — Rhodes Furn. Co.
ntgomery — Montgomery Fair ntgomery — Rhodes Furn. Co.
acauga — Howard-Parker Furn. Co.
caloosa — Sokol's

ARIZONA
a Grande — Jones Furn. Co.
ndale — Atkinson Furn. Co. brook — Beck Bros.
sa — Noll's Furn.
enix — Barrows Furn. Co.
enix — Quality Furn. Co. son — Barrows Furn. Co. son — Dorson Furn. Co.

ARKANSAS
ton — Newbill Sales Co.
theville — C. M. Smart Furn. Inc.
orado — McWilliams Hdw. & Furn. Co.
Springs — Bennett Furn. Co. e Rock — Gus Blass Co.
arkana — Dillard's

CALIFORNIA
Butler Bros. Stores
ersfield — Fedway Stores ersfield — Davis Furn. Co.
eley — John Breuner Co.
a Park — Grand Ave. Furn. ink — Thrifty Furn. Co.
ink — Rex Furn. Co.
— Clovis Furn. Co.
a — Baker & Stanton
a — The White House Furn.
eld — Wilkerson's Furn.
ragg. Ft. Bragg Furn. Mart
— Chicago Furn. Co.
— Fink Furniture Co.
— Josephine Furn. Co.
— Pacific Furn. Co.
— Sun Maid Furn. Co.
rd — Block Furn. Co. rd — Lustig's ngeles — Barker Bros.
ngeles — Broadway Dept. Co.
ngeles — Central Furn. Co.
ngeles — Lamson & Gilbert
ngeles — May Co.
ngeles — More Furn. & Hdwe.
ngeles — Patnor, Inc.
ngeles — Wm. E. Phillips Co.
a — Walters Furn. Co.
d — Saunder's Furn. Co.
Sacramento — Kincaid Furn. Co.
id — John Breuner Co.
id — Jackson Furn. Co. d — Kahn's — Factory Furn. Outlet
ma City — Panorama Furn.
a — Fedway Stores
a — Thomas Furn. Co. lo Beach — Redondo Furn.
od City — General Furn. Co.
ond — John Breuner Co.
iento — John Breuner Co.
iento — Hamilton Furn. Co.
iento — Wm. Wilson Furn. ncisco — Lachman Bros.
ncisco — Macy's ncisco — Geo. E. Peterson & Sons ncisco — Sterling Furn. ncisco — Union Furn. Co.
e — L. Lion & Sons Co.
Monica — McMahan Furn. ego — Modern Furn. ego — Nanco, Inc.
n — John Breuner Co.
— John Breuner Co.
— Staats & Bell
— Vernon Sales
— Whittier Sales

COLORADO
— Blackmarr's
— American Furn. Co.
— New York Furn. Co.
od — Graham Furn. Co. ns — Ace Furn.
nt — Chlanda Harris Furn.
ista — Lockhart's — Gornick Furn.

CONNECTICUT ort
eland Dry Goods Co., Inc.
tain
hn A. Andrews Co., Inc.
tain — Tinty's Furn. Store
ven — Shartenberg's, Inc.
ury
on, Mintie & Abbott, Inc.

DELAWARE
nton — H. Feinberg Furn.
Wilmington — Peter Feinberg Co.
Wilmington — Miller Bros.
Wilmington — Wayside Furn. Co.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
Washington, D.C. — Baylor Furn.
Washington, D.C. — Colony House
Washington, D.C. — Curtis Bros.
Washington, D.C. — The Hecht Co.
Washington, D.C. — House & Hermann
Washington, D.C. — Lansburgh's
Washington, D.C. — Malcolm Scates
Washington, D.C. — Wm. Miller Furn. Co.
Washington, D.C. — P. J. Nee Co.
Washington, D.C. — Woodward & Lothrop

FLORIDA
Daytona Beach — Daytona Furn. Whse.
Jacksonville — Pierce-Wail Furn.
Jacksonville — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Miami — Allapattah Furn. Ex.
Miami — Helmly's Furn. Dept. Store
Miami — Modernage Furn. Co.
Miami — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Miami — Southern Furn. Co.
North Miami — Charlie's Wayside Furn.
Pensacola — Rhodes Furn. Co.
St. Petersburg — Lester Bros.
Tampa — Maas Bros.

GEORGIA
Atlanta — Davison-Paxon Co.
Atlanta — Rich's Inc.
Atlanta — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Macon — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Savannah — Levy's of Savannah

IDAHO
Boise — Carl Miller Furn. Co.
Caldwell — Peckham's Furn. Co.
Moscow — Mac's Furn. & Appl.
Soda Springs — C. M. Parsons Furn. Co.
Twin Falls — Claude Brown Music & Furn.

ILLINOIS
Aurora — Leath & Co.
Belvidere — Leath & Co.
Bloomington — Leath & Co.
Champaign — Reliable Furn. Co.
Champaign — Robeson's
Charleston — Witmer Furn.
Chicago — Carson Pirie Scott & Co.
Chicago — The Fair Store
Chicago — L. Fish Furn. Co.
Chicago — Fried's Furn.
Chicago — Libby Furn. & Appl. Co.
Chicago — Mandel Bros.
Chicago — Pritikin Furn. Co.
Chicago — Rau Store Corp.
Chicago — Rusnak's
Chicago — Edw. J. Weber Furn. Co.
Chicago — Wieboldt Stores, Inc.
Chicago — Wolf Furn. Co.
Cicero — Ruzicka Furn. Co.
Danville — Leath & Co.
Danville — Penry Furn. Co.
Decatur — Arthur's Furn.
Decatur — Leath & Co.
De Kalb — Skorberg Furn.
Dixon — Ames Furn.
Elgin — Leath & Co.
Freeport — Gugger & Le Baron
Freeport — Leath & Co.
Galesburg — Doyle-Gordon, Inc.
Galesburg — Leath & Co.
Joliet — Leath & Co.
Kankakee — Turk Furn. Co.
Kewanee — City Furn. & Rug Co.
La Salle — Tri-City Hdwe & Furn.
Marion — Cox Hdwe & Furn.
Mattoon — Paul Harris Furn. Co.
Maywood — Maywood Furn. Co.
Moline — Kay Furn.
Moline — Leath & Co.
Murphysboro — S & K Furn.
Oak Park — Town & Country Furn. Co.
Paris — Witmer Furn.
Peoria — Adams Fashion Furn.
Peoria — Jay's, Inc.
Peoria — Prospect Furn. Mart
Princeton — Larson Furn. House
Quincy — Roy Bennett, Ltd.
Rockford — Car-Pet Line Store
Rockford — Leath & Co.
Rockford — Rockford Standard Furn. Co.
Springfield — Leath & Co.
Sterling — George Furn. Co.
Sterling — Leath & Co.
Streator — Ritchie Furn. Co.

INDIANA
Anderson — Leath & Co.
Anderson — McDonald Furn. Co.
Argos — Crabb Furn. of Argos
Attica — R. A. DeSutter Furn.
Aurora — The Green & Schwier Co.
Clinton — Osmon Bros. Furn.
Columbus — Goodman-Jester, Inc.
Connersville — Furn. Trading Post
Crawfordsville — Schloot Furn. Co.
Elwood — Taff & Baker Furn.
Fortville — The Golden Rule Furn.
Franklin — Goodman-Jester, Inc.
Gary — Hurwich & Haller
Goshen — Buck Newman Furn.
Greenfield — Bradley Hall Furn.
Indianapolis — Appliance Distributors, Inc.
Indianapolis — L. S. Ayres & Co.
Indianapolis — Banner-Whitehill Furn.
Indianapolis — Richard Bennett Furn.
Indianapolis — R. E. Berlier Furn.
Indianapolis — Wm. H. Block Co.
Indianapolis — Pearson's Furn. & Music
Knox — Knox Furn. Co.
Kokomo — Leath & Co.
Kokomo — Miller Furn. Annex
Kokomo — Shirley's Home Furn.
LaFayette — Lehnen's Furn. & Appl.
Logansport — H. Wiles, Inc.
Loogootee — Home Outfitters
Madison — Goodman-Jester, Inc.
Marion — Leath & Co.
Monticello — Orstadt Furn. Co.
Muncie — Fireside Furnishings
Muncie — Leath & Co.
New Albany — Weber Furn. Co.
New Castle — Brammer-Jacobs Furn.
New Lisbon — H & K Furn. Store
Pendleton — Pendleton Furn. Mart, Inc.
Rensselaer — Wrights, Inc.
Richmond — Duning Furn. Co.
Seymour — Greemann Furn. Store
South Bend — Ries Furn. Co., Inc.
South Bend — Robertson Bros. Dept. Store
Terre Haute — Fair Furn.
Vincennes — Gimbel-Bond, Inc.
Wabash — Miller Furn.

IOWA
McGregor Furn. Stores
Boone — Mott Furn. Co.
Burlington — Flynn & Boyle Furn. Co.
Cedar Rapids — Leibsohn's
Cherokee — Trimble's Furn.
Clinton — McKinley & Hummberlgaard
Council Bluffs — Home Furn. Co.
Davenport — Freeman-Glickman, Inc.
Davenport — Kay Furn.
Davenport — Leath & Co.
Des Moines — Younker Bros.
Dubuque — Leath & Co.
Le Mars — Mauer
Sibley — Nelson's Furn.
Sioux City — Miller Bros. Furn.
Sioux City — National Furn. Co.
Sioux City — Younker-Davidson

KANSAS
Goodland — Maricle Furn. Co.
Hutchinson — Crook Furn. Ex.
Hutchinson — Dean's Furn. Co.
Kansas City — Anderson
Larned — Tabler Furn. Co.
Liberal — Wilson's Furn. Co.
Mission — Martway Furn. Co.
Pratt — Calbeck Furn.
Topeka — Whitaker Furn. Co.
Wichita — Howse Co.

KENTUCKY
Lexington — The Purcell Co.
Lexington — Sleepy-Head House
Louisville — J. Bacon & Son's
Louisville — Bensinger Outfitting
Louisville — Kaufman Straus
Louisville — United Furn. Co.
Pikeville — York Furn. Co.
Somerset — W. D. Gover

LOUISIANA
Hemenway Johnson Furn. Stores
Baton Rouge — Baton Rouge Furn. Co.
Baton Rouge — Empire Furn. Co.
Baton Rouge — Kornmeyer Furn.
Lake Charles — The Muller Co. Ltd.
Monroe — Dixie Bedding & Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Max Barnett Co.
New Orleans — Dorr Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Hurwitz-Mintz Furn. Co.
New Orleans — M. Kirschman & Co.
New Orleans — Weiner's, Inc.
Shreveport — Haverty's
West Monroe — Peter Furn. Co.

MAINE
Bangor — Freese's Inc.
Bangor — Friedman Furn. Co.
Lewiston — Atherton's
Lewiston — F. X. Marcotte Furn.
Lewiston — B. Peck Company
Portland — Atherton's Furn. Co.
Portland — Porteous, Mitchell & Braun Co.

MARYLAND
Baltimore — Grand Rapids Furn.
Baltimore — Harford Furn. Co.
Baltimore — Hecht & Company
Baltimore — Hochschild, Kohn Furn. Store
Baltimore — Krastell Furn. Co.
Baltimore — Levenson & Klein
Baltimore — George Schapiro & Sons
Baltimore — S. Shavitz & Sons Co.
Baltimore — Stewart & Company
Baltimore — Wielands, Inc.
Bel-Air — Charles D. Johnson & Son
Easton — Easton Hdwe. & Furn.
Frederick — C. C. Carty, Inc.
Hagerstown — Meyers & Berkson
Hagerstown — Shockey Furn. Co.
Salisbury — Feldman's

MASSACHUSETTS
Attleboro — Atherton Furn. Co.
Boston — Jordan Marsh Co.
Boston — Lanes Furn. Co.
Boston — Paines of Boston, Inc.
Boston — John H. Pray & Son
Boston — R. H. White Corp.
Brockton — Atherton Furn. Co.
Cambridge — Moller's, Inc.
Chelsea — Bloomberg Bros., Inc.
Clinton — Richard E. Philbin & Co.
Everett — Price Wayside Furn. Co.
Lawrence — T. J. Buckley Furn. Co.
Lowell — Henry Poirer, Inc.
Lynn — Goldberg Furn. Co.
Lynn — Hill & Welch Co.
Malden — Burnetts Furn. Co.
Malden — Gorman Furn. Co., Inc.
Malden — Kotzen Furn. Co.
Mansfield — Torrance Furn. Co.
New Bedford — Alpert's of New Bedford
New Bedford — New Bedford Dry Goods Co., Inc.
New Bedford — Star Store
New Bedford — The Keystone
North Plymouth — Sherman Furn.
Rockland — Rock-Hill Furn. Co.
Salem — Wayside Furn. Co.
Somerville — Royal Furn. Co., Inc.
Wakefield — Crystal Furn. Mart
West Newton — Mayflower Wayside Furn. Co.
Worcester — David Burwick
Worcester — Denholm & McKay Co. Inc.

MICHIGAN
Adrian — Walper Furn. Co.
Albion — Booth Furn. Co.
Birmingham — Bigtown, Inc.
Detroit — Cedar Furn. Co.
Detroit — Crown Furn. Co. Stores
Detroit — Fenster & Co.
Detroit — Frumin Furn. Co.
Detroit — J. L. Hudson Co.
Detroit — The Ernst Kern Co.
Detroit — Kohlenberg Furn. Co.
Detroit — F. B. Melin & Co.
Detroit — Plymouth Furn. Co.
Detroit — Raimi Bros.
Flint — Flint Home Furnishings
Flint — Leath and Company
Flint — Winegarden Furn. Co.
Grand Rapids — Wurzburg Co.
Hastings — Thompson Furn. Co.
Hazel Park — Tower Furn. Co.
Kalamazoo — Leath and Company
Kalamazoo — Vermeulen Furn.
Lansing — F. N. Arbaugh Co.
Mount Clemens — J. H. Malbin & Sons Co.
Mount Clemens — Paul's Furn. City
Pontiac — Lewis Furn. Co.
Pontiac — F. B. Melin & Co.
Port Huron — Leath and Company
Royal Oak — Triangle Furn. Co.
Saginaw — The Furniture Market
Saginaw — Leath and Company
St. Clair Shores — Price Furn. & Appl.
Wayne — Kent Furn. Co.

MINNESOTA
F. S. Kelly Furn. Co. Stores
Alexandria — Anderson Furn.
Fergus Falls — Diamond Furn.
Mankato — Harres-Smesrud Furn.
Minneapolis — Borg & Powers
Minneapolis — Boutell's
Minneapolis — Dayton Co.
Minneapolis — L. S. Donaldson Co.
Minneapolis — Swenson Furn.
Montevideo — Unger Furn.
Rochester — Leath and Company
St. Cloud — A. J. Daniel Furn.
St. Paul — Borg & Powers
St. Paul — Emporium Furn.
St. Paul — Minnesota Furn.
St. Peter — Klein Furn.
Sauk Centre — Unger Furn.
Willmar — Norby & Hedman Furn.

MISSISSIPPI
Columbus — Jonston Furn. Co.
Hattiesburg — The Furniture Market
Jackson — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Jackson — Rice Furn. Co.
Meridian — F. A. Huelett & Sons
Meridian — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Natchez — Allen Furn. Co.
Tupelo — McClure Furn. Co.

MISSOURI
Joplin — Christman's
Kansas City — Davidson's
Kansas City — Duff & Repp
Kansas City — Emery, Bird, Thayer Dry Goods Co.
Kansas City — Macy's
Kansas City — Peck's
St. Joseph — Kirwin Furn. Co.
St. Joseph — Ray's Furn.
St. Joseph — Wyeth Co.
St. Louis — Famous-Barr
St. Louis — Lammert's
St. Louis — Stix, Baer & Fuller

MONTANA
Billings — Holliday Furn. Co.
Billings — Rowe Furn. Co.
Kalispell — F. A. Buttrey Co.

NEBRASKA
Alliance — Alliance Furn. Co.
Chadron — Midwest Furn. Co.
Falls City — Chaney's Furn. Co.
Fremont — Kavich's Furn. Co.
Grand Island — Payne-Larson
Kearney — Payne-Larson
Lincoln — Gold's
Lincoln — Hardy's
Norfolk — Ballentyne's Furn.
Norfolk — Midwest Furn. Co.
North Platte — Dempster Furn. Co.
Ogallala — Nye Furn. Co.
Omaha — Davidson
Omaha — Nebraska Furn. Mart
Omaha — Peter Pan Furn. Co.
S. Sioux City — Everett's Furn. Store
Valentine — Clements Furn. Co.

NEVADA
Elko — Stinson-Berger Furn. Co.
Las Vegas — Hollywood Furn. Co.
Reno — Home Furn. Co.

NEW HAMPSHIRE
Manchester — E. M. Chase Co.
Nashua — C. H. Avery Co., Inc.

NEW JERSEY
Asbury Park — Steinback Dept. Store
Asbury Park — Town & Country
Atlantic City — Grossman Kensington Carpet Co.
Atlantic City — Ventnor Furn. Co.
Bloomfield — Heyman Bros. Furn. Co.
Camden — The Naden Store
East Orange — Robert H. Wuensch Co.
Elizabeth — Levy Bros. Dept. Store
Garfield — Andrew Coremin
Hanover — Edwin A. Kirch
Jersey City — Goodman Furn. Co.
Keyport — West Furn. Co.
Mintola — Maurelli's
Morristown — Morchower Furn. Co.
Newark — L. Bamberger & Co.
Newark — Hoffman Furn.
Newark — S. J. Parker Furn. Co.
Newark — Supreme Furn. & Bedding Co.
New Brunswick — Madewell Furn. Co.
N. Hackensack — Hoffman & Boyle
No. Plainfield — Highway Furn. Shop
Orange — David Palons
Passaic — Stark & Son
Paterson — Alfano Bros.
Paterson — Keystone Furn. Co.
Paterson — The Quackenbush Co.
Pine Brook — Casale Furn.
Plainfield — Thomas Furn. Co.
Rahway — Koos Bros.
Ridgewood — Ridgewood Rug & Furn.
Riverside — Jacob Naden
Salem — Klines Furn.
Trenton — Gibson Furn.
Vineland — Blom Bros.
Vineland — Brody's
Wildwood — King Sales
Woodbridge — Rockford Furn.

NEW MEXICO
White's Auto Stores Inc.
Bryson Tanner Furn. Co. Stores
Albuquerque — American Furn. Co.
Albuquerque — Fedway Store
Albuquerque — Franciscan Furn.
Hobbs — Barrow Furn. Co.

NEW YORK
Albany — W. M. Whitney & Co.
Astoria — Dean's
Batavia — Wortzman Furn. Co.
Bellerose — Bellerose Furn.
Binghamton — The Fair Store
Binghamton — Olum's of Binghamton, Inc.
Bronx — Frank Art Shops
Bronx — Mallary's
Brooklyn — Abraham and Straus
Brooklyn — George Jochnowitz
Brooklyn — Namm-Loeser's
Brooklyn — Pawgan Bros.
Brooklyn — Wernick's Furn.
Buffalo — J. N. Adam & Co.
Buffalo — J. H. Lampka Furn. Co.
Buffalo — Mendelson's Assoc.
Buffalo — Nemmer Furn. Co.
Elmira — Edgecomb's Furn. Co., Inc.
Elmira — Robbins Furn. Co. of Elmira
Flushing — B. Gertz, Inc.
Flushing — Simon's Furn.
Geneva — Franklin Furn. Co.
Glendale — Wagner's Upholstery
Hempstead — Abraham and Straus
Hempstead — George's Fine Furn.
Hempstead — John A. Schwarz
Hudson Falls — Stevens Furn. Co.
Ithaca — Shulman's Inc.
Jamaica — B. Gertz, Inc.
Latham — Sharlet's Finer Furn.
Livingston Manor — Jacob's Home & Appliance
Mount Morris — Mount Morris Furn. Co.
New York — Bloomingdale's
New York — Lewis and Conger
New York — Ludwig-Baumann-Spears
New York — Stern Bros.
Niagara Falls — Levy Bros.
Oneida — The Markson Oneida Corp.
Ozone Park — Morris Kawaler, Inc.
Poughkeepsie — The Wallace Co.
Rochester — Ruby Gordon, Inc.
Rochester — Harry T. Mangurian, Inc.
Rome — Markson Rome Corp.
Seneca Falls — Franklin Furn. Co.
Syracuse — Dey Bros.
Syracuse — Franklin Furn. Co.
Syracuse — Lipsy Bros.
Syracuse — Olum's Syracuse Corp.
Syracuse — Wilson Leading Jewelers, Inc.
Troy — Gumble Furn. Co., Inc.
Utica — Leed's Distinctive Furn.
Watertown — Kamargo Furn. Co., Inc.

NORTH CAROLINA
Kimbrell's
Bridges Furn. Stores
Charlotte — Home Furn. Co.
Fayetteville — Highland Furn. Co.
Greensboro — Purvis-Webster Wayside Furn.
Greensboro — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Hendersonville — Gunderson Furn. Inc.
Wilmington — Hanover House Furn. Co.
Wilmington — Rhodes Furn. Co.

NORTH DAKOTA
C & G Stores
Grand Forks — O'Keefe Bohlman Furn.
Jamestown — Goldberg Furn.

OHIO
Akron — The M. O'Neil Co.
Akron — The A. Polsky Co.
Cincinnati — A & N Furn. Co.
Cincinnati — Rollman & Sons
Cincinnati — John Shillito Co.
Cincinnati — Smith Furn. Co.
Cleveland — Higbee Co.
Cleveland — May Co.
Cleveland — Wm. Tayler & Sons
Cleveland — Sterling Linder Davis Co.
Cleveland — Watkins Furn. Co.
Cleveland — Woldmans Inc.
Columbus — Lazarus Dept. Store
Dover — Deuvall Furn. Co.
Fremont — Bond Furn. Co.
Lancaster — Colonial Heights Furn. Co.
Marion — The Lennon Furn. Co.
Monroeville — Howard Leis Furn. Co.
Piqua — Piqua Furn. Mart
Sandusky — Herman Furn. Co.
Toledo — Imperial Wayside Furn. Co.
Toledo — Kennedy Furn. Co.
Toledo — LaSalle & Koch Co.
Youngstown — Reichart Furn. Co.
Youngstown — Strouss-Hirshberg Co.

OKLAHOMA
Clinton — Chalfant Furn. Co.
Duncan — Everett's Home Furnishings
Enid — C. E. Loomis Furn. Co.
Lawton — Lawton-Ft. Sill Furn. & Appl. Co.
Lawton — Popular Furn. Co. Inc.
Midwest City — Midwest Furn.
Oklahoma City — John A. Brown Co.
Oklahoma City — Harbour-Longmire
Ponca — Glenn Paris & Sons
Sapulpa — Rule-Reel Furn. Co.
Tulsa — Brown-Dunkin Co.
Tulsa — Mayo Furn. Co.

OREGON
Albany — Fragers
Astoria — Greenbergs
Bend — A. C. Stipe Furn. Co.
Brookings — Hendricks Furn. Co.
Coos Bay — Art Decorating
The Dalles — Hampton Furn. Co.
Eugene — Rubenstien's
Lebanon — Lebanon Furn. Co.
Medford — Weeks & Orr
Oregon City — Busch Furn.
Portland — Cohn Bros.
Portland — Director's
Portland — Holman Furn. & Appl.
Portland — Jennings Furn.
Portland — Sharff & Son
Portland — West Furn. Co.
Roseburg — Carstens Furn. Co.
Salem — H. L. Stiff Furn. Co.
Seaside — Bjorklunds
Springfield — Wrights
Tillamook — Fisher Bros.

PENNSYLVANIA
Wolf Furn. Co. Stores
Allentown — Harold Furn.
Bethlehem — Lipkin Furn.
Bristol — Spencer's Furn.
Butler — Ketterer Furn.
Butler — A. E. Troutman
Chester — M. J. Freed Furn. Co.
Chester — Morton's
Coatesville — Chertok's Furn.
Corry — Meerdink Furn. Co.
Easton — Wm. Laubach & Sons
Easton — Lipkin Furn.
Erie — Reliable Furn. Co.
Franklin — Wayside Furn.
Harrisburg — Pomeroy's
Hatboro — Gamburg Furn.
Hazleton — Valleri's Furn. Store
Indiana — Jones Furn. Co.
Jacobus — Bruce V. Smith
Jeanette — Frank Levin Furn.
Johnstown — Penn Furn. Co.
Kane — Benz Furn. Co.
Lancaster — Harold Furn.
Lansdale — Town & Country
Lebanon — The Bon Ton
McKees Rocks — Ross Independent Oil
McKees Rocks — Superior Furn.
Monessen — Check's Furn.
Monroeville — Faller Furn.
New Castle — J. R. Frew Co.
Norristown — B. E. Block & Bro.
Oxford — Eagle Dept. Store
Philadelphia — Di Pasqua Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — Gimbel's
Philadelphia — S. Kruger & Co.
Philadelphia — Lit Bros.
Philadelphia — McGinnty & Murta
Philadelphia — Nelson's Furn. Inc.
Philadelphia — J. A. Severino
Philadelphia — Snellenburg's
Philadelphia — Stern & Co.
Philadelphia — Strand Furn.
Philadelphia — Strawbridge & Clothier
Philadelphia — John Wanamaker
Pittsburgh — Carson Store
Pittsburgh — Gimbel's
Pittsburgh — Joseph Horne Co.
Pittsburgh — Miller Furn.
Pittsburgh — Olbum's Furn. Co.
Pittsburgh — Rosenbaum
Pittsburgh — Spear & Co.
Pittsburgh — Union Sy. Co.
Pottsville — Pomeroy's
Punxsutawney — Jones Furn. Co.
Reading — Harold Furn. Co., Inc.
Reading — Pomeroy's
Rochester — Gorrin & Harris
Schuylkill Haven — Cleland's Home Furnishings
Scranton — Scranton Talk, Inc.
Uniontown — Cohen Furn. Co.
Upper Darby — Appliance Center Washington — Home Furnishing Div.
West Chester — Wm. J. Kauffman
Wilkinsburg — Faller Furn. Co.
Wilkes-Barre — Pomeroy's

RHODE ISLAND
East Greenwich — Ross Aker Furn. Co.
Pawtucket — Garreau Furn. Co.
Pawtucket — Shaffer's Furn. Co.
Pawtucket — Westminster Furn. Co.
Providence — Joseph Marcus Co., Inc.
Providence — The Outlet Co.
Woonsocket — Jolicoeur Furn. Co.
Woonsocket — McCarthy Dry Goods Co., Inc.

SOUTH CAROLINA
Kimbrell's
Belton — Maynard Furn. Co.
Orangeburg — King Furn. Co.
Spartanburg — Rhodes Furn. Co.
Charleston — Rhodes Furn. Co.

SOUTH DAKOTA
Deadwood — Schwarzwald Furn.
Mitchell — Farmers Market Inc.
Sioux Falls — Farmers Market Inc.

TENNESSEE
Memphis — Donald Furn. Co.
Memphis — Lowenstein's
Memphis — Normal Furn. Co., Inc.
Memphis — Rhodes-Jennings Furn. Co.

TEXAS
Fedway Dept. Stores
White's Auto Stores, Inc.
Edelstein's Better Furn. Stores
Abilene — A. B. Barrow Furn. Co.
Alice — Brunston Furn. Co.
Angleton — Hudeck Bros. Furn. Co.
Amarillo — J. W. Hill Furn. Co.
Amarillo — V. L. Taylor Co.
Austin — Bridges Furn. Co.
Austin — Louis Shanks Furn. Co.
Baytown — Culpepper Furn. Co.
Beaumont — Dallas-Williams Furn. Co.
Beaumont — Finger's Furn. Co.
Beaumont — Mansell-Douglass Furn.
Brownfield — Griggs Goble Furn. Co.
Borger — Frank Jennings Furn. Co.
Brenham — Hermann Furn. Co.
Bryan — Kratt Furn. Co.
Cleburne — Cumbies Furn. Co.
Corpus Christi — Allen Furn. Co.
Dallas — Bearden Furn. Co.
Dallas — Mary Bonner Furn. Co.
Dallas — Dougherty Furn. Co.
Dallas — Duffey's Furn. Co.
Dallas — Higgenbottom Pearlstone Co.
Dallas — Highland Furn. Co.
Dallas — Massey Furn. Co.
Dallas — Rick Furn.
Dallas — Sanger Bros.
Dallas — J. D. Smith Furn. Co.
Dallas — Stanford Furn.
Dallas — Wm. Tanner & Co.
Dallas — Titche-Goettinger Co.
Del Rio — Del Rio Furn. Co.
Donna — Donna Furn. Co.
El Paso — American Furn. Co.
El Paso — Imperial Furn. Co.
Floydada — Boren Furn. Co.
Forney — Mitchell Furn. Co.
Fort Worth — The Fair
Fort Worth — Fakes & Co.
Fort Worth — Greines Furn. Co.
Fort Worth — Kemble Bros. Furn. Co.
Fort Worth — Leonard's
Gainesville — Tanner Furn. Co.
Galveston — Plantowsky
Greenville — Collins Bros.
Harlingen — Home Furn. Co.
Houston — Covington Furn. Co.
Houston — Finger's
Houston — Foley Bros.
Houston — Gulf Coast Furn. Co.
Houston — Haverty Furn. Co.
Houston — Joske's of Houston
Houston — Stowers Furn. Co.
Houston — Sunland Furn. Co.
Houston — Waddell's
Kermit — Ideal Furn. Co.
Kingsville — Coleman's
Lamarque — Sterchi's Furn. Co.
Levelland — Stacy-Mason, Inc.
Littlefield — E. C. Rodgers Furn. Co.
Longview — McWilliams Hdw. & Furn. Co.
Lubbock — Seller's Jondal Jenkins
Lubbock — Spears Furn. Co.
Lubbock — Watson Furn. Co.
Lufkin — Hemenway-Johnson Furn. Co.
Marshall — McKay Furn. Co.
Marshall — McWilliams Furn. Co.
Marshall — Smith Furn. Co.
McAllen — Whalen Furn. Co.
McAllen — Stroud's Home Furnishings
Midland — Midland Hardware Co.
Mexia — J. I. Riddle & Co.
Odessa — Barrow-Phillips Furn. Co.
Orange — Dallas-Beadle Furn. Co.
Palestine — Denby Furn. Co.
Pecos — Home Furn. Co.
Plainview — Griggs Furn. Co.
San Antonio — Empire Furn. Co.
San Antonio — Joske's of Texas
San Antonio — Kelfer Furn. Co.
Seguin — Starcke Furn. Co.
Sweetwater — Modern Furn. Co.
Sulphur Springs — Tapp Furn. Co.
Tyler — Broadway Furn. Co.
Waco — Clifton-Simpson, Inc.
Waco — Stratton-Stricker Co.
Wichita Falls — Tanner's, Inc.

UTAH
Logan — Crystal Furn. Co.
Ogden — Boyle Furn.
Salt Lake City — South East Furn.
Vernal — Vernal Furn. Exchange

VERMONT
Barre — Hooker's Wayside Furn. Store
Rutland — Union Furn. Co.

WASHINGTON
Aberdeen — Goldberg's
Bellingham — Jorgenson Furn. Co.
Dishman — Spokane Furn. Co.
Enumclaw — Gunderson Home Furn.
Everett — Goldberg's
Goldendale — Mayson Furn. Co.
Kelso — United Furn. Co.
Kelso — Wasser Furn. Co.
Longview — Quigley's, Inc.
Olympia — Goldberg's
Prosser — Prosser Trading Post
Seattle — Bon Marche
Seattle — Butler Bros. (North Gate)
Seattle — Greenbaum's United Furn.
Seattle — MacDougall-Southwick
Spokane — Bell Furn. Co.
Spokane — Bon Marche
Spokane — Cohn Bros.
Spokane — Crescent Dept. Store
Spokane — Sylvan Furn. Co.
Tacoma — The Peoples Store
Vancouver — Riback's
Vancouver — Vancouver Furn. Co.
Walla Walla — Davis-Kaser's

WEST VIRGINIA
Charleston — Woodrum's
Clarksburg — Palace Furn. Co.
Fairmont — Hartley's
Huntington — Star Furn.
Wheeling — Reichart Furn.
Wheeling — Stone & Thomas

WISCONSIN
Antigo — Soman & Bradley
Appleton — Gabriel Furn. Co.
Appleton — Leath & Co.
Beaver Dam — Matlin Furn.
Beloit — Leath & Co.
Beloit — Standard Furn.
Cuba City — Donohoo Furn.
Eau Claire — Leath & Co.
Elm Grove — Blue Mound Furn.
Fond du Lac — Kremer Bros.
Fond du Lac — Leath & Co.
Fond du Lac — Rickmeyer Furn.
Green Bay — Leath & Co.
Green Bay — Miller Furn.
Green Bay — H. C. Prange Co.
Janesville — Adams Furn. Co.
Janesville — Leath & Co.
La Crosse — Leath & Co.
Madison — Kraft Furn. Co.
Madison — Leath & Co.
Manitowoc — Brewer Furn. & Carpet Co.
Manitowoc — Shimek & Schwartz
Manitowoc — Westphal's
Marinette — Lauerman Bros.
Marinette — Olson Furn.
Marshfield — Leath & Co.
Milwaukee — Art Furn.
Milwaukee — Atlas Household Furn.
Milwaukee — Boston Store
Milwaukee — Gimbel's
Milwaukee — Hack's
Milwaukee — Kunzelmann-Esser
Milwaukee — Meyer Stores
Milwaukee — Schuster's
Oshkosh — Leath & Co.
Racine — Bloch's Furn.
Racine — Grant's Furn.
Racine — Porter's Furn.
Sheboygan — H. C. Prange Co.
Two Rivers — Messerman Furn.
Waukesha — Randle Inc.
Wausau — Leath & Co.
West Allis — Green Furn.

WYOMING
Casper — Stewart Furn. Co.
Cheyenne — Bradley Furn. Co.
Gillette — Ryan's Furn. Co.

ALASKA
Anchorage — Northern Commercial
Fairbanks — Nerland's

Best for Mother's Rest... Stratolounger

Featuring the World-Famous Lorenz Reclining Mechanism

The Stratolounger with its patented Lorenz mechanism adjusts effortlessly for perfect comfort. Back, seat and ottoman move independently, yet simultaneously to maintain scientifically correct relationship in any position. The world's largest selling reclining chair. Your finest Mother's Day gift...at a mighty practical price.

As little as $99.50 ...Slightly higher in the West

In armor weight elastic Boltaflex as shown from $119.50

STRATOLOUNGER, INC. Div. of Futorian Manufacturing Co., Chicago • Eastern Plant: Hoffman-Stratford, Souderton, Pa.

ONE of the best sleeping habits to get into...

Thomaston Sheets

Available at your favorite store in dream-pastels and snowy white —a quality for every purse and purpose.
A product of Thomaston Mills ▪ Thomaston, Ga.

ZUD Removes RUST & STAINS
from BATHTUBS · SINKS · PORCELAIN · COPPER POTS TILE FLOORS · AUTO BUMPERS · METALS
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
FREE SAMPLE
Give name of your dealers.
ZUD is sold at Grocers, Hardware, Dept., 10¢ Stores
RUSTAIN PRODUCTS P.O. BOX 102 FAIR LAWN, N.J.

FINEST ALUMINUM
AWNINGS
HORIZONTAL SV VERTICAL Solar-Vent
See your local dealer
TREN-METAL INC. 1060 SPRUCE ST. TRENTON, N. J.

RITZ CLOTHS
A Ritz quality cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store.
JOHN RITZENTHALER,
73 Franklin St., N.Y. 13
RITZ

KILLS ROACHES!
SILVERFISH · WATERBUGS · CRICKETS
Kill them the clean, easy way. No mess or odor. Place Hives where insects can find them. They eat bait in protective tube and die. Money back guarantee. Thrifty. Ask for Gator. If store has none, send $1 for 9 Hives. DeSoto Chemical Co., Dept. L-5, Arcadia, Florida.
Gator ROACH HIVES

Save up to ½ on RUGS
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Your Choice of:
44 lovely, up-to-date, solid and two-tone colors, casual new texture blends and embossed effects, leaf and floral designs, colorful Early American and Oriental patterns,—regardless of colors in your old materials.
ANY SIZE up to 18 ft. seamless, any length—sizes you can't get elsewhere.
No-Risk, Trial Offer.
Monthly Payments
FREE TO EVERY READER
MAIL this coupon or a postcard for fascinating, new, money-saving Olson book . . 40 pages of Rugs and model rooms in actual colors. Tells how to get lovely, deep-textured, Reversible Broadloom Rugs at a big saving by sending your Old Rugs, Clothing to Olson Factory.
OLSON "Rug Magic"
In Full Color
Your Name .....
Address .....
Town ..... State .....
© ORC
OLSON RUG CO. Dept. T-70 Chicago 41, Ill.

FIGURES MADE TO ORDER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66

Reducing Diet for Endomorphs-Mesomorphs

Between 1000 and 1100 Calories a Day

By eating salads first, you will take the edge off your appetite, and decrease your desire for the more fattening foods.

MONDAY

Breakfast	Calories
Orange or grapefruit juice (4 oz.) or medium serving of fresh fruit such as melon, peach, pear, berries, apricots, banana (½), grapefruit (½) (approximately)	50
Whole-grain cereal (⅔ cup) with skim milk (½ cup) and honey (1 tsp.)	165
Whole-wheat toast, 1 slice with ½ pat butter	100
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	315
Lunch
Chicken consommé	—
Shrimp salad (¾ cup shrimp, Journal Diet Dressing*)	150
Rye Melba toast (2 slices)	40
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
	275
Dinner
Tossed salad (lettuce, tomato, carrot, onion, Journal Diet Dressing*)	50
Roast veal (2 medium slices)	170
Asparagus stalks, lemon juice	15
Cauliflower	15
Fresh pear and dessert cheese (½ oz.)	100
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	350
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1025

TUESDAY

Breakfast
Fruit or juice (approximately)	50
Poached or boiled egg	75
Crisp bacon (2 slices)	100
Whole-wheat toast (½ pat butter)	100
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	325
Lunch
Chopped-steak patty on ½ toasted roll	225
Apple	50
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
	360
Dinner
Pear-and-cottage-cheese salad (½ pear, 1 tbsp. cheese)	40
Broiled chicken	170
Broccoli, lemon juice	15
Diced carrots	25
Prune whip	80
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	330
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1100

WEDNESDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	315
Lunch
Tomato consommé	—
Fresh fruit salad (orange, grapefruit, banana, apple, Journal Diet Dressing*)	150
Melba toast (2)	40
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
	275
Dinner
Broiled lamb chop	135
French string beans	15
Baked potato with ½ pat butter	125
Dessert cheese (1 oz.) and saltines (3)	145
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	420
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1035

THURSDAY

Breakfast
Same as Tuesday	325
Lunch
Beef bouillon	—
Tomato stuffed with cottage cheese and chives (½ cup cheese)	190
Carrot sticks	10
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
	285
Dinner
Cucumber salad (Journal Diet Dressing*)	30
Broiled chopped-steak patty, parsley	150
Peas with mushrooms	75
Broiled tomato halves	30
Fruit-flavored gelatin	100
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	385
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1080

FRIDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	315
Lunch
Tomato consommé	—
Mushroom omelet (2 eggs, chopped mushrooms, 1 tsp. butter)	175
Melba toast (2)	40
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	215
Dinner
Shredded-carrot salad (Journal Diet Dressing*)	6
Broiled swordfish	170
Brussels sprouts	2
Baked potato (½ pat butter)	125
Chilled grapes	50
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	430
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1050

SATURDAY

Breakfast
Same as Tuesday	325
Lunch
Large bowl of vegetable soup	170
Whole-wheat toast (½ pat butter)	100
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
	355
Dinner
Green salad (lettuce, water cress, green pepper, endive, Journal Diet Dressing*)	5
Broiled calves' liver	170
Spinach, lemon juice	10
Boiled onions	50
Honeydew melon	20
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	310
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1075

SUNDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	315
Dinner
Jellied consommé	—
Roast beef (2 slices)	250
String beans	30
Julienne beets	20
Fresh fruit cup	100
Coffee or tea, plain	—
	300 hrifty one-dish treat

SO good to eat!

MOCK POT ROAST—Brown 4 lamb or veal shoulder chops, salt, pper, 1 clove garlic. Remove garlic and d 2 cups Herb-Ox Bouillon. Cover and mmer 40 minutes. Add 4 onions, 8 car- s split lengthwise, 4 small potatoes, ved. Cover and simmer 30 more min- s, until tender. Serves 4.

E! Money-Saving Magic—26 delicious recipes t show how Herb-Ox makes food taste better, less. Write to: The Pure Food Company, ., Dept. LHJ, Mamaroneck, N. Y.

LOW-CALORIE, HIGH-FLAVOR
Herb-Ox
America's Largest Selling
OUILLON CUBES

JOLLY TIME
BOY! HOW IT POPS!
POP CORN

STONE MUSHROOMS
Make "old" menus "new" with fresh flavored
KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
"—it's the Quality Pack"
FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.
Guaranteed by Housekeeping
AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

EST HAND FORGED CUTLERY
Ask for Kirk's
SHEFFIELD STAINLESS STEEL
At all Leading Stores
TREASURE CHEST
STEAK SETS with Pearlex Handles
$10.95
FOLDER ON OTHER BEAUTIFUL KIRK SETS
Write to Kirk's Ltd., 63 W. Broadway, N. Y.

ve you tasted BIGELOW'S
"Constant Comment" TEA
Finest Ceylon Tea, deliciously flavored with bits of Oranges and sweet spice for you, your family . . . and guests.
ND 10c FOR 6 CUP SAMPLE
R.C. BIGELOW, Inc., Mfr.
51 Hoyt St., Norwalk, Conn.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Packers of 10 Rare Teas

Supper	Calories
Grilled cheese sandwich on rye toast	250
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Any time during day
Skim milk or buttermilk (8 oz.)	85
Total Calories for Day—1100

*JOURNAL DIET DRESSINGS

Cottage-Cheese Diet Dressing for Vegetable Salads

To ½ cup creamed cottage cheese add 1 teaspoon caraway seeds, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon minced chives or scallion tops, dash of pepper and dash of paprika and, if you like the flavor of garlic, ¼ teaspoon garlic salt. Add 1 teaspoon lemon juice and 3 to 4 tablespoons buttermilk or skim milk, depending upon the consistency you like. By using a little less milk it makes a good dip for raw vegetables such as carrot sticks and celery stalks.

Cottage-Cheese Diet Dressing for Fruit Salads

To ½ cup creamed cottage cheese add ¼ teaspoon grated orange rind and thin with 3 to 4 tablespoons of fruit juice. Chopped mint is a nice addition with fruits such as orange and pineapple.

Building-Up Diet For Ectomorphs

Approximately 2000 Calories a Day

MONDAY

Breakfast	Calories
Orange or grapefruit juice (4 oz.) or medium serving of fresh fruit such as melon, peach, pear, berries, apricots, banana (½), grapefruit (½) (approximately)	50
Scrambled eggs (2), 1 tsp. butter	175
Crisp bacon (2 slices)	100
Whole-wheat toast, 1 pat butter	125
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	475
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Tomato soup, clear	80
Shrimp salad (¾ cup shrimp), Russian dressing	220
Corn muffin, 1 pat butter	150
Banana	100
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	575
Afternoon
Whole milk (8 oz.)	170
Figs, 2 dried	100
	270
Dinner
Roast veal (2 medium slices)	170
Asparagus stalks	15
Corn	100
Tossed salad (lettuce, tomato, carrots, onion, olive oil and vinegar dressing)	50
Dessert cheese (1 oz.) and Saltines (3)	145
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	505

Total Calories for Day—1995

TUESDAY

Breakfast
Fruit or juice (approximately)	50
Whole-grain cereal, hot or cold, with honey (1 tsp.) and light cream (¼ cup)	235
Whole-wheat toast (1 slice, 1 pat butter)	125
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	435
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Cheeseburger on whole-wheat toast, 1 pat butter	375
Coleslaw, sour-cream dressing	85
Fresh fruit cup	75
Whole milk (8 oz.)	170
	705
Afternoon
Pick-me-up snack (such as dried fruit—apricots, prunes, figs) (approximately)	100

"Time for a lemonade lift!"

Refreshing! Lemonade's the pure fruit-juice beverage that gives you a lift...without letting you down! It's bright...fresh-tasting...rich in Vitamin C...and it really quenches thirst!

Ready in seconds with Frozen Lemonade from sunny California! Just open can...add water, ice...nice! Each 6-oz. can makes a full quart. Costs only about 3¢ a glass.

Tasty because Frozen Lemonade from sunny California contains the fresh-frozen juice of the finest lemons that grow! Buy several cans today. Keep a pitcherful in your refrigerator.

LEMON PRODUCTS ADVISORY BOARD, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The finest brands of FROZEN concentrate for LEMONADE are packed in sunny California where the best lemons grow!
Look for CALIFORNIA on the can!

so easy now with FROZEN LEMONADE from sunny California

WHY NOT EARN MORE?
You can easily earn extra money by selling magazine subscriptions in your spare time. Thousands of our representatives made their start by asking for our generous commission offer. No obligation. Address a postal today!
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY 907 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

when you eat OUT when you eat IN

meet Mr. Blue Lake
the aristocrat of the Green Bean Family

Blue Lakes are the variety of green beans grown on the Pacific coast that aroused the whole nation to a new look and taste in canned green beans.

When you want the finest—at home, restaurant or club—insist on the succulent Blue Lake green bean.

CANNED Blue Lake variety GREEN BEANS

Blue Lakes are greener, rounder, straighter and firmer. They are a distinct variety of green beans packed under many brand names. Be sure the can label, regardless of brand, says "Blue Lake Variety Green Beans".

Copyright 1955 by Associated Blue Lake Green Bean Canners, Inc., Portland 4, Oregon

NEW FOR VARICOSE VEINS
FROM BAUER & BLACK

AN ELASTIC
STOCKING THAT DOESN'T LOOK LIKE ONE

Now—nylon elastic stockings so sheer and dressy-looking you can wear them without overhose!

Here at last is an elastic stocking without that "wooden leg" look. So sheer and smooth-fitting it keeps your varicose veins a secret—even without overhose!

New Bauer & Black nylons are fashioned to assure you of correct support from ankle to thigh. Won't discolor. Easy to wash. Quick drying. Light and cool. Wouldn't you, too, feel better in these elastic stockings?

BAUER & BLACK
Nylon or Cotton Elastic Stockings

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET!
"Comfort, Relief and New Leg Beauty"
BAUER & BLACK, Dept. LH-5
309 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.
Name
Address
City Zone State

Dinner	Calories
Broiled chicken	170
Broccoli with hollandaise sauce (2 tbsp.)	115
Steamed fresh carrots	25
Pear-and-cottage-cheese salad	80
Prune whip	80
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	495

Total Calories for Day—1905

WEDNESDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	475
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Vegetable soup (1 cup)	85
Cottage cheese (½ cup) with fresh fruit salad	310
Rye toast, 1 pat butter	120
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	540
Afternoon
Eggnog (8 oz. milk, 1 egg, ½ tsp. vanilla, a dash of cinnamon or nutmeg)	245
Dinner
Broiled lamb chop	135
French string beans	15
Mashed potatoes, 1 pat butter	125
Sliced tomato salad with French dressing (1 tbsp.)	90
Fruit gelatin	100
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	490

Total Calories for Day—1920

THURSDAY

Breakfast
Same as Tuesday	435
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Tomato consommé	—
Cheese soufflé	175
Rye toast, 1 pat butter	120
Fruit gelatin	100
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	420
Afternoon
Whole milk (8 oz.)	170
Oatmeal cookies (2)	200
	370
Dinner
Broiled chopped steak	150
Peas with mushrooms	75
Stewed tomatoes	25
Cucumber-and-radish salad with French dressing (1 tbsp.)	85
Vanilla Nutmeg Custard	130
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	490

Total Calories for Day—1885

FRIDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	475
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Baked macaroni (¾ cup) and cheese	280
Tossed mixed green salad, French dressing (1 tbsp.)	85
Fresh pear	50
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	440
Afternoon
Orange juice (6 oz.)	75
Dinner
Broiled swordfish	170
Lima beans	100
Baked potato, 1 pat butter	150
Sliced tomato and lettuce salad, 1 tsp. mayonnaise	55
Honeydew melon (½)	150
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	650

Evening	Calories
Whole milk (8 oz.)	170

Total Calories for Day—1980

SATURDAY

Breakfast
Same as Tuesday	435
Midmorning
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170
Lunch
Cream of potato soup	200
Club sandwich on whole-wheat toast (chicken, tomato, bacon, lettuce)	350
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	575
Dinner
Broiled calves' liver	170
Spinach with egg slices	50
Creamed onions	150
Tossed green salad, French dressing	85
Strawberries and cream	175
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	655
Evening
Whole milk (8 oz.)	170

Total Calories for Day—2005

SUNDAY

Breakfast
Same as Monday	475
Dinner
Jellied consommé	—
Roast beef	260
Peas and onions	75
Julienne beets	25
Lettuce-and-tomato salad, Roquefort dressing	75
Fresh fruit cup, large	100
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired	25
	560
Afternoon
Whole milk (8 oz.)*	170

Supper	Calo
Welsh rarebit on toast
Tossed salad, olive oil and vinegar dressing
Apple, large
Coffee or tea, cream or milk, if desired
Evening
Whole milk (8 oz.)

Total Calories for Day—1860

*If you wish, flavor milk with ½ tsp. var dash of cinnamon or nutmeg.

Note: Our doctor has purposely elimin refined sugars from both diets in the lief that refined sugars deplete the bod stored B-complex vitamins which are ne sary to good health. If you feel you have sugar in your tea or coffee, try to yourself to a teaspoon daily. If you feel must have a special sweet or dessert occasion (not listed in diets) try to limit y self to one splurge a week! In time, you be delighted to discover your taste for sw will diminish and that while you may enjoy them occasionally, you won't them.

Essential Foods For Everyone

All things needed for adequate nutritic the body and for physical efficiency are pre in the following foods:

1. Whole-grain cereals.
2. Whole-grain breads (rye, wheat, corn)
3. Vegetables (legumes, root and leafy v tables).
4. Fruits (fresh, dried and water-packed)
5. Dairy products (whole milk, skimmed m buttermilk, soured milk or yogurt, bu cheese, and eggs).
6. Meats, fish, fowl. (Vary diet with: l veal, lamb, beef and calves liver, chil livers, chicken, all kinds of fish.)

By MUNRO LEAF

CLOWNS in the circus are funny and we like to see them

BUT

One creature nobody likes to see and one nobody thinks is funny is a Car Clown. Car Clowns are stupid show-offs who just can't sit still in a car. They seem to think they have to stand up on seats, stick their heads and arms out windows and shout and make faces at people in other cars. This Car Clown had better pull its tongue and its silly head and arms back in before they all get knocked off for good by another car.

How you can clear away beauty-robbing "make-up clog"

...with your special Tussy Cleansing Cream

This is a fact and a promise. Your skin will look smoother, finer, lovelier . . . if you cleanse with the Tussy cream made for your skin type. It cleanses better than ANY soap.

It clears out clogged make-up and dirt that many creams can't even reach!

And please don't rub, and risk stretching your skin. This cream is so effective, it needs only gentle smoothing to do its good work.

Follow the arrows for beauty cleansing. Stroke your special Tussy Cleansing Cream on face and neck . . . moving up, up, up with your finger tips. Use short, round-and-round motions on your forehead, nose and chin. These are the places where pores are most apt to become clogged.

It actually cleanses deep-down! Tussy's deep-reach cleansing cream actually gets down under "Make-up Clog" and dirt . . . and clears them out! What's more, it softens and satinizes your skin while it cleanses.

The result? Your skin has new beauty, new color—fast.

Remember, there's a Tussy Cleansing Cream for every skin type . . . dry, normal and oily. Each is like a special beauty prescription for your skin. Each helps give your skin what it needs, to make it look its loveliest!

Tussy Pink Cleansing Cream for oily or normal skin. It dissolves and removes excess oil; lessens chance of blemishes and blackheads. Silkens skin as it cleanses. Only $1.25.

Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream for dry skin. It's extra rich in lanolin and other skin-softeners. Provides dry skin with beauty oils it thirsts for. Use it faithfully for lovelier skin. Only $1.25.

prices plus tax

A footed sherbet glass makes an ideal container for a compact little bouquet of spring or summer blossoms on a small table for two or four.

STUART

The bright faces of a few pansies and white daisies arranged casually in any small dish—even a custard cup—say a cheery "good morning" from the breakfast tray.

A cone-shaped shell, saved as a memento of a holiday, may be coated with paraffin so that it will hold water. Tuck in a few sprays of azalea or other flowering shrub. Place on the bathroom shelf for a beauty touch.

Small Bouquets

ALL OVER THE HOUSE

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

CONSIDER the charm of the small bouquet. You needn't be an expert to arrange a few buttercups from the fields and violets from the woods in a gray stoneware jar that once held marmalade, since half the delight it will give you and those who look upon your creation will be its casual gaiety and surprise.

This month everything seems to be in bloom at once, from the tiny bulb flowers that border the rock garden to the flowering trees and shrubs. There is no better time to try your hand at composing small arrangements.

Your bouquets will be most effective if you keep them simple. If you have picked more flowers than are needed, make several compositions rather than try to use them all in one bouquet. There are no rules, really. Just let yourself go. Do what pleases you. Combine with easy grace your colors and textures from what you have at hand.

Look at the contents of your cupboards with a new eye. Cups and saucers, small pitchers, a vinegar cruet, even a jar that once held mustard or marmalade, are all potential containers for blossoms near at hand.

Surprise your guests by bringing in a small bouquet on the coffee or tea tray. This one is composed of a few rosebuds and leaves from a house plant. The container is a cigarette cup.

When the mustard jar is empty save it. It's perfect for a bouquet of miniature spring flowers on the table beside your husband's favorite reading chair to greet him on his home-coming.

A small bouquet on the coffee table will add more charm to the living room and attract more attention by its very daintiness than a larger bouquet placed elsewhere in the room.

Modern refreshment is Light refreshment

AGAIN THIS SEASON'S style news proves that fashion's not half so fickle as they say. She is still stressing the slender waistline, and probably always will.

So no wonder the modern woman has learned to prefer lighter, less filling food and drink—to the advantage of her health as well as looks.

And no wonder Pepsi-Cola is more popular than ever. It's kept in step with modern fashion, modern taste. Today's Pepsi is never heavy, never too sweet, reduced in calories.

It's the modern, the light refreshment. Refresh without filling. Have a Pepsi.

Pepsi-Cola

refreshes without filling

PEPSI-COLA

it's a short step from

WHITE LACE to WHITE SHIRTS

...make it an easier step with Rid-Jid KNEE ROOM!

● Want to tickle a bride? Give her years of ironing ease with a handsome new Rid-Jid Knee Room Ironing Table. She'll bubble with joy at its gleaming chrome and yellow beauty . . . so new . . . so right for a bride's home. And when she sees the KNEE ROOM . . . she'll thank you forever! The modern bride's a smart gal . . . she knows that knee room means comfortable sit-down ironing with no bumped knees . . . no cramped legs . . . no stretching, twisting, bending. Those S-shaped legs leave room for knees to slide way under the table so the ironing surface fits right over the lap. Rid-Jid also adjusts easily to any height for comfort level ironing . . . sitting or standing.

Watch her glow with pleasure when she irons on Rid-Jid's patented, fully ventilated open-mesh top. The 61% open area lets moisture escape . . . clothes dry fast. Give happy ironing . . . give a Rid-Jid Knee Room and Air Flow pad and cover set!

APPROVED BY CUPID FOR BRIDES

MEMORIES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 80

I think it was about this time that I went down to Washington for a big dinner party that the Edward McLeans were giving. I stayed at Mrs. J. Borden ("Daisy") Harriman's, and all kinds of people came in for tea—diplomats, Cabinet members, senators, all talking with great solemnity about one thing:

"Did you get a message from Mrs. McLean that we are to wear black ties?"

This was discussed in hushed, grave tones. It wasn't until we got to the McLeans' that we found out the reason for the message—Will Rogers was the guest of honor and he never wore a white tie!

Of course if anybody had worn a white tie, Will Rogers wouldn't have noticed it, and it always struck me as grimly humorous that such a triviality could have caused such excitement in one of the world's great capitals.

Afterward I came to know Evelyn McLean very well and often in Washington I would stay at Friendship with her and her two old great Danes and her ancient, rather decrepit watchman. She kept a fortune in jewels in a suitcase under her bed and she used to drag it out and put it on the bed and show me all the lovely things that had been her mother's. Even when she and little Evelyn went around the corner to the movies in tweed skirts and sweaters, she wore the Hope diamond. She never took it off till just before she went to sleep. Then she'd put it on the night table. I asked her what she'd do if anyone broke in, and she opened a drawer of the table and there was a big revolver in it. She was very casual about it all.

Sometimes I would stay with a dear friend of hers and mine, that lovely, beguiling creature Cissie Patterson, in her beautiful house on Dupont Circle which she once lent to the Coolidges when the White House was being repaired. I had first known Cissie and her brother Joe—two people absolutely dripping with charm—in Chicago and later in New York. Cissie was running the Washington Times Herald, which she had first managed for Hearst and then bought from him.

There are other happy memories of those years. One of them is going to wonderful Sunday luncheons at the Swopes' at Great Neck. One of the first times I went there I heard Maggie, Herbert's wife, say casually to the maid they had had since they were married, "Mae, there'll be thirty-four for dinner."

And there were, and one of them was Ring Lardner, who lived next door. Ring was one of my idols, wonderfully kind and charming. It was always thrilling to see him saunter onto the porch.

JUST as I was writing this page a letter came from Herbert Swope. He had heard that I was writing this book and wrote to give me what he describes as his Word for Today about it:

Tell the truth, irregardless (as Jim Farley says) of what it may be. Truth is always more interesting.

And remember the two best rules of writing that were ever laid down:

The first, by the Red Queen in "Alice" when she was asked how Alice should tell a story: "That's very simple—begin at the beginning, go through to the end, then stop."

The second was by Lord Verulam, whom the peasants know as Francis Bacon: "Look into thine heart, then write."

I HAVE tried my best to live up to all these counsels.

Another of the happy memories is of going to Sunday-night dinners with that magical Laurette Taylor and her husband, Hartley Manners, in their big house on Riverside Drive. She had made a silent picture of "Peg of My Heart" and always after dinner they would show it to us. Some years afterward she said to me, "Ethel, did you ever see my picture, 'Peg of My Heart'?"

I said, "All one winter."

I hadn't meant to be funny, but Laurette loved it and kept repeating it. We were very fond of each other, but she would often say, "Here's Ethel, Hartley's favorite actress."

CULVER SERVICE

"I loved The Twelve Pound Look, but had no idea that it was to serve as a lifesaver for the next twenty-five years."

After "Mrs. Tanqueray" I played for a short season in "Hamlet" and "The Merchant of Venice" with Walter Hampden, whom I admire and love, both as a person and an actor.

The first part of Portia is very difficult, like algebra or a complicated fugue. It was a great comfort to come to the courtroom scene, which is at least straightforward, but I didn't like the idea of making the quality-of-mercy speech a speech. In the passage I say to Antonio, "Do you confess the bond?"

He says, "I do."

And I say, "Then must the Jew be merciful."

Shylock says, "On what compulsion must I? tell me that."

And instead of making a speech I merely answered his question very quietly, "The quality of mercy is not strain'd," and then proceeded, still very quietly as the speech went on, becoming more and more legal and developing the point that Portia was going to make.

It had a curious, overwhelming effect on the audience. I never heard such silence, and then a sort of gasp, much as to say, "Why that was the speech!"

Usually the audience is waiting for the speech and whispers it with Portia, especially the school children in the balcony at matinees. This time the audience was taken unaware and the speech was almost over before they realized it was beginning. Even the school children were dumb with surprise when they realized it, which was a great comfort to me.

Again there wasn't any play that I wanted to do, and so I went back into vaudeville in "The Twelve Pound Look," this time on a long tour during which I stayed in the same Kansas City hotel in which Sinclair Lewis lived while he was getting material for "Elmer Gantry." On the way to my apartment I would have to pass the open door of his room, which was always crowded with ministers of every denomination whom he was bullying in the hope, I suppose, of extracting something for his book. He would stride around the room pointing a finger at one of them after another and saying, "You know you don't believe in God."

They all seemed transfixed except one Irish Catholic priest who said, "Sit down, my son, and don't blaspheme."

That silenced Red for a moment. Then he said, "Will you have a drink, Father?"

"I will," said the priest.

Sometimes he would ask me in for a few nutes. That was where I met Burris Jenkins, Protestant minister, who had a radio audice of millions every Sunday. We became at friends, and I used to have dinner with n and Mrs. Jenkins. He asked me if I would me to hear him preach, and I said I wasn't pposed to do that but I would go to Mass t and then come.

So he sent his son, who was about seventeen, take me to Mass and then bring me to the vice at his church. It was very interesting, d, to me, utterly unlike church.

My next play was "The Constant Wife," by merset Maugham. We opened it in Cleveland, and on that first night my old sick agony of terror caught up with me at last. The devastating thing about it was that, although my mind was blank, I still knew what was happening. Even with George Cukor, the stage manager, hiding in the fireplace with the manuscript trying to prompt me, I couldn't remember some of my lines. The next day the Cleveland papers intimated that I didn't know them and suggested that a city as large and important as Cleveland deserved better treatment. But the point was that I did know my lines. I was letter perfect in them the following night, and I had been letter perfect at dress rehearsal. This one night was the only time that the old terror ever really overcame me.

When Maugham came backstage after the play, looking rather grim, I said, "I ruined your play tonight, but never mind. It's going to run two years."

And it did and more.

But Maugham was leaving the next day on his way to Japan and never saw it again.

AUBREY SMITH played with me in "The Constant Wife." One night in New York he came to my dressing room and asked me, "How long do you think the play is going to run?"

I said, "Forever, apparently. Why, Aubrey?"

"Because," he said, "I should really go home to see my dad."

I thought he himself was quite an old man. It required a lot of self-control to keep from laughing. He did go and we had to replace him for a while. I nearly died without him.

He was a great cricketer and when he was at Cambridge had played for England. When he was over eighty, he organized a cricket team among the English actors in Hollywood and played on it himself, appearing in striped blazer and flannels. He was a very much loved man.

The three years that I played in "The Constant Wife" were three of the ugliest years of the twenties, but the whole period was a period of ugliness, of ugly fashions, ugly manners, even ugly dances like the Charleston, and ugliest of all to me was the self-pity of the young "intellectuals" who were happy about being so sorry for themselves, so proud of being what they loved to call "the lost generation."

Of course it wasn't the generation that was lost but only a handful of unpleasant people, completely unlike the millions of sane, decent young men and women who had no time to be sorry for themselves because they were too busy at working and playing and living.

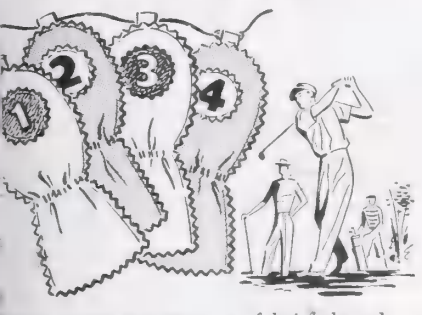
It was one of those people who for a while lifted all of us above the muddy sentimentality and defeatism of the age—a young man named Charles Lindbergh. I shall always remember what I saw and heard in Times Square on that afternoon when the news bulletins announced his safe arrival in Paris—the thousands of voices blending into one exultant cry, the shining brightness of self-forgetting triumph that was in every face. Most vividly I remember seeing it in the faces of two taxi drivers getting out of their cabs to throw their arms around each other.

I like to remember, too, one evening at Town Hall when a little colored girl named Florence Mills, wearing a short white dress, came out on the stage alone to sing a concert. She sang so beautifully; it was a great and thrilling experience.

Toward the end of the long, long run of "The Constant Wife" Zoë Akins, who was working for the Shuberts, came to me and told me that they wanted to build a theater and name it after me. They also had a play that I loved, "The Kingdom of God." So I went over to their management, they built the Ethel Barrymore Theatre and I opened it with "The Kingdom of God."

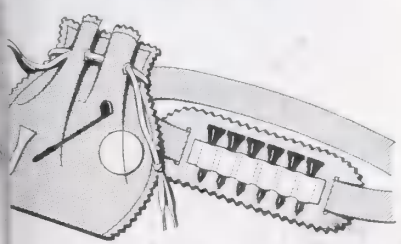
Percy Hammond wrote a nice thing about that theater. He said he was perfectly sure that Miss Barrymore would rather have it called the John Drew Theatre and he was so right!

I had known Percy and Florence Hammond when he was drama critic for the Chicago Tribune. I have always made a point of not knowing dramatic critics—I never really knew or liked Alec Woollcott until after he had stopped being one—but I alway loved Percy Hammond. He was a graceful, exquisite writer; the only American critic, I think, who wrote about the theater beautifully. Henry Mencken is the only other critic whom I would put way up, a mischievous oddity and brilliant, whom it was always a pleasure for me to see in Baltimore.



Percy should never have moved from Chicago to New York, where he was never happy. He and Florence had a little house at East Hampton, and once when I was staying with Uncle Jack I went to see them. It wasn't far so I walked. A big, colored woman opened the door and said: "No, they out."

I said, "Well, I'd like to leave a message for them. Will you tell them that Miss Barrymore ——"



She interrupted with a beautifully dismissing wave of her hand, said, "Oh, I never could remember that," and shut the door in my face. I could hear her laughing all the way back to her kitchen.

In "The Kingdom of God" I was a nun. In the first act I was a novice in a convent that took care of old men. In the second, I was twenty-nine, in a convent where bad girls came to have their babies; and in the last act I was seventy-two, the mother superior of an ifts to make for your "FAIRWAY" FAVORITE

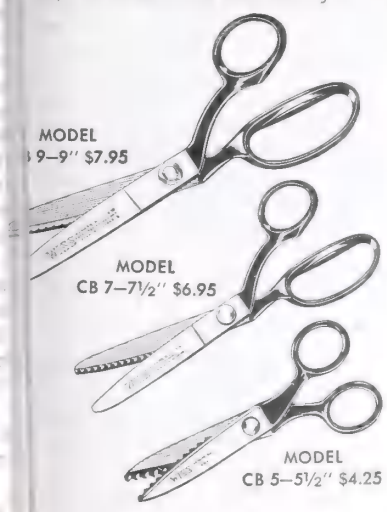
OLF CLUB MITTS . . . of brightly colred felt to protect the woods.

TEE BAG". . . drawstring felt bag with vo compartments to make tees and sunries easily available.

TEE CADDY". . . of felt, designed to slip n milady's belt, to hold her tees for ease d accessibility.



END 25¢ to Wiss, Dept. K50, for Pattern 126 including all items shown.

These Wiss Pinker Fashions are made so easily with nsidered indispensable by fine seamresses because they are the quality ears! For use on innumerable fabrics, ngle or several thicknesses to achieve a an finish that's decorative, and ravelsistant. Choose the Wiss pinkers that suit u best from the 3 sizes available. 5½" 9", $4.25 to $8.95. At notions departnts, better hardware and cutlery stores.

WISS

INKING SHEARS

ISS & SONS CO., Newark 7, N. J.

nufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Shears, Metal Cutting Snips and Garden Shears

At last THE NEW LOOK IN SEWING MACHINES

so advanced . . . so simple to use!

MORSE Zigzag AUTOMATIC gives magic eye visibility

MORSE Zigzag FOTOMATIC pictures the stitch . . . before you sew

MORSE Straight Stitch SUPER-DIAL has the visual fabric selector

Written Lifetime Guarantee

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

No trial-and-error methods when you use a Morse Sewing Machine! Simple, fool-proof controls give perfect results on straight or decorative stitching . . . WITHOUT ATTACHMENTS! It's MORSE for your money, whichever you choose: consoles or portable models.

Send for free booklet "How to Buy a Sewing Machine" and name of nearest dealer for free home demonstration.

MORSE SEWING MACHINE & SUPPLY CORP.

122 West 26th Street, New York 1, New York
2615 West Pico Blvd., Los Angeles, California

orphanage. I loved the play and so did everybody else. Then I did a worldly play called "The Love Duel" and alternated them on tour for eighty weeks. That was a wonderful experience because the two plays were so different. Louis Calhern played opposite me in "The Love Duel" and gave a magnificent performance. In "The Kingdom of God" I began to direct my plays. I used my own name, E.M. Blythe, because I wanted a break, and I got it. There was praise for the direction from many sources.

On the first night of "The Kingdom of God" in Chicago, when I went down the alleyway to the Harris Theatre, I saw a lot of men and couldn't imagine what they were doing there. When I asked, I was told that they were detectives in plain clothes who were surrounding the theater because there were going to be two gangs out in front.

There was a stagehand who I always insisted was in with the gangsters. I looked through a hole in the curtain and said to him, "I see your friend Al Brown in front."

"What do you mean?" he said.

I said, "Isn't that he?"

"Yes," he said, "but how did you know his name was Al Brown?"

I said, "I've heard that Al Capone calls himself Al Brown now and then."

As always, I could see everything that went on in the audience, and all through the play I could see Capone sitting there, holding his wife's hand, with the tears pouring down his face.

Other actors were threatened in Chicago to make them contribute to alleged charities, and some of them were beaten when they didn't pay, but I was never threatened. Word had evidently gone out to leave me alone.

When we played in Los Angeles, I stayed with Jack in Beverly Hills. I remember his coming down to see the first night and driving me back afterward. All the way he was very quiet. He didn't say much except the usual things about loving it all. When we got home his household was in bed—he was a bachelo at the moment, thank God! I always hav coffee after a performance, and we went t the kitchen to make it. When he had th coffee-making thing working, he suddenl turned to me and said very abruptly:

"Why don't they cough?"

I said, "Oh, you mustn't let them cough.

"What the hell do you mean?" he sai "They coughed in 'Hamlet.'"

I thought that was so endearing! I sai again, "You mustn't let them cough."

"What do you mean? You can't stop the from coughing."

"Yes, you can."

"How?"

"I don't know. You turn on number eig or number ten or whatever it is, and they ju don't cough."

They never coughed in "The Kingdom God."

I have always been able to do somethi that keeps the audience from coughing. don't know what it is. I don't think the voi has anything to do with it, but maybe it h You don't look at the cougher. You just kn that they must not cough. That's all.

That is one of the reasons why, after a pl you find that the thing you must do to audience has made you very tired. You fought ten rounds and you do it six night week and two matinees. I was always en mously conscious of the audience. If th seem slightly hostile, the job is to win th over and it is an extracurricular job. At end of such a day you just gradually let do the tension. No sleep right away, not for certainly. If there was somebody to talk fine. If not I would read into the night. I m well into the morning.

That time when we played "The Kingd of God" in Los Angeles was one of the times I really saw Jack after the tour "Sunday." I stayed with him for two we He was working all day on a movie, and I to leave for the theater about the time came home. I didn't like to keep him up w ing for me, but I did see him some when he wasn't working at the studio.

Working in films is a lazy man's existe compared with working in the theater wh if you're a star, there is a terrific responsibi You have to be always on top. You can' down for a moment, or everybody else down without knowing that he is doing i

As a matter of fact, it is rare that a perfo ance is missed because of the illness player. Women on the stage have to do a g deal of traveling but can never have a col a headache; you are carried onto the with a temperature, and that night you Missoula. Actresses are supposed to above all the natural ills of the human b and, by George, they do!

THAT's the truth behind that ridicu noble-sounding phrase, "The show mu on." The reason the show must go on is a lot of people will be hungry if it doesn' cause the theater will close and salaries

There is another phrase which I have al thought just as ridiculous—to say, of pl a role: "I was that person. I lost myself i part." You'd lose everybody. How woul give some poor wretched actor a cue curtain would have to come down an other actors, who were not lost, would every right to overpowering indignation

With some people acting is an insti thing and they get by with it. Sometim good. But the happy medium is a combi of the instinct and the mind.

Perhaps this is the place to add that when I go to the theater I remember the l lovely old-fashioned footlights and "Oh, God, give 'em back!" The man started modern lighting was Gordon Ellen Terry's son. Some of his ideas magnificent, but those who followed footsteps sometimes got so carried awa their imaginative brilliance that they much more interested in lighting a turr flight of steps than an actor's face, w have always felt was more important– least equal. Of course both things have sionally been accomplished by a genius luckily as much interested in the em

You and your children use less

Zymenol LAXATIVE

as regularity improves

Choice of Many Doctors

st laxatives lead to ative habit — a ger as great as con- ation. Soothing nenol, with de- asing dosage, ourages natural ularity . . helps ak harmful its. Keep pply on d.

icient

e

-11

for a Wealth of Health!

- Easy to take
- Sugar free
- Contains healthful brewers yeast
- Non-habit forming
- ECONOMY SIZE: $1.25

If you prefer handy tablets or tasty granules, ask for Zymelose . . . $2.

Your druggist is in business for your health. Buy from him.

S E. GLIDDEN & CO., INC., Waukesha 8, Wis.

e for facts about the dangers of constipation

Copyright 1955, Otis E. Glidden & Co., Inc.

play of an actor's face as in the beauties of a stone wall or a bit of Venetian brocade.

When "The Kingdom of God" closed, I went to Paris to meet Sister, who had been at school in Verona. We went to London where the boys joined us when their school term was over. The hotels were so crowded that Sister and I had to stay in one and the boys in another. The expense of it was using up all the money we had for the summer until I met Bobby Newton at a party and he said he had a little house that we could have for five pounds a week. It was off King's Road in Bywater Street, a tiny little house that just fitted us. It was perfectly charming.

Once when we were in London, I took Sammy and Jackie to lunch with the Winston Churchills. I remember how wonderful Winston was to them and how thrilled they were. And I remember taking Sister to that year's theatrical garden party—a wonderful opportunity for me to see, all together, many people I hadn't seen for years. All the stars had booths. I remember Gladys Cooper sitting at a small one, selling her own photographs and looking perfectly beautiful, and Tallulah Bankhead, running the treasure hunt and rushing over to take full charge of us. She asked us to wait till she was through at the booth and then come to her house and dine. So after we had seen Gerald du Maurier and all the other people I knew, we drove in Tallulah's beautiful Bentley to her charming flat in Farm Street, Berkeley Square, and dined there. She couldn't have been kinder or nicer to us all. It was truly a wondrous day.

I took the three children to lunch with Gerald and Muriel du Maurier at Hampstead.

There is no cure for birth or death save to enjoy the interval.

—SANTAYANA

The boys played tennis with Gerald's daughters, Daphne and Jean, and Gerald was so funny about their manners. He said, "Are all American children so well mannered?"

I said I hadn't noticed anything different about their manners.

The summer was a heavenly one for all of us. I was relaxed because I had settled on my play for the next season. It was "Scarlet Sister Mary." I had the manuscript with me and would occasionally look it over, studying it, and Sister would read it too.

One night in our stateroom on the Berengaria, coming back to New York, when I thought Sister was asleep, she suddenly said, "Mother, I don't want to come out."

I said, "Why not?"

"I want to go on the stage. I want to play Seraphine in 'Scarlet Sister Mary.'"

"Are you sure?" I said. I wasn't prepared for this at all. I had never thought she wanted to go on the stage, and everything had been arranged for her debut—orchestra, room at the Colony Club, everything.

She said, "Oh, yes, I'm sure. I've thought about it a lot."

She did play the part and she was perfectly lovely in it. My cousin, Georgie Mendum, was in it, too, and we played it all through that season in New York and on tour.

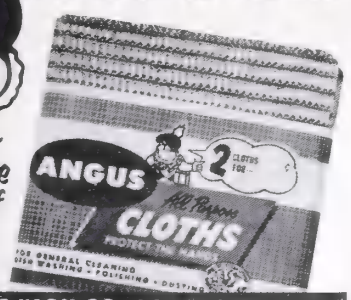
It was lovely having Sister in the company with me. There was a very special kind of happiness in seeing her so charming, so sure in her part. When she first came on the stage, smiling, it always seemed to radiate a glow to every corner of the theater.

Although I had loved "Scarlet Sister Mary," I thought it would be a wonderful contrast next fall to go back to the white-powdered wigs of "The School for Scandal," which also had a long run in New York and on tour.

The Winston Churchills came over to New York that winter and one afternoon, when Winston was walking up Park Avenue from the Waldorf on his way to Bernard Baruch's, he was hit by a taxicab and rather seriously injured. Before he lost consciousness he told the police that it was not the taxi driver's fault but his, that he had been thinking of

Corns Sore Toes, Tender Spots

NERVE-DEEP RELIEF!



Stops in CONDS!

aiting! Super- Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads stop pain at its almost instantly . . . remove corns one fastest ways known to medical science op corns before they can develop . . . ease or tight shoes . . . pre- sore toes, blisters. No method does all this! REE sample, write Dr. l's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

ANGUS

allpose h of 0
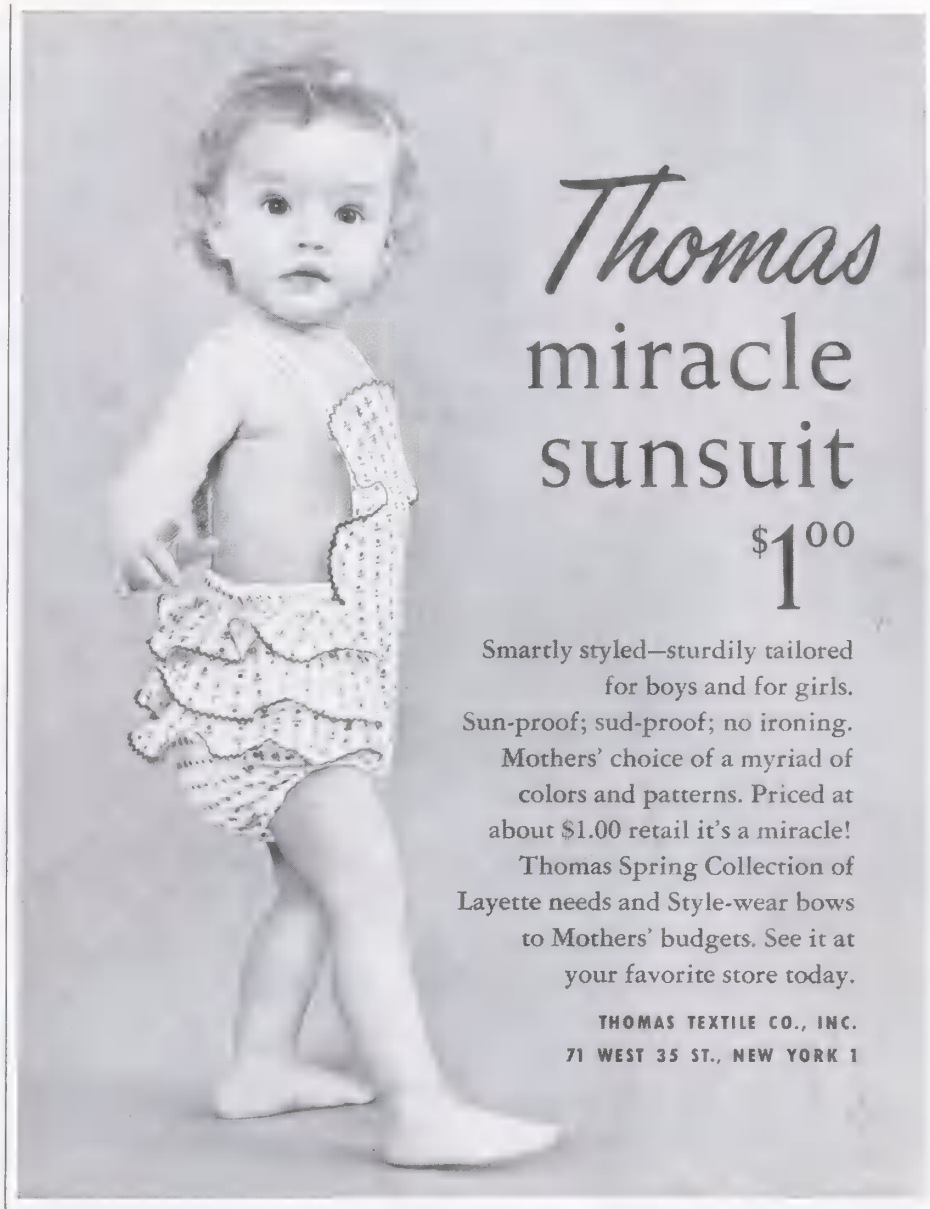
s!

REST YARN CO., LANSDOWNE, PA.

BRAIDED RUG MATERIAL

EXTRA HEAVY • FINEST QUALITY



100% WOOL

Make your own bright, colorful braided rugs. It's easy! It's fun! Finest quality woolens. 14 beautiful colors. . .precut strips. Buy direct and save! Write for

FREE SAMPLES and literature

BLOOMFIELD WOOLEN COMPANY

DEPARTMENT LHJ 555 • BLOOMFIELD, IND.

Thomas

miracle sunsuit

$1.00

Smartly styled—sturdily tailored for boys and for girls. Sun-proof; sud-proof; no ironing. Mothers' choice of a myriad of colors and patterns. Priced at about $1.00 retail it's a miracle! Thomas Spring Collection of Layette needs and Style-wear bows to Mothers' budgets. See it at your favorite store today.

THOMAS TEXTILE CO., INC.

71 WEST 35 ST., NEW YORK 1

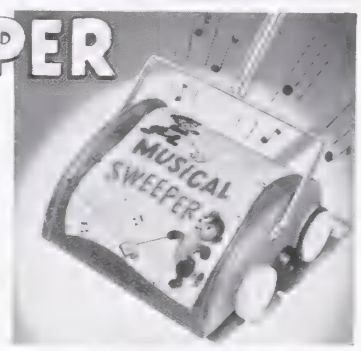
EARN MORE! Increase your earnings this year by forwarding new and renewal subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Better Farming, and Jack and Jill, and other popular publications. Generous commissions. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 908 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

FISHER PRICE'S TOY SWEEPER

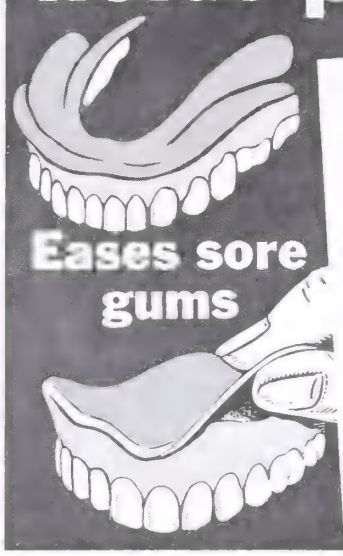
Sweepin' to Music! . . . it's FUN for Children 2-6

It actually sweeps . . . while playing a merry tune. An instructive, musical toy that's fun — and satisfies child's desire to "play grown-up". Wire bound brush of imported bristle, colorful steel cover, wood sides, 18½" handle. $2.00 east, $2.19 south and west. AT ALL TOY COUNTERS or direct.



FISHER PRICE TOYS

COMMENDED BY PARENTS MAGAZINE



FISHER-PRICE TOYS, INC.

EAST AURORA, N. Y.

Send for folder #45 of 23 Safe Wood Push n' Pull Toys for healthful, active play.

New soft plastic holds plates tighter

Eases sore gums

Cushions the mouth yet grips plates like "Living Tissue"!

Now, quickly relieve sore gums due to loose fitting plates with new SNUG Denture Cushions. Amazing soft plastic grips plate firm and tight yet feels soft and comfortable, like "Living Tissue." Gums feel wonderful. You eat, talk, laugh in comfort. SNUG stays cushion-soft. Can't harden and ruin plate. Peels right out when ready to replace. Tasteless, odorless, cleaned in a jiffy. No more daily bother with "stickums". Get Denture Cushions called SNUG for real plate comfort! Complete set of two cushions for both uppers and lowers $1.50. Money-back if not satisfied. At all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1.50 check or money order to Midland Pharmacal Corp., Dept. 49, 45 W. 45th St., New York 36, N. Y.

something else and hadn't realized that he wasn't in England where cars would have been coming from the other side.

In the hospital, as soon as he had recovered from the first shock, he began to write an article entitled "My New York Misadventure" which he sold to a syndicate for $2500! I went to see him as soon as he came back from the hospital to the Waldorf and he said, "You know, Ethel, I have a terrible past."

I think he was thinking about the time he left the Conservative Party and for a few years was a Liberal. He was always chiding himself like that, more or less humorously.

At the end of the regular season I was asked to play "The School for Scandal" in summer stock, bringing only a few members of the company. I said I would accept only on condition that my whole company came with me. On these terms we played through the whole summer season of sixteen weeks.

In the fall there was again no play that I wanted to do and again I went back into vaudeville with "The Twelve Pound Look" until the following spring, when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who had decided to make a picture called "Rasputin and the Empress," wanted Lionel and Jack and me to act in it together and I was delighted with the idea.

When I came out they told me to leave the train at Pasadena to avoid the photographers and newsmen, which I did. And of course all the photographers and newsmen were there. And so was Jack, whom I hadn't seen for two or three years.

He put his cheek against mine and embraced me and I am sure all the reporters and photographers thought he was telling me how wonderful it was to see me again, but what he was really muttering into my hair was "For God's sake, get Bill Daniels."

I knew I would learn, later, the meaning of this remark and I waited till the photographers had finished and we were in the car. Then I said:

"Who is Bill Daniels?"

"He's a cameraman," Jack said, "the best one in the world. He takes all those sweetbreads away from under my eyes. Garbo won't make a picture without him."

I said, "But, Jack, I wouldn't even know how to go about getting him."

He said, "You're new out here. You ask for him and you'll get him."

So I did ask Irving Thalberg for him and we did get him.

MAKING "Rasputin" with Lionel and Jack was one of the very few times all three of us were together after our early childhood days, but I hardly saw them except at the studio. When you're making a picture, you don't have time to see people and I was in Hollywood only for that picture.

It was great fun to be with them, of course, and I saw them at the studio as often as I could, which unfortunately wasn't too often, as there wasn't much time for anything except work, especially as the script was written day by day on the set, sometimes on the backs of old envelopes. Often I would learn a scene and then find that I would have to learn an entirely new one after I was on the set.

I had always been terrified of microphones and I was more terrified than ever when Lionel said to me, "The first thing to remember is that the microphone is right here," and he held his hand over his head—not very far over it.

When you speak in the theater, you know they have to hear you in the back row of the gallery. You speak very quietly but you make them hear you. It is a very different technique from that of the movie microphone, as different as violin and piano.

And, incidentally, I have always felt that one of the most important things about acting is listening. Sometimes it is more important than speaking.

Of course there was no truth in the nonsensical publicity stories about quarrels between us that were put out while we were making the picture. We were all actors, w ing at a job; and besides, we didn't know other well enough to quarrel. You mus member that we were always very frigh ingly polite to each other. Scene stealin tween Lionel and Jack was just a joke. did it for fun.

The only thing I quarreled with was parts of the story which I didn't think sh be done. After I left they were done, an company was sued because of them and to pay heavy damages.

THE children had come out with me agent had rented a house for us in Be Hills, an enormous one complete with t courts and swimming pool which I hardly saw, although I would hear the child voices coming from them when I came dead tired from the studio.

The Olympic Games were held in Angeles while we were making "Rasp and I managed to get to the opening day see the March of Nations. It was all ver pressive, but the most impressive thing a it, I regret to say, was the Italians. They all in black. They moved as one person a they passed the Presidential Box and gav Fascist salute, it was as if one arm wen It was a terrific sight, and curiously en not ominous.

That was the only day on which I cou to the games because I had to be a studio, but Russell came out and tool children every day came to dinner every

I remember going t "première" of a pi the first one I had ever This one in the midd the depression was ver ferent from those t had heard and read a when the bystanders plauded the people drove by them in big This time there was n plause. The onlooke the sidewalks were and sullen as people ing furs and jewels rode by them in th cars. It was a very uncomfortable experi

After "Rasputin" I came back to New to do "Encore," soon renamed "An Am Career," by Arthur Hopkins. It was a amusing play about an opera singer wh progressively younger as the play goes o marries and marries and marries. Whe is about to marry for the last time, sh pears in a white organdy dress with a sash. It was a very funny play, but ther nothing funny about the depression in we were doing it, the bad days when wasn't any money except scrip, which good only where it was issued. Finally, we were in Chicago, and the Govern ordered all banks to close, there wasn' money at all, and although the play had doing very well, we had to close it.

That next year was a bad and harro time, the only year after I first went o stage when I was not at work. I did summer stock in "The Constant Wife," otherwise we stayed at Mamaroneck.

Late in the winter, when I went to Lo and played "The Twelve Pound Look the Palladium for a week, an astou thing happened. They didn't like the They hated it! They said it was old-fashio I don't know what they didn't say abou had banked on it for so many years. thought it was practically a classic, and a shock to discover that as far as Englan concerned its day was past.

I came back to Mamaroneck for the su and in the autumn I played in "L'Aiglon" Eva Le Gallienne. Sister had the pa Fanny Ellsler, the dancer, and althoug was over nineteen, she went through the ful process of taking ballet lessons in or make her entrance on the points of her It was beautifully done, but nobody noticed. They just took it for granted th could walk on her toes. That always gave pain around my heart. There were so times in my life when there have been around my heart! In fact when I began to Anyone who proposes to do good must not expect people to roll stones out of his way, but must accept his lot calmly if they even roll a few more upon it.

—ALBERT SCHWEITZER: Out of My Life and Thought (Henry Holt & Co., Inc.)

is book, every now and then I thought of lling it "So Many Tears," but I decided at this would be rather a melancholy title d also I had managed through the years to am up the tears.

I never realized then that she was to become mething new in our family—a wonderful nger. She was the only private pupil Maggie eyte ever took in America, and she has gone to a long and successful career of most autiful singing in concert and opera. Her ice has extraordinary range and she uses it ith magnificent artistry. And she has been ually successful in her private career of arriage and motherhood.

Both of my sons, too, have helped to make e happy. Jackie has been happily married r fourteen years to Marjorie Dow, of Boston, d they live in the Mamaroneck house. And don't know how I could manage without mmy, who adds so much to my comfort, ing out here with me and looking after my fairs.

After "L'Aiglon" I couldn't find a play I anted to do and, except for twenty-six weeks nen I did a radio series, there were some lean nes. I enjoyed working in radio. A manuript is such a lovely thing to lean against. ater I was to find that I liked working in evision too. They are learning to do so any interesting things with it.

There were some good times, too, in those mmers when I went to stay with Eleo Sears Prides' Crossing and with that lovely, owing creature, Katharine Cornell, at artha's Vineyard, and at Sands Point with erbert and Margaret Swope. I still go to see erbert and Margaret if they are at Sands int when I am in the East; our friendship s gone on through all the years and I am erly devoted to them both.

HE plays I most enjoyed doing were déclassée," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," he Constant Wife" and "The Corn is een." Such plays seldom come along. After lean times I played briefly for the Theatre ild in "The Ghost of Yankee Doodle," by ney Howard.

During that engagement I read in a newsper that Lionel, who had been making a vie in England, was in New York on his y to Hollywood. I called him up and asked, itely as always, if I could come to see him. He said, just as politely, "No, I'll come to you."

When he came, he told me about having n "Whiteoaks" in London. He said that it s an amusing play with an amusing part t for me and I ought to get hold of it. That ne evening an English producer named ne Jennings called up and said, "I've got rights of a play called 'Whiteoaks.' Do mind playing a woman of a hundred two?"

said, "I'd be perfectly delighted. That's what I feel."

o I played a woman of 102 all that season New York, for part of the summer in stock all the next season on tour.

uring that tour I often hired a car to take from one city to the next instead of going rain. It was good to see the country and to the clean air. In Montana I remember ing between pines as high on one side as uld see and stretching far below me on the r, and between them the road covered frozen snow and nothing else, just the trees and the road. A tire went and when stopped to change it, I said to the driver, better get out and walk up and down to warm."

did. I looked up and looked down. It was being alone in the world, and then, suddy, I saw a very small sign, so small that I d hardly see it. It said: CONTINENTAL DE. I will never forget those black pines that white snow, the most beautiful sight r saw!

here is another day that remains in my mory, when I was to play a summer-stock gement in Maine. I had been playing in on and had my own car and Britt, my ffeur. We left Boston early Sunday morndriving through Massachusetts, Vermont New Hampshire on the way to Bangor. extraordinary thing was that, without seesignpost, without anyone telling us what state we were in, we knew. The Green Mountains of Vermont, the White Mountains of New Hampshire and the Maine landscape all were unmistakable.

Again the shadows were deepening over the world, and this time they were too visible to be ignored or misunderstood. I had been living under them so long that there was no shock of disbelieving amazement when, early one September morning, without knowing why I did it, I reached out to turn on my radio and heard the tired, tragic voice of Chamberlain announcing that England was again at war.

Again, as it had been for me in the first war, work was a blessed necessity. In "The Farm of Three Echoes," a play about Boer people in South Africa, I played a woman of 97, and I loved doing it. We opened in Princeton and played Washington and Baltimore before coming to New York, and a member of the psychiatric department at Johns Hopkins wrote me that my performance was "the most magnificent portrayal of senility" they had ever seen. I was slightly startled but delighted.

In the spring I played in "An International Incident," by Vincent Sheean. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed it and he was fun to work with, but it was a light play, quite different from the serious one the title and the author's name and the state of the world led people to expect, and it had only a short run.

I found some solace for the downfall of France in the splendor of spirit with which the people of England turned that terrible defea into the triumph of Dunkirk, and in their turning, at last, to the leader whose vision had never been deceived, whose courage never faltered. I think I knew, even when it was hard to hope and impossible to believe, that my dear friend Winston Churchill's promise of blood and sweat and toil and tears was an even surer promise of victory.

You get wonderful softness and strength combined in gentle Soft-Weve

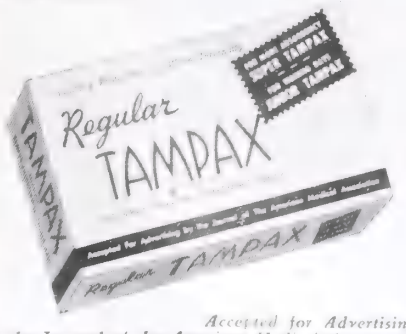
Family and Guests
both appreciate this new kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. Nowadays thoughtful hostesses and homemakers provide this new kind of tissue. Soft-Weve is just as gentle as your facial tissue because it's made the same way.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong . . . Soft-Weve is so gently soft—wonderfully strong, too. This is truly luxurious tissue, but a luxury everyone can afford . . . Soft-Weve is another great Scott value.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

for goodness sake



ask

You know someone who uses Tampax internal sanitary protection — of course you do!

Ask her about it. Ask her all the questions in the whole, wide world. Ask her everything that's been puzzling you, keeping you back from using the really modern form of protection.

Ask her if it isn't as comfortable as everyone says. Ask her if she doesn't find Tampax easy to insert, change and dispose of. Ask her about absorbency. Ask her if she doesn't honestly feel freer now that she's using Tampax. Listen when she tells you what it's like to get rid of the belt-pin-pad harness, never, ever to worry again about chafing or irritation.

Tampax is willing to rest its entire case on what other women tell you. If you want to ask your doctor — fine! Just remember: Tampax was invented by a doctor. Millions of women have used billions of Tampax! Why should you have any doubts about it?... At drug or notion counters in choice of 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Month's supply goes into purse. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Massachusetts.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Herman Shumlin had secured the American rights of "The Corn is Green," and asked me to read it. When he came to the Colony Club to talk to me about it, I said, "You can't be Stanislavskyish about this. It's a simple play about a simple Englishwoman with the gift of teaching, who gets a wonderful chance."

He looked a little startled that anybody should have an opinion about anything, but he controlled his apparent amazement and we came quickly to an agreement.

The play and I were instant and terrific successes, and believe me, it was high time for that success. It came at a crucial moment in my life and made all the difference.

Perhaps out of that success I drew the strength of spirit I needed to bear, for the second time, the sudden nearness of a war that had seemed far away. For me this war came very near, for Sammy enlisted immediately after Pearl Harbor and before long Jackie, too, was in uniform. There is no comfort for a woman whose sons have gone to war, but the next best thing is to have, as I had it through those heavy years, the blessing of hard work.

"The Corn is Green," after fourteen months in New York, ran for two years more on tour, a tour in which, after having played every city in the country, we went straight back and played exactly the same cities over again.

During the tour Mr. Piazza, of RKO, got on the train at Portland, Oregon, and asked me to read the script of a moving picture, "None But the Lonely Heart," on my way to San Francisco. I read it that night and in the morning when Mr. Piazza came to my stateroom and asked me how I liked it, I said I liked it very much but it would be impossible for me to do it, as I had to finish the tour.

He said, "We know all about that. All we want to know now is, do you like the part well enough to play it? If you do we will make the necessary arrangements with Mr. Shumlin."

I said, "That will be very nice," and dismissed the matter from my mind as a fantasy. But while we played San Francisco and Los Angeles, the necessary arrangements were made, and they were fantastic.

RKO agreed to pay all the company's salaries during the time I was making the picture, to reimburse Mr. Shumlin for all the receipts that would have been taken in, during that time, by the theaters where the play had been booked, and to reimburse the theaters for all cancellations and for the money they would have made!

I liked the picture and I liked Clifford Odets, who directed it, and David Hempstead, who produced it, and Cary Grant, who was my son. And of course it was very pleasant later to get the Oscar. The very last day I worked was when I died in the prison. The make-up man walked over to my dressing room with me when it was over and he said, "I feel very silly. I had the menthol stuff all ready to make you cry and when I saw tears gushing out of your eyes and pouring down your cheeks, I really did feel pretty silly."

I finished the picture at noon and I was on the train to go back to "The Corn is Green" at one o'clock.

ONE of the things that I seem to remember clearly about that long, long tour in "The Corn is Green" is the little boys—infants—in uniform, saying good-by to their mothers and their girls at railroad stations. And the stars in the windows of the little shacks beside the track—there were four gold stars in the window of one house that you couldn't believe had more than one room in it. The first war had been different; then it was bands marching along Fifth Avenue, cheers, and doughnuts.

More clearly I remember an afternoon at the Colonial Theatre in Boston. I was waiting in my dressing room after a matinee—I often used to have food brought to me in the theater between a matinee and the evening performance instead of going out to dinner—when they brought me word from the box office that Lionel was calling me from California.

I knew it must be something very important. As I ran back of the boxes toward the front of the house, I fell and broke a bone in my ankle and I didn't know it until after I had got to the box office, and Lionel had told me that Jack was dead.

When I started back, I couldn't walk. I had the ankle strapped up and managed to get through the play that evening, but I had to spend the next two nights in a hospital.

Although I saw very little of Jack during our lives, I still miss him every day, as I did when I wrote to Alec Woollcott:

> I am feeling—as I am sure you know—laid low. So many memories of my little brother, so long ago, when we were all so young and knew and expected so little, and it didn't matter.

After "The Corn is Green" when I was playing in Franz Werfel's "Embezzled Heaven" I got pneumonia and almost died. Perhaps I ought to have died, when everybody was saying such nice things about me. There was one editorial in The New York Times that was so wonderful I simply had to know who wrote it. So I asked Herbert Swope to find out for me and he said, "I'm glad to know you read it. I was going to send it to you." And he did find out that it was Brooks Atkinson who wrote the editorial. It was Brooks Atkinson, too, who said, about my performance in "The Corn is Green," "Let's stop quibbling and just call it a masterpiece!"

After I was well somebody told me that one night those electric signs that scamper around

PHIL BURCHMAN

Miss Barrymore rehearses script for radio program "Suspense," with Gene Kelly.

the Times building had said, all in one breath:

GENERAL MAC ARTHUR LANDS AT LEYTE ETHEL BARRYMORE'S TEMPERATURE LOWER

When I was well enough to travel, the doctor sent me down to Hot Springs, where it snowed all the time I was there.

To her great happiness—and mine—Sister had become engaged to Romeo Miglietta, a charming Italian, an engineer, who had spent most of his life in England and America. He was able to leave his work for a short time just after I went to Hot Springs and Sister thought it would be wonderful to be married then and spend their honeymoon at Hot Springs while I was there. And so to my happy thankfulness they did.

That pneumonia was the second of the only two important illnesses I have had in my long life in the theater, a life which makes demands on physical strength that kill many, many people very young.

My next play was Philip Barry's "The Joyous Season," in which again I had the part of a nun. I did not bring it to New York. I loved it and did not want it to be buffeted, so I closed it at the end of the run in Chicago.

I had had pneumonia; I was suddenly getting lots of colds; I decided it might be better for me to pursue the sun of Southern California, so out I came and began to make motion pictures. Then I decided to make California my home and keep on making pictures. It wasn't as strenuous as the theater. I had given fifty years to the theater and felt that I had done my bit; and besides, lately, in the theater in New York, I had come to feel a little as if I were Ruth amid the alien corn. And, incidentally, in all the years I have never ceased to miss Mr. Frohman.

When I first came to California to live I ha a tiny little house on Laurel Canyon Drive perched on a hill—just a one-person house There was no room even for a maid. The Sammy joined me and I began looking for larger place.

Zoë Akins said one day, "Have you eve been to Palos Verdes?"

I said, "I never even heard of it."

We drove out there and, all of a sudden, was entirely different from any other place i Southern California where I had been. place of magical beauty. Ahead of us on th road I saw a house with a high brick wall en tirely covered with a blaze of climbing ge raniums—pale mauve, pale pink, coral, whit They seemed to be every color and the ne color you saw was the blue, blue sea. A b man was standing at the gate.

"Do you mind if we stop a minute just admire the flowers?" I asked.

He said, "No. Have you come to look the house?"

It was for rent! We went in and I took

THE house was surrounded by trees, wi one huge willow, and beautiful flowers, a pe fectly lovely place. From my bedroom u stairs there was a big, wide balcony. I used sit out there, looking across the who Pacific Ocean—at China. (Of course, what was really looking at on days when it wasn hazy was Catalina.)

When guests from England and other fo eigners came they couldn't understand wh anyone lived anywhere else. Lionel came lunch one day, took one look at the house a said, "Well, Mrs. Doheny!"

It was not a palazzo, but it did have a bea tiful view. Elsie de Wolfe said it was too f out for her to come to lunch, but her husban Sir Charles Mendl, came and told me the pla was beautiful. Finally Elsie heard so mu about it that she decided to see it for herse So she came and I said:

"Charles says this place is like the south France."

Elsie said, "Not at all! Capri."

The house was not too far out for me b everyone else thought it was, and so we fina left it after four years for Pacific Palisades

In California I soon found that you so many nice people with widely differing terests. Aldous Huxley, Thomas Mann, A tur Rubinstein and Horowitz live here becau they find it restful and like the outdoor li Bob Hutchins, a great friend of mine, is he now, too, and Christopher Isherwood a Gerald Heard. Friends from all parts of t world keep arriving, stopping on their w here and there.

It is always pleasant to hear from Wal Hampden when he comes out to do a pictu The last two times he brought Mabs, his wi with him and she's sweet too.

Then there are the old friends: Geor Cukor, who, of all the people who ha achieved great success and wealth in Hol wood, is unchanged; he is just the same pers he was when he was getting $50 a week, just kind, just as amusing and just as good a frie of mine; there is Charlie Brackett, too, wh I had known for years in New York, a Elizabeth, his wife, a great person; Mildr and Edwin Knopf, two fine people; and i always pleasant when Katharine Hepburn here.

New friends too. I was in a west-s market, ordering things for the house, a suddenly saw a man sauntering along, eat an apple.

He said, "Hello, Miss Barrymore."

"Hello, Mr. Crosby," I said.

We sort of grinned at each other and waved the hand holding the apple. " lunch."

That was the way we met and that was end of the conversation. My children and I been mad about Bing Crosby from the day his earliest records and we had them all. a Five and Ten Cent Store" and all the r

When I met his wife, Dixie, for the first t I was enchanted by her. It was only a months before her illness and she gave a s prise birthday party for Bing—and it re was a surprise. He is probably the only son in Hollywood for whom you could ha

CONTINUED ON PAGE 200

1955

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

A Breck Shampoo helps bring out the soft, natural beauty of your hair. Hair tends to be dry, oily or normal. There is a Breck Shampoo for each of these different hair conditions. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. You will enjoy using a Breck Shampoo because it is mild and gentle in action and not drying to the hair. The Breck Shampoo for your individual hair condition leaves your hair soft, lustrous and fragrant.

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

Copyright 1955 by John H. Breck Inc.

H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

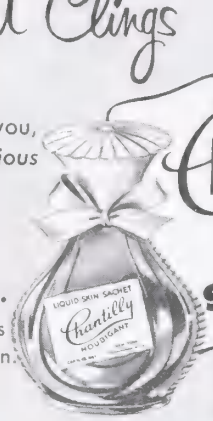
Sensational Discovery!

NOW...

AN EXCITING NEW KIND OF



"Perfume that Clings"

If perfume doesn't "stay" with you, or if you're looking for a luxurious fragrance to use everyday . . . this revolutionary creamy-pink perfume is the answer!

HOW TO APPLY...

Every morning, smooth a few drops over the pulse-points of your skin.

With each pulse-beat, the deep warmth of your body brings the fragrance to life . . .

Chantilly
LIQUID
SKIN SACHET*

YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF
to try "The Perfume That Clings"
$1.85 plus tax

And far into the evening, your skin will still yield the lovely fragrance of Chantilly . . .

Originated by

Comp'd in U. S.

HOUBIGANT

*New! E-longé

the only stretch-sheer stockings with famous fit-perfecting
"Magic Motion" originated by Mojud®

Remember . . . there's lovely lingerie by Mojud, too. At fine stores everywhere.
For name of nearest store write MOJUD CO., INC., New York 16, New York

* Patent Applied For

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 198

surprise party. He had been at the studio all day, and came home and found 250 people at the house.

Dixie looked so pretty, so young and attractive. At first I thought she was blond and then, when I saw her under the lights of the dance floor, I realized that her hair was silver.

When I played in a picture with Bing it was one of the most charming experiences I have had in the movies. He is so relaxed, so nice, just being around him is heaven.

Hollywood is a fairly make-believe place with distinct sets of people. Whether these sets are influenced by money, or by snobbery, who knows? But there they are. I don't think it's true to say that, because of Hollywood, people with real talent have been lost to the theater. Nobody is lost to the theater unless he wants to be. And if he wants to be lost, let him.

There are as many different kinds of people in Hollywood as there are in other parts of the world. And that is diverting. Even the extremes are diverting.

For example, there was the woman of, shall we say, very small beginnings (there is nothing at all wrong with small beginnings) who went to a luncheon. Afterward, describing the dining-room table, she raised her hands in horror. "My dear, they had commercial silver!"

Once my brother Jack stopped one of the magnates who was screaming at him and shaking a finger in his face. Jack said, "Put that finger down. I remember when it had a thimble on it."

Some of the Hollywood sets keep more or less to their own group, never seeing anyone else, but this is no different from other places. I remember the Philadelphia Main Liners who always used to take a ducal shooting lodge in Scotland in summer, taking with them the very same people they saw every day at home. (One friend of mine who usually went on these shooting parties was living for a time in a hotel in Philadelphia and decided late at night to take a bath. He was enjoying himself, singing lustily in the tub, when a call came from downstairs that the people in the next room were protesting that they couldn't sleep. "Tell them to read," said the Philadelphian.)

Working in motion pictures is very much easier than working in the theater. Since there is no audience, there is not that incessant, demanding awareness that the whole thing hangs on you. You don't need to keep them from coughing.

WHAT I minded about my brothers' coming to Hollywood was that I felt it was such a loss for the public. Jack and Lionel had both been superb in the theater. To think that Jack could be the great Hamlet and then to see him in endless "Something Loves" was distressing. I always longed to see him play "Richard II." I don't think he was ever satisfied. I don't think yachts and swimming pools make up for other things. Perhaps he always had a feeling that Mummum was looking down, disapprovingly. There was a great bond there.

In California one of my pleasant experiences was going with Somerset Maugham to see the movies in the different projection rooms when he came to do some supervising on the writing of the script for "The Razor's Edge." He stayed at George Cukor's house and, while there, as he always does, he started writing every morning at eight o'clock and kept at it for four hours. He has become a warmer person than when I first knew him—I feel it is a real privilege to have become a friend of his.

People kept trying, of course, to get me to go back to the theater. Once when they wanted me to play "The Mad Woman of Chaillo the pressure was so high that I went to Ph nix, Arizona, to escape it. Nobody kn where I was going but I was no sooner in the door when the telephone rang and De Liagre was asking to speak to Miss Ba more. But I didn't yield to either pressure persuasion. I liked Mr. De Liagre enormou and I thought the play had brilliance, b just didn't want to do it and I didn't.

I WENT back to New York for the birth my daughter's baby, and Britt, who had sa the steps of the porch at Mamaroneck w Sister was being born upstairs, drove Si and her baby and me home from the hosp

I have always been happy that I had children at home.

Every now and then I go back to New Y to see Sister and the baby. Once when American National Theatre Academy he I was coming, they asked me to do " Twelve Pound Look" at their annual ber and I said I would.

For years I had been carrying on the s typewriter in the play, a small light one, Eddie McHugh, my stage manager, had it to his home in So Dakota so ANTA prov one for the performa

It weighed 9000 pou when I came on the s carrying it. The whole dience stood up. The plause lasted over five utes and that is a l long time for applaus last. And do you k what happened to that g heavy typewriter du those five minutes? It lighter and lighter, a just tossed it on the t

After the play there many, many curtain c I was always much too to make curtain spee but this night I felt th must at least say th you and I added, " make it very tempting.

Except for those few neys back to see Siste Johnny and my you son, Jackie, I have kep living in California, ma motion pictures and s times appearing on television and radi have always hoped that I could int someone in Hollywood in making the Bo Ruth. Instead of making spectacular Bib pictures, I wanted them to make a spec larly simple Biblical picture which would b Book of Ruth, where the principal exp would be two donkeys and a sickle. T is even a love story there.

For several years at Easter I read the sion Story from St. Matthew on the Fa Hour for Father Peyton. It always brough thousands of letters from Protestants as as Catholics.

And once after I was no longer doin readings, I happened accidentally to tur my radio one Sunday in spring, just in ti hear myself reading that Easter story- only time, I think, that I have ever hea recording of my voice. Oh dear!

I have never seen any of the motion tures in which I have appeared. When p ask me why, I laugh and say, "Oh, let me my dream."

It seems strange that one's memory in years should turn more toward things tha far in the past, that things which happ fifty years ago seem nearer and more rea more important than those which happ yesterday.

Looking back, I discover, rather to astonishment and disappointment, that I never been able to bear malice toward body, although there have been plenty o portunities for it.

For me there are some autumn memor clear and bright as any remembrance of sp One is of the day when New York Univ gave me an honorary degree. There thousands and thousands of graduates s on the grass on the hillside as far as th

CHINESE PROVERBS

If you fear that people will know, don't do it.

Fuel is not sold in the forest, nor fish on the shore of a lake.

One dog barks at something, and a hundred bark at the sound.

Better go home and make a net than dive into a pool after a fish.

He who wants to know himself should offend two or three of his neighbors.

ld see. When I was given my degree, they stood up. In the sunlight, wearing the erent-colored hoods and tassels of their ious arts and sciences, they looked like a d of flowers.

And the other, and the best one of all, is of seventieth birthday.

Under the auspices of the Academy of tion Picture Arts and Sciences, of which is president, my old, dear friend, Charles ckett, arranged and presided over a nation-e broadcast in which my friends, old and , said things about me for all the country ear—and for me to hear.

cannot think of any better way to end the y of my life than to share, with those who e been sharing in my sorrows and my re-ings, as they read this book, the last, deep piness of coming suddenly upon this un-pected image of myself as others see me. f to share this happiness seems like vanity, n sorry; it is not in vanity but in humblest nkfulness that I am offering to share it.

o share the sound of Bing Crosby's voice, ging "Happy Birthday." . . .

o listen with me as President Truman says: am here to pay tribute for myself and for ntless of my fellow countrymen to a great and a great artist. I have seen her in most er roles, and I am eternally indebted to her the pleasure she has given me. To Ethel rymore, first lady of the American stage, ny happy returns of the day." . . .

o hear the dear, remembered voices of a dred other friends, each bringing its own o of that birthday message from all the ers of the earth. . . .

nd Mr. Herbert Hoover saying: "Miss rymore needs no introduction to the erican people, nor is she in need of any ression of appreciation. But her millions riends will grasp this opportunity to join ne occasion of expressing their gratitude admiration for America's greatest artist, our country has been greatly blessed by superlative artistry. We are proud that she n American. We are proud not only of a t artist, but of a great woman whose whole s an expression of the very best in Amer-womanhood." . . .

nd Katharine Hepburn saying, as only voice could say it: "In 1901 John Singer ent made a drawing of Ethel Barrymore. ings over her mantel today, an extraordi-y beautiful girl with a long throat and , proud eyes.

uch portraits can be infinitely saddening a century later. Believe me when I tell this one is stopped in its tracks by the l Barrymore who stands beneath it. The it hair is gray, of course, but time has something measured and magnificent to eatures, and the spirit which looks out the dark upslanted eyes is identical. t am I talking about? It's more vital, vigorous. The woman is breath-taking.

HE has more friends than anyone I know, he's not a dear, gentle soul. Barrymores come like that. She has a trenchant wit, an rebuke stupidity or intolerance with e better than Joe Louis could do it with sts. She makes appallingly accurate ob-tions. She doesn't know the meaning of or the meaning of caution." . . .

d Arthur Hopkins telling about the y tradition and inheritance and Lionel, memories of Mummum and of our father nother and Uncle Jack. . . .

d Lucile Watson remembering: "I hadn't Ethel Barrymore in my first year on the dway stage in 1903, but I received a tele-of good wishes on my opening night the great young star. I still have that pre-telegram. . . . I saw all those wonderful of hers, and was in several of them. And her I learned an important lesson in acting: thousands came nightly to be thrilled r magnetic voice, I was watching some-else—the way she listened to the speeches fellow players—and I thank her now for nowledge I have of what is perhaps the st art of an actor—the art of beautiful ng." . . .

d Katharine Cornell: "Dear Ethel, even h the movies may claim you, as well they , you continue to be all that is most rous in the theater; and no matter how many birthdays you insist on celebrating in the wilds of Hollywood, you still remain Broadway's most bewitching star. God bless you, darling." . . .

And Billie Burke: "The first time I met you, Ethel darling, was in London, in 1906. You were crossing the lobby of the Carleton on your way to some ducal dinner party. You were wearing a wonderfully simple black diaphanous chiffon dress, and from the very way you walked, I knew that beautiful up-turned face must be the lost face of the Winged Victory. . . . The following year Mr. Frohman brought me to New York to be the leading lady with your Uncle John Drew. There was difficulty, however. John Drew thought Billie an undignified name for his leading lady. Perhaps he thought I should expand it to Wilhelmina. I didn't want to, but I had no idea how to win my point. Mr. Frohman had asked you to take me to our first rehearsal, to break the ice, and you did, and by your magic I remained Billie. . . . Happy birthday, Ethel." . . .

And Alfred Lunt: "I come in about here, Ethel, by virtue of having fallen in love with you as an enterprising boy of fourteen, when I saw you in 'Her Sister' in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Bless those tours that gave you to the whole United States." . . .

And Tallulah Bankhead: "I'm sorry, darlings, but 'Déclassée' is my cue. I'm the all-time authority on 'Déclassée.' I saw Ethel Barrymore play Lady Helen Hayden thirteen times. Just up from Alabama and suffering from economic cramps more often than not, I saw it from a perpendicular stance at the rear of the theater. Ethel Barrymore was then forty, with eighteen years of stardom behind her.

"At forty I thought that she was the most exciting actress, the most vivid personality I had ever seen on the stage. The lapse of thirty years has not changed that juvenile conviction. At seventy I still think that Ethel Barrymore is

Dried-out "detergent hands"—Angel Skin is the only leading lotion with this formula that neutralizes the harsh alkali effect of today's strong detergents

New Revolutionary Lotion

Quickly heals Detergent chapping

Scientifically years ahead . . . instant "corrective" softening

Not just another "cosmetic" lotion! Angel Skin by Pond's is "medically-matched" to the skin's own softening lubricants. Smooth on Angel Skin—it acts at once to heal hands dried and roughened by detergents.

New Angel Skin instantly restores certain important substances your hands lose when they're in detergent suds—substances that doctors call "hydrogen ions*." Of all leading lotions, only new Angel Skin has this formula that counteracts the harsh alkaline effect of today's detergents. It softens deep, deep down. Now—see this rich, healing lotion smooth and whiten your hands. Get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin today!

ANGEL SKIN'S exclusive skin-softening lubricants contain billions of active hydrogen ions in each drop. Hydrogen ion concentration is measured scientifically in terms of pH. Angel Skin is the only leading hand lotion with a pH rating allied to the pH rating of human skin. This is why Angel Skin heals chapping as no old-style lotion can.

Coarsened "gardeners' hands"—Angel Skin quickly restores rough, discolored hands to normal softness and whiteness. Ragged cuticle smooths.

No stickiness! Angel Skin sinks right in. There's no gummy "thickener" to leave hands sticky. Put on gloves right away!

Angel Skin by POND'S

25¢, 49¢ + Also giant size with free dispenser, only 89¢. Plus tax
Prices slightly higher in Canada

Now—the same miracle formula in hand cream form! Dainty pink jar. 25¢, 49¢, plus tax the most exciting actress, the most vivid personality I have ever seen on the stage. Over the last half century in the American theater it hasn't been hard to find Ethel Barrymore if you knew where to look for her: at its top, its very, very top. It may have been a little lonely up there at times, but the peak was and is her rightful residence in the theater. I love you, Ethel." . . .

And other heartwarming messages, from Claudette Colbert and Gregory Peck and Cary Grant. . . .

And Somerset Maugham, remembering me in "Lady Frederick" and "The Constant Wife": "In 'The Constant Wife' there was one line which I shall never forget. It wasn't even a line. It was a single word, the word 'when.' I had written it because it was the natural, obvious word for the heroine of my play to say, and it had never occurred to me that there was anything more in it than the inquiry it made. But Ethel Barrymore put such a wealth of meaning, humor, innuendo and malice—none of which I had seen—into that little word that the audience rocked with laughter until I thought they'd never stop. It just shows you what a great actress can do when the author gives her half a chance. If I hadn't fallen madly in love with Ethel during the rehearsals, I should have fallen in love with her then." . . .

And Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt: "I have remembered Miss Barrymore with pleasure in many stage performances, and I have also remembered her with admiration off the stage. The last time she came to the White House she had all the charm and all the beauty that I had admired for many years. And I am sure she has that same charm and that same beauty today and will always have it." . . .

And dear Bernie Baruch, using to describe me my own line from "Sunday": "Ethel Barrymore—that's all there is. There isn't any more." . . .

And Herbert Bayard Swope: "This thing is all wrong. This date has fallen into the hands of the chronologists who want to mark the seventieth year of Ethel Barrymore's age. That's silly. Ethel has no age. She is an unchanging and unchangeable spirit. There is in her today the same fire, the same charm, the same alertness and the same ability to ma those she meets glow and thrill at seeing h that she had when I first became her willi subject, and that was one day when I, as young reporter, saw her for the first time. S was with Richard Harding Davis and h brother, Charles Belmont Davis, in front the old Weber and Fields Music Hall. S then had that utterly irresistible attracti She has it today, she will always have it. . . . is fitting that this date should be celebrated. gave Ethel birth and it gave the world a gr and flaming spirit." . . .

And a cable from Strasbourg: "Every go wish my dear Ethel and many happy retu of the day. Winston." . . .

And then Lionel: "It's time for the fam now, Ethel. The one who has known you e since you first opened your eyes wants to w you happy birthday for the seventieth tin and here are some young people you ha known ever since they opened their eye maybe a little longer." . . .

And Sammy: "Happy birthday, mother!"

And Jackie: "Happy birthday, mot darling!" . . .

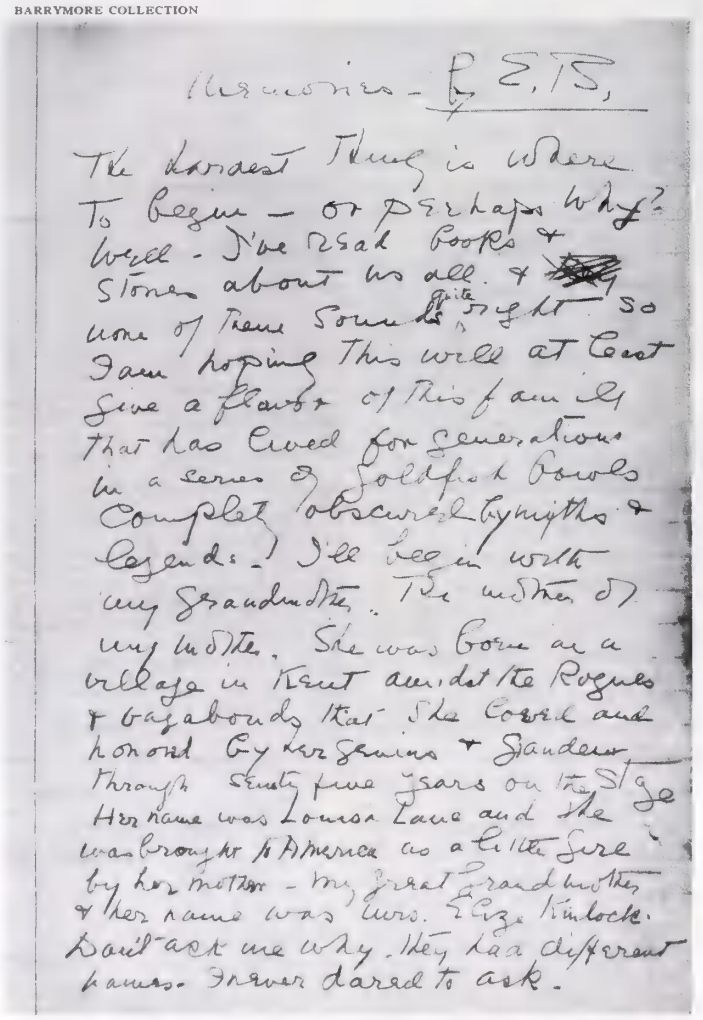
And Sister: "Happy birthday, mamm And here's another generation, John Di Miglietta." . . .

And Johnny: "Happy birthday, Mummun

And my answer to them all—and to all you:

Thank you, Johnny darling, and thank y children. Thank you, Mr. President, and all friends. I am afraid there's not enough ti left in my life to tell you all of my gratitu and appreciation for this overwhelming tr ute. It is much more than I deserve, but ple believe me, it is not more than I can take my heart. Thank you.

But my story does not end with any w of mine. It ends with Johnny saying:



"Happy birthday, Mummum!"

Mummum!

. . .

Since I have finished this book, Lionel died. I like to think that he and Jack are gether and that they will be glad to see

BARRYMORE COLLECTION

Memories - E. B.

The hardest thing is where To begin — or perhaps why? Well - I've read books & Stories about us all. & ~~[illegible]~~ one of them sounds right — so I am hoping this will at least give a flavor of this family that has lived for generations in a series of goldfish bowls Completely obscured by myths & Legends! I'll begin with my Grandmother. The mother of my mother. She was born in a village in Kent amidst the Rogues & vagabonds that she loved and honored by her genius & Standards Through seventy five years on the Stage Her name was Louisa Lane and she was brought to America as a little girl by her mother - My great Grandmother & her name was Mrs. Eliza Kinlock. Don't ask me why. They had different names. I never dared to ask.

A handwriting analyst, shown this first page of "Memories" without knowing the identity of "E. B.," said, "This is the writing of an ardent, personable woman; artistic; has a certain amount of obstinacy and persistence; is enthusiastic but fairly critical of herself and others; strives for perfection; might be a great actress or musician."

You feel so very sure of yourself... after a WHITE RAIN Shampoo!

You're confident you look your loveliest . . . your hair soft as a cloud . . . sunshine bright . . . every shimmering strand in place. That's the glorious feeling you have after using White Rain, the lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rainwater. Try it and see how wonderful you feel.

Use New WHITE RAIN Shampoo tonight and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

Tea-drinking England loved its teapots and made a fine art out of shaping and decorating them. The variety is infinite. Notice the exquisite curves in the handles and the balanced grace of the spouts. Made in England, all the above were household familiars in America. Teapots were favorites with our great-grandmothers and many have survived a hazardous century.

Finders Keepers old china you can find in villages and towns throughout America

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

IF you collect old china even in a small way, you know the thrill of discovering a charming old teapot or platter, cream jug or trinket box hiding out in a secondhand shop or country cupboard. All the pieces shown on these pages were found in just this way.

For a hundred years the beautiful wares of the English potters were as common in America as in England. Ships laden with dinnerware were always pulling into Eastern ports. American cupboards were stocked with big sets of "dishes" for company use and a variety of service pieces for every day. There were figurines for the mantel and trinket boxes for the dresser, flower vases and huge quantities of Staffordshire commemorative pieces showing American scenes.

Pioneers took these treasures westward with them. So, no matter where you live, your chances of finding these delightful old pieces is good. The quantity imported was vast. When American potteries added their output to this, our ancestors really had a great bounty from which to choose. Many of the old pieces were not marked, but there are many good books, well illustrated, which will help you identify your find.

HAROLD FOWLER

FROM THE COLLECTION OF MRS. EARL B. SMITH

Trinket boxes such as these were great favorites in the Victorian era. The designs were often whimsical, showing miniature dressers, birds in the nest, pet lambs and quaint children, as well as romantic figures, picturesquely posed. Some were Dresden; others, Worcester, Bristol, Staffordshire or Bow. Many were made for children and young girls and were gifts of sentiment. In the center are figurines of the period, some actually vases.

Rich luster combined with delicate bands of color, hand decorated, had great vogue in America. Luster cream jugs and teapots were particular favorites. The luster is a metallic glaze and may be pink as well as silver, copper and even platinum. Shown here are good specimens of early luster together with a Rockingham jug in the second row center. The big jugs or "pitchers" were for milk on the family dining table.

lon is the name given to the pale green ese type ware shown here. It is tely decorated with raised designs, often in and darker green. At the left is derland teapot with a soft, spattered design, about 1820. The nautilus pitcher, by Enoch Wood, has happily survived since 1815.
Pratt made the handsome luster pitcher right of the grouping, probably about 1800.
gurines in the center are English rdshire of the type loved by Americans.

Your hair won't go wild when it's washed with Halo!

Have lustrous, sparkling easy-to-manage hair right after shampooing!

When you "just can't do anything" with your hair, use Halo! Whether it's dry, oily, or normal, your hair will be softer, springier, look pretty as a picture—right after shampooing! ■ The secret is Halo's exclusive ingredient that leaves hair silkier, faster to set, easier to comb and manage. What's more, Halo's own special glorifier whisks away loose dandruff . . . removes the dullness that hides the natural beauty of your hair . . . lets it shine with far brighter sparkle! So, when your hair is hard to manage or simply won't "stay put" . . . you'll find it just loves to behave after a Halo Shampoo!

Halo

the shampoo that glorifies your hair!

for dry, oily, normal hair

THE CLOAK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 52

Alba, in Spain, who was a handsome and brilliant man, married a plain and simple-minded lady of the court and remained faithful to her, and when his friends, amazed at the fact, jestingly questioned him upon it, he answered them that the Duchess of Alba must needs, in her own right, and irrespective of personal qualities, be the most desirable woman in the world. So it was with the disloyal pupil. Once his strong amorous urge was joined with that great art which to him was the highest ideal of all—and was, moreover, coupled with a deep personal devotion—a fire was kindled, which later on he himself could not restrict.

Neither was Leonidas himself without blame in regard to the two young people. Day by day, in conversations with his favorite pupil, he had dwelt on Lucrezia's beauty. While making the young woman pose for his lovely and immortal Psyche With the Lamp he called upon Angelo to try, at his side in the studio, his hand at the same task, and did indeed interrupt his own work in order to point out the beauties in the living, breathing and blushing body before them, enraptured and inspired as in front of a classic work of art. Of this strange understanding between the old and the young artist neither of them was really conscious, and if a third person had spoken to them of it, they would have rebuffed him with indifference, perhaps with impatience. The one who suspected it was the woman, Lucrezia. And through it she suspected—at the same time with a kind of dismay and giddiness—the hardness and coldness which may be found in the hearts of men and artists, even with regard to the ones whom these hearts do embrace with deepest tenderness. Her own heart lamented, in complete loneliness, much as a lamb laments when led by its shepherd to the shambles.

Dread the anger of a dove.

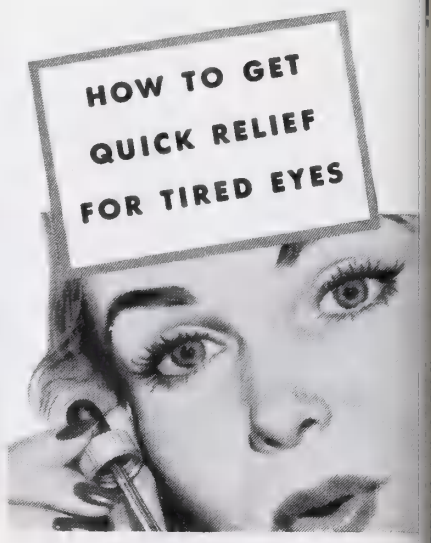
As now, through various unusual occurrences in his daily life, Leonidas realized that he was being watched and followed, and as from this fact he concluded that he was in great danger, he was seized so deeply by the idea of his own death, and of the approaching end to his artistic career, that his whole being closed round it. He spoke no word of his danger to the people surrounding him, because these people, in the course of a few weeks, to him had become infinitely distant and thus, in accordance with the law of perspective, infinitely small. He might have wished to complete the work on which he was engaged, but soon his work, too, to him seemed an unreasonable and inconvenient distraction from the matter which really engrossed him. In the last days before his arrest, he stepped out of his isolation, unwontedly gentle and considerate toward all those around him. He now also sent Lucrezia away to the house of a friend, the owner of a vineyard, in the mountains a few miles from town. As, in order to give a reason for this arrangement—for he did not wish her to have any suspicion of the actual position—he explained to her that she looked pale and feverish, he himself believed that he was using a casual pretense to persuade her to leave him, and he smiled at the deep concern with which she received his command.

She at once sent word to Angelo and told him of her husband's decision. The lovers, who in anguish had been seeking an opportunity to meet and fulfill their love, looked each other in the eyes in triumphant certainty that now, and from now on, all powers of life were uniting to serve them, and that their passion was the loadstone which according to its will attracted and ranged everything around them. Lucrezia before now had visited the farm; she instructed Angelo as to how, by a certain path in the mountains, he could approach the house unseen, and come to her window. The window faced west, the moon would be in her first quarter, she would be able to discern the figure of her lover between the vines. When he picked up a pebble from the ground and threw it against the windowpane, she would open the window. As, in the course of their deliberation, they came to this moment, the voices of both faltered. To regain his equilibrium Angelo told her that for the nocturnal journey he had bought himself a large and fine cloak of violet goat's wool with brown embroidery, which a friend from the country, who was hard up for the moment, had offered him. All this they discussed in Lucrezia's room next to the studio where the master was working, and with the door to it open. The meeting, they decided, was to take place on the second Saturday evening.

They parted; and just as, all through the following week, the thought of death and eternity accompanied the master, the thought of Lucrezia's body against his own accompanied the young disciple. This thought, without having at any time really left him, constantly seemed to return to him anew like a forgotten, surprising, joyful message—"Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night. Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee. I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine."

On Sunday morning Leonidas Allori was arrested and taken to prison. In the course of the week several interrogations of him followed, and possibly the old patriot might have justified himself in some of the accusations brought against him. But in the first place the government was resolved this time to make an end of such a dangerous enemy, and in the second place the accused himself was resolved not to upset, by any ups and downs, the sublime balance of mind he had attained. There was from the very beginning no real doubt as to the outcome of the case. Judgment was passed, and orders were given that next Sunday morning that most famous son of the people should be stood up against the prison wall, to fall against the cobbles with six bullets in his breast.

Toward the end of the week the old artist asked to be paroled for twelve hours in order to go to the place where his wife was staying, and to take leave of her.



His plea was refused. But such great strength had this man still in him, and with such an aura of radiance did his fame and his integrity of heart surround his person, that his words could not die quickly in the ears of those to whom they were addressed. The last request of the condemned man was brought up again and weighed by his judges, even after he himself had given up hope.

It so happened that the topic was raised in a house where Cardinal Salviati was present.

"No doubt," said His Eminence, "clemency here might set a dangerous precedent. But the country—and the royal house itself which possesses some of his works—is in debt to Allori. This man has often by his art restored men's faith in themselves—maybe men should now have faith in him."

He thought the matter over and continued: "It is said that the master—do they not call him the Lion of the Mountains?—is deeply loved by his pupils. We might find out if he has really been able to awaken a devotion which will defy death. We might, in his case, make use of the old rule which will allow a prisoner to leave his prison for a specified period, on the condition that he produce a hostage to die in his stead, if he does not return in time.

"Allori," said the cardinal, "last summer did me the honor of executing the reliefs on my villa at Ascoli. He had with him there his beautiful young wife and a very handsome young disciple, Angelo by name, whom he called his son. We might let Leonidas know that he can obtain his freedom for a period of twelve hours, during which, as he wishes, he can take leave of his wife. But the condition will be that this young Angelo shall enter the prison cell as he himself leaves it, and that it will be made clear to both the old and the young artist that at the expiration of the twelve hours, at all events an execution will be carried out in the prison yard."

Refresh them regularly, daily with a 2-drop bath of Murine

Eyes tired? Two drops of Murine in each eye refresh them in seconds! Murine's seven tested ingredients make it gentle as a tear —use it daily, regularly, as often as your eyes feel tired. It makes your eyes feel good.

MURINE for your eyes

WE HAVE THE ANSWERS!
All your COSMETICS made for you at NO EXTRA COST!
Fresh . . Pure . . Exquisite

Sallye Harmer

Direct to your home by mail from our immaculate laboratories. For fascinating information, write SALLYE HARMER
Lansdowne, Pa.

CORNS?

GET QUICK RELIEF FROM PAIN—AND MOR

NOW GET RID O THE CORN-FAS

New BLUE-JAY Plastic Corn Plasters with wonder drug PHENYLIUM® relieve pain almost instantly—and get rid of your corn, too.

New drug gets to the bottom of your corn, helps loosen it so you can lift it out. BLUE-JAY plasters are now plastic—stay on when you bathe, fit like your skin. Regular or Ladies size. Callus plasters, too. Look for new package.

A feeling that in the circumstances it would be correct to decide on something unconventional made the powerful gentlemen with whom the matter rested accept the cardinal's suggestion. The condemned man was informed that his request had been granted, and on which conditions. Leonidas sent word to Angelo.

The young artist was not in his room when his schoolfellows came to bring him the message and to fetch him to prison. Even though he had not paid any attention to the sorrow of his friends, it had nevertheless upset and distressed him, since at this moment he himself conceived the universe as perfect in beauty and harmony, and life in itself as boundless grace. He had kept apart from his fellows in a sort of antagonism, just as in respect and commiseration they had kept apart from him. He had traveled afoot the long way to the Duke of Miranda's villa to see a recently unearthed Greek statue of the god Dionysus. Still without really knowing it, he had wished and resolved to have a powerful work of art confirm his conviction of the divinity of the world.

His friends thus had to wait for him a long time in a small room high above the narrow street. When the chosen one finally entered, they pounced on him from all sides and informed him of the sad honor that awaited him.

So little had the master's favorite understood the nature and extent of the misfortune that had befallen himself and all of them, that the messengers had to repeat their tidings to him. When at last he comprehended, he stood petrified for a while, in the deepest grief. In the manner of a sleepwalker he inquired about the sentence and the execution, and his comrades, with tears in their eyes, gave him their answers. But when they came to the offer made to Leonidas, and the prisoner's request for Angelo, light returned to the young man's eyes and color to his cheeks. He asked his friends, indignantly, why they had not informed him at once—then without words he tore himself from their grasp to hasten to the prison.

But on the doorstep he stopped, seized by the solemnity of the moment. He had walked a long way and had slept on the grass, his clothes were covered with dust, and he had torn a rent in one sleeve. He did not wish to appear before his master like this today. He doffed his big new cloak from the hook on which it hung, and put it on.

The warders in the prison knew in advance of his coming. He was led to the condemned man's cell, and let in. He threw himself into his master's arms.

Leonidas Allori calmed him. To make the young man forget the present, he turned the conversation round to the stellar heavens, of which he had often talked with his son, and in the knowledge of which he had instructed him. Soon his great gaze and deep, clear voice lifted his pupil up there with him, as if the two of them, hand in hand, had slipped back many years, and were now speaking together all by themselves in a lofty, carefree world. Only when the teacher had seen the tears dry on the pale young face did he return to the ground, and he asked his pupil if he was indeed prepared to spend, in his place, the night in the prison. Angelo replied that he knew he was.

"I thank you, my son," said Leonidas, "for giving me twelve hours which will be of boundless importance to me.

"Aye, I believe in the immortality of the soul," he continued, "and perhaps the eternal life of the spirit is the one true reality. I do not know yet, but I shall know tomorrow. But this physical world around us, these four elements—earth, water, air and fire—are these not realities as well? And is not also my own body—my marrow-filled bones, my flowing, never-pausing blood, and my five glorious senses—divinely true? Others think that I am dead. But I am a peasant and of peasant stock, and our soil to us has been a stern, bountiful nurse. My muscles and sinews are but firmer and harder than when I was a youth, my hair as luxurious as it was then, my sight is not in the least impaired. All these my faculties I shall now leave here behind me, for as my spirit rises forth on new paths, the earth—my own well-loved Campania—will take my honest body in her honest arms and will make it one with herself. But I wish to meet Nature face to face once more, and to hand it over to her in full consciousness, as in a gentle and solemn conversation between friends. Tomorrow I shall look to the future, I shall collect myself and prepare myself for the unknown. But tonight I shall go out, free in a free world, among things familiar to me. I shall observe the rich play of light of the sunset, and after that the moon's divine clarity, and the ancient constellations of the stars round her. I shall hear the song of running water and taste its freshness, breathe the sweetness and bitterness of trees and grass in the darkness and feel the soil and the stones under the soles of my feet. What a night awaits me! All gifts given to me I shall gather together into my embrace, to give them back again in profound understanding, and with thanks."

"Father," said Angelo, "the earth, the water, the air and the fire must needs love you, the one in whom none of their gifts have been wasted."

"I believe that myself, son," said Leonidas. "Always, from the time when I was a child in my home in the country, have I believed that God loved me.

"I cannot explain to you—for the time is now but short—how, or by what path, I have come to understand in full God's infinite faithfulness toward me. Or how I have come to realize the fact that faithfulness is the supreme divine factor by which the universe is governed. I know that in my heart I have always been faithful to this earth and to this life. I have pleaded for liberty tonight in order to let them know that our parting itself is a pact.

"Then tomorrow I shall be able to fulfill my pact with great Death and with things to come." He spoke slowly, and now stopped and smiled. "Forgive me talking so much," he said. "For a week I have not talked to a person whom I loved."

But when he spoke again his voice and mien were deeply serious.

...are you really lovely to love?

How wonderfully confident you feel! There's an air of freshness about you always when you use Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Your underarms are dry . . . and they stay dry. No worry about stains that spoil clothes. No offensive odor.

Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-checking ingredient now known to science. You will love using Fresh, too. It's a pure white cream with a soft, subtle scent . . . a fluffy, whipped-cream texture. Never sticky or greasy. Kind to skin.

For an air of freshness, use Fresh Cream Deodorant every day—be lovely to love, always.

FRESH is a registered trademark of Pharma-Craft Corp. Also manufactured and distributed in Canada

a "FRESH" girl is always lovely to love

"And you, my son," he said, "you, whom I thank for your faithfulness throughout our long happy years—and tonight—be you also always faithful to me. I have thought of you in these days, between these walls. I have fervently wished to see you once again, not for my own sake, but in order to tell you something. Yes, I had got much to say to you, but I must be brief. Only this, then, I enjoin and implore you: keep always in your heart the divine law of proportion, the golden section."

"Gladly, gladly do I remain here tonight," said Angelo. "But even more gladly would I tonight go with you, such as, many nights, we have wandered together."

Leonidas smiled again. "My road tonight," he said, "under the stars, by the grass-grown, dewy mountain paths, takes me to one thing, and to one alone. I will be, for one last night, with my wife, with Lucrezia. I tell you, Angelo, that in order that man—His chief work, into the nostrils of whom He had breathed the breath of life—might embrace and become one with the earth, the sea, the air and the fire, God gave him woman. In Lucrezia's arms I shall be sealing, in the night of leave-taking, my pact with all these." He was silent for a few moments, and motionless.

"Lucrezia," he then said, "is a few miles from here, in the care of good friends. I have, through them, made sure that she has learned nothing of my imprisonment or my sentence. I do not wish to expose my friends to danger, and they shall not know, tonight, that I come to their house. Neither do I wish to come to her as a man condemned to death, with the breath of the grave on me, but our meeting shall be like our first night together, and its secrecy to her shall mean a young man's fancy and a young lover's folly."

"What day is it today?" Angelo suddenly asked.

"What day?" Leonidas repeated. "Do you ask that of me—me who have been living in eternity, not in time? To me this day is called: the last day. But stay, let me think. Why, my child, to you, and to the people around you, today is named Saturday. Tomorrow is Sunday.

"I know the road well," he said a short while later, thoughtfully, as if he were already on his journey. "By a mountain path I approach her window from behind the farm. I shall pick up a pebble and throw it against the windowpane. Then she will awake and wonder, she will go to her window, discern me amongst the vines, and open it."

His mighty chest moved as he drew his breath.

"Oh, my child and my friend," he exclaimed, "you know this woman's beauty. You have dwelt in our house and have eaten at our table, you know, too, the gentleness and gaiety of her mind, its childlike tranquillity and its inconceivable innocence. But what you do not know, what nobody knows in the whole world but I, is the infinite capacity of her body and soul for surrender. How that snow can burn! She has been to me all glorious works of art of the world, all of them in one single woman's body. Within her embrace at night my strength to create in the daytime was restored. As I speak to you of her, my blood lifts like a wave." After some seconds he closed his eyes. "When I come back here tomorrow," he said, "I shall come with my eyes closed. They will lead me in here from the gate, and later, at the wall, they will bind a cloth before my eyes. I shall have no need of these eyes of mine. And it shall not be the black stones, nor the gun barrels, that I shall leave behind in these my dear, clear eyes when I quit them." Again he was silent for a while, then said in a soft voice: "At times, this week, I have not been able to recall the line of her jaw from ear to chin. At daybreak tomorrow morning I shall look upon it, so that I shall never again forget it."

When again he opened his eyes, his radiant gaze met the gaze of the young man. "Do not look at me in such pain and dread," he said, "and do not pity me. I do not deserve that of you. Nor—you will know it—am I to be pitied tonight. My son, I was wrong: tomorrow, as I come back, I shall open my eyes once more in order to see your face, which has been so dear to me. Let me see it happy and at peace, as when we were working together."

THE prison warder now turned the heavy key in the lock and came in. He informed the prisoners that the clock in the prison tower showed a quarter to six. Within a quarter of an hour one of the two must leave the building. Allori answered that he was ready, but he hesitated a moment.

"They arrested me," he said to Angelo, "in my studio and in my working smock. But the air may grow colder as I get into the mountains. Will you lend me your cloak?"

Angelo removed the violet cloak from his shoulders and handed it to his teacher. As he fumbled at his throat with the hook, with which he was unfamiliar, the master took the young hand that helped him, and held it.

"How grand you are, Angelo," he said. "This cloak of yours is new and costly. In my native parish a bridegroom wears a cloak like this on his wedding day.

"Do you remember," he added as he stood ready to go, in the cloak, "one night, when together we lost our way in the mountains? Suddenly you collapsed, exhausted and cold as ice, and whispered that it was impossible for you to go any farther. I took off my cloak then—just as you did now—and wrapped it around us both. We lay the whole night together in each other's arms, and in my cloak you fell asleep almost immediately, like a child. You are to sleep tonight too."

Angelo collected his thoughts, and remembered the night of which the master was speaking. Leonidas had always been a far more experienced mountaineer than he himself, as all together his strength had always exceeded his own. He recalled the warmth of that big body like that of a big friendly animal in the dark against his own numb limbs. He remembered further, that as he woke up the sun had risen and all mountain slopes had become luminous in its rays. He had sat up, then, and had cried out, "Father, this night you have saved my life." From his breast came a groan, wordless.

"We will not take leave tonight," said Leonidas, "but tomorrow morning I shall kiss you."

THE jailer opened the door and held it open, while the towering, straight figure stepped over the threshold. Then the door was once more shut, the key turned in the lock, and Angelo was alone.

Within the first seconds he felt the fact that the door was locked, and that nobody could come in to him, as an incomparable favor. But immediately after he fell to the floor, like a man struck by, and crushed beneath, a falling rock.

In his ears echoed the voice of the master. And before his eyes stood the figure of the master, illuminated by the radiance of a higher world, of Art's infinite universe. From this world of light, which his father had once opened to him, he was now cast down into darkness. After the one whom he had betrayed had gone from him, he was completely alone. He dared not think of the stellar heavens, nor of the earth, nor of the sea, nor of the rivers, nor of the marble statues that he had loved. If at this moment Leonidas Allori himself had wanted to save him, it would not have been possible. For to be unfaithful is to be annihilated.

Good manners and soft words have brought many a difficult thing to pass.
—AESOP

The word "unfaithful" was now flung at him from all angles, like a shower of flints at the man who is being stoned, and he met it on his knees, with hanging arms, like a man stoned. But when at last the shower slackened and after a silence the words "the golden section" rose and echoed, subdued and significant, he raised his hands and pressed them against his ears.

And unfaithful, he thought after a time, for the sake of a woman. What is a woman? She does not exist until we create her, and she has no life except through us. She is nothing but body, but she is not body, even, if we do not look at her. She claims to be brought to life, and acquires our soul as a mirror, in which she can see that she is beautiful. Men must burn, tremble and perish, in order that she may know that she exists and is beautiful. When we weep, she weeps, too, but with happiness—for now she has proof that she is beautiful. Our anguish must be kept alive every hour, or she is no longer alive.

All my creative power, his thoughts went on, if things had gone as she wished, would have been used up in the task of creating her, and in keeping her alive. Never, never again would I have produced a great work of art. And when she grieved over my misfortune, she would not understand, but would declare, "Why, but you have me!" While with him—with him, I was a great artist!

Yet he was not really thinking of Lucrezia, for to him there was in the world no other human being than the father whom he had betrayed.

Did I ever believe, Angelo thought, that I was, or that I might become, a great artist, a creator of glorious statues? I am no artist, and I shall never create a glorious statue. For I know now that my eyes are gone—I am blind!

After a further lapse of time his thoughts slowly turned away from eternity and back to the present.

His master, he thought, would walk up the path and stop near the house, among and suddenly...your hair looks young again!

Ever notice the radiance of young hair? Its sheen says "young." This safe, simple-to-use color rinse gleams hair in about 3 minutes. And you needn't worry about changing your hair so much it causes talk. Noreen just brings out the best in your own hair color, so right for your skin and eyes. It blends streaks, tones in grays, evens up color! Among the 14 lively but subtle colors there's one for you to coax gold lights into dull blonde hair, put a glow in brown, make black blacker, brighten silver, and whiten white. So nice...because it's so natural! Now... even easier to use with new applicator.

At cosmetic counters everywhere. 8 rinses 60¢ plus tax. Color applicator 40¢. Also professionally applied in beauty salons.

Walking Ease for Troubled FEET!

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

Combine Style Distinction with Real Foot Freedom

You'll quickly discover what real walking ease is like when you step out in your first pair of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's scientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, foot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind to your feet. No "breaking-in" discomfort.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and selected Shoe and Department Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable locally, write for catalog, Dept. J5, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

CAT-TEX

Scientific Wonder SOLES

AT ALL FINE SHOE REPAIRERS

Amazing Offer— 3 LIPSTICKS ONLY 25¢

Here's proof positive that top lipstick quality need not cost top prices! Flame-Glo keeps your lips youthful, alluring hours longer. King Size Jumbo, just 39¢ at five and dime stores!

on't miss this chance . . .

o make new friends and convince ou of Flame-Glo superiority, e'll send you 3 big purse-size psticks, each in a different shade, r only 25¢. Supply is limited. . send for yours today!

keep kissable with Flame-Glo®

"TRIPLE-STAY" LIPSTICK

MAIL THIS COUPON NOW

Rejuvia Beauty Labs, Inc., Dept. L-5
P.O. Box 39, N.Y. 12, N.Y.

Please send me your special offer of 3 Flame-Glo Lipsticks all for 25¢ (coin only). Check coloring:

☐ Blonde ☐ Brunette ☐ Brownette

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

vines. He would pick up a pebble from the ground and throw it against the windowpane, and then she would open the window. She would call to the man in the violet cloak, such as she was wont to do at their meetings, "Angelo!" And the great master, the unfailing friend, the immortal man, the man sentenced to death, would understand that his disciple had betrayed him.

During the previous day and night Angelo had walked far and slept but little, and the whole of the last day he had not eaten. He now felt that he was tired unto death. His master's command: "You are to sleep tonight," came back to him. Leonidas' commands, when he had obeyed them, had always led him right. He slowly rose to his feet and fumbled his way to the pallet where his master had lain. He fell asleep almost immediately.

But as he slept, he dreamed.

He saw once more, and more clearly than before, the big figure in the cloak walk up the mountain path, stop and bend down for the pebble and throw it against the pane. But in the dream he followed him farther, and he saw the woman in the man's arms—Lucrezia! And he awoke.

He sat up on the bed. Nothing sublime or sacred was any longer to be found in the world, but the deadly pain of physical jealousy stopped his breath and ran through him like fire. Gone was the disciple's reverence for his master, the great artist; in the darkness the son ground his teeth at his father. The past had vanished, there was no future to come, all the young man's thoughts ran to one single point—the embrace there, a few miles away.

He came to a sort of consciousness, and resolved not to fall asleep again.

But he did fall asleep again, and dreamed the same, but now more vividly and with a multitude of details, which he himself disowned, which his imagination could only have engendered when in his sleep he no longer had control of it.

As after this dream he was once more wide awake, a cold sweat broke out over his limbs. From the pallet he noticed some glowing embers on the fireplace; he now got up, set his naked foot upon them and kept it there. But the embers were almost dead, and went out under his foot.

In the next dream he himself, silent and lurking, followed the wanderer on the mountain path and through the window. He had his knife in his hand, he leaped forward, and plunged it first in the man's heart, then in hers, as they lay clasped in one another's arms. But the sight of their blood, mingled, soaking into the sheet, like a red-hot iron, burned out his eyes. Half awake, once more sitting up, he thought, But I do not need to use the knife. I can strangle them with my hands.

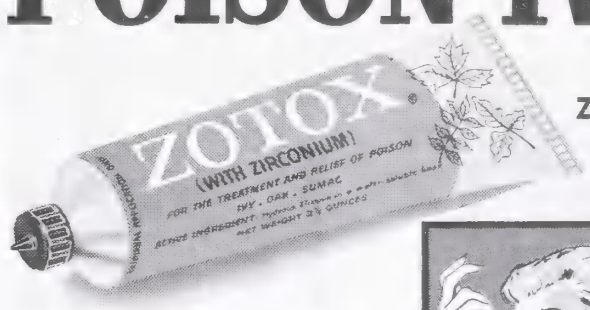
Thus passed the night.

When the turnkey of the prison awakened him, it was light. "So you can sleep?" said the turnkey. "So you really trust the old fox? If you ask me, I should say he has played you a fine trick. The clock shows a quarter to six. When it strikes, the warden and the colonel will come in, and take whichever bird they find in the cage. The priest is coming later. But your old lion is never coming. Honestly—would you or I come, if we were in his shoes?"

When Angelo succeeded in understanding the words of the turnkey, his heart filled with indescribable joy. There was nothing more to fear. God had granted him this way out: death. This happy, easy way out. Vaguely, through his aching head one thought ran: And it is for him that I die. But the thought sank away again, for he was not really thinking of Leonidas Allori, or of any person in the world round him. He felt only one thing: that he himself, within the last moment, had been pardoned.

He got up, washed his face in a basin of water brought by his guard, and combed his hair back. He now felt the pain of the burn in his foot and again was filled with gratitude. Now he also remembered the master's words about God's faithfulness.

The turnkey looked at him and said, "I took you for a young man yesterday."



After some time footsteps could be heard up the stone-paved passage, and a faint rattling. Angelo thought, Those are the soldiers with Long-wearing proportioned Cannon nylon stockings are your best buy—from $1 up. Full-fashioned—with ■ snag-guarding Cannolin finish—at your neighborhood store. CANNON

At Last! An ANTIDOTE for

POISON IVY OAK • SUMAC

AMAZING NEW TYPE ZIRCONIUM* FORMULA INSTANTLY STOPS ITCHING • SPREADING

Urushiol Poison in Ivy, Oak and Sumac causes Fiery, Itching Rash.

Zotox instantly neutralizes Urushiol Poison—stops itch and spreading of rash.

Read These Facts and Stop Ugly Rash!

Clinically-Proven Zotox Is Safe, Effective, Non-Irritating

Unless you stop Urushiol, the poison from Ivy, Oak or Sumac sap—nothing can give you real relief from itching rash. Five years of medical research now bring you ■ way to stop Urushiol—FAST! Zotox, with miracle antidote, Zirconium*, actually "sponges up" Urushiol and destroys its power, the moment you rub it in. Instantly fiery, burning itch stops, redness starts to fade—soon ugly rash and blisters go. Only Zotox gives this instant relief—proved by clinical tests and thousands of grateful users.

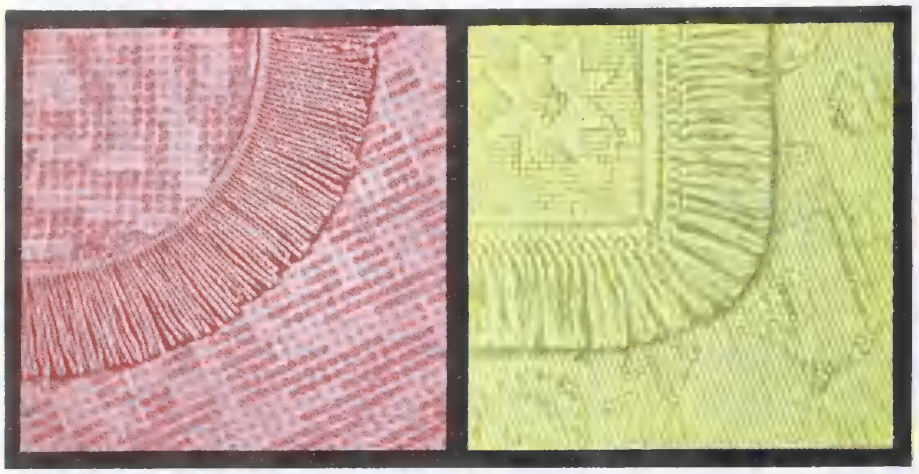
Get Zotox—today! Only $1.98 for relief worth $20. Safe, non-irritating. Stainless, greaseless, odorless.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

It's Never Too Late For

ZOTOX



Ask Your Doctor • At All Drugstores

COPYRIGHT 1955 ZOTOX PHARMACAL COMPANY, STAMFORD, CONN.

America's leading POISON IVY treatment their carbines. The heavy door swung open, and between two gendarmes, who held his arms, entered Allori. In accordance with his words the evening before, he let himself be led forward with closed eyes by the warders. But he felt or perceived where Angelo was standing and took a step toward him. He stood silent before him, unhooked his cloak, lifted it from his own shoulders and laid it around the young man's. In this movement the two were brought close, body to body, and Angelo said to himself, Perhaps, after all, he will not open his eyes and look at me. But whenever had Allori not kept a given word? The hand which—as it put the cloak round him—rested against Angelo's neck forced his head a little forward, the large eyelids trembled and lifted, and the master looked into the eyes of the disciple. But the disciple could never afterward remember or recall the look. A moment later he felt Allori's lips on his cheek.

"Well, now!" cried the turnkey with surprise in his voice. "Welcome back! We were not expecting you. Now you must take potluck! And you," he added, turning to Angelo, "you can go your way. There are still a few minutes to six o'clock. My lords are not coming till after it has struck. The priest is coming later. Things are done with precision here. And fair—as you know—is fair."

In contemporary settings . . . new "Duet", with a different pattern on each side! In beautiful decorator colors to suit your room scheme.

In traditional rooms . . . "Minuet" lends the charm of a Colonial hand-loomed bedspread. Antique white, snow white, primrose yellow, spring green, French blue, petal pink.

Reversible Bedspreads

give you double beauty in your bedroom

Really two bedspreads in one . . . each of these room-refreshing styles can be reversed to give you twice the wear, twice the beauty! Like all Morgan-Jones bedspreads, they never, never need ironing, keep their light 'n' airy look. And they're virtually lint-free. There's a Morgan-Jones reversible to suit your decor . . . at your favorite store.

Morgan-Jones

MORGAN-JONES, INC., 58 WORTH STREET NEW YORK 13, NEW YORK

In any bedroom . . . The "Reversible", with big fluffy tufts on one side; small, close-set tufts on the other! Petal pink, French blue, canary yellow, aqua, sandalwood, forest green, ice green, snow white.

After Leonidas Allori's death a sad misfortune came upon his disciple Angelo Santasilia: he could not sleep.

Will the narrator be believed by such people as have themselves experience of sleeplessness, when he tells them that from the beginning this affliction was the victim's own choice? Yet it was so. Angelo walked out through the prison gate, behind which he had for twelve hours been hostage for his condemned master, into a world which to him contained no direction whatsoever. He was totally isolated, an absolutely lonely figure in this world, and he felt that the man whose grief and shame—like his own—exceeded that of all others must at the same time be exempt from the laws which governed those others. He made up his mind not to sleep any more.

On this day he had no feeling of time, and he took fright when he realized that darkness had fallen, and the day was over. He was aware that his friends, other pupils of the dead artist, were tonight keeping watch together, but on no account would he join them, for they would be talking of Leonidas Allori and would greet him as the chosen disciple, upon whom the eye of the master had last dwelt. Yes, he thought, and laughed, as if I were Elisha, the follower of the great prophet Elijah, on whom the passenger of the chariot of fire threw his mantle! So he betook himself to the taverns and inns of the town, where casually collected people roared and rioted and where the air was filled with strumming and song, and was heavy with vapors of wine and the smell of the clothes and sweat of strangers. But he would not drink like the others. He left one inn to proceed to another, and both in the taprooms and in the streets he told himself, All this does not concern me. I myself will not sleep any more.

It is with our judgments as with our watches; no two go just alike, yet each believes his own. —POPE

In such a tavern, on the night between Monday and Tuesday, he met Giuseppino, or Pino, Pizzuti, the philosopher, a small man shrunken and dark of hue as if he had been hung up in a chimney to be smoked. Pizzuti had once, many years ago, owned the noblest marionette theater in Naples, but later on his luck had left him. In prison, and in chains, three fingers of his right hand had withered, so that he could no longer maneuver his puppets. He now wandered from place to place, the poorest of the poor, but luminous, as if phosphorescent, with love of humanity in general and with a knowing and mellifluous compassion for the one human being with whom he just happened to be talking. In this man's company Angelo passed the next day and night, and while he looked at him and listened to him he had no difficulty in keeping awake.

The philosopher at once realized that he had a desperate man before him. To give the boy confidence he for a time spoke about himself. He described his puppets one by one, faithfully and with enthusiasm, as if they had been real friends and fellow artists, and with tears in his eyes, because they were now lost to him. "Alas, the beloved ones," he moaned, "they were devoted to me and they trusted me. But they are dispersed now, limp of arms and legs, with moldering strings; they are thrown away from the stage to the uttermost parts of the sea. For my hand could no longer lead them, nor my right hand hold them!" But presently—as ever in the vicissitudes of his existence—he turned his mind toward life everlasting. "That is not a matter for grief," he said. "In Paradise I shall once more meet and embrace them all. In Paradise I shall be given ten fingers to each hand."

LATER on, after midnight, Pino led the conversation to Angelo's own circumstances, felt his way in them, and soon had them all at his seven fingers' ends.

In this way it happened that next night Angelo told him his whole story, as he would not have been able to tell it to any other person in the world than this crippled vagabond. At that the old man's face lit up in high, solemn harmony. "That is not a matter for grief," he said. "It is a good thing to be a great sinner. Or should human beings allow Christ to have died on the Cross for the sake of our petty lies and our paltry whorings? We would have to fear that the Saviour might even come to think with disgust of His heroic achievement! For exactly this reason, as you will know, in the very hour of the Cross, care was taken that He had thieves by Him, one to each side, and could turn His eyes from the one to the other. At this moment He may look from you to me, and mightily recognize and repeat to Himself, 'Aye, verily it was needed!' "

After a while Pino added, "And I myself am the crucified thief Demas, to whom Paradise was promised."

BUT early on Thursday morning Pizzuti quite suddenly vanished, like a rat into a gutter hole. He left the room on a necessary errand and did not return, and not till several years later did Angelo again see this excellent man. And as the silence behind him grew deep and, as it were, conclusive, the outcast man realized that he no longer needed to hold on to a decision. It would not happen to him again to fall asleep.

For some time he walked among people still absolutely lonely, like an unproved but ambitious young ascetic with a hair shirt next to his skin. So as not to meet his friends of the past he changed his lodgings, and found for himself a small closet high up under the roof in the opposite quarter of the town. During the first time he was surprised at the fact that his sleepless nights did not appear long, but that time simply seemed to have been abolished—night came, and then again morning, and to him it meant nothing.

But, just as unexpectedly, his body rose in rebellion against his mind and his will. The moment came in which he gave up his pride and prayed the great powers of the universe: "Despise me, cast me away, but allow me to be like the others, allow me to sleep."

He now bought himself opium, but it did not help him. He also purchased another strong sleeping draught, but it only conveyed to him a row of novel, quite confused sensations of distance so that objects and times which were far away were felt by him as quite near, while such objects as he knew to be within reach—his own hands and feet and the stone steps of the stairs—were infinitely far off.

His brain by this time was working extremely slowly. One day in the street he saw Lucrezia, who had returned to the town and was living with her mother. But only late at night, when the church towers had rung out midnight, did he tell himself. I saw a woman in the street today, it was Lucrezia. And after another while, I once promised to come to her. But I did not come. For a long time he sat very still, handling this thought, and at last he smiled, like a very old man.

It was shortly after this day that he began to turn to other people and to look to them for help. But when he begged their advice, he was in such deadly earnest that he made the persons he addressed smile, and they answered him in jest or altogether dismissed his questions.

One morning he bethought himself of Mariana, the old woman in whose tavern he had met Pizzuti. She had, he knew, given friends of his good advice—it was not impossible that she might be able to help him. But the lack of seriousness in his counselors till now had frightened him out of asking straight away, and he searched for a pretext for going to her house, until he remembered that he had left there his purple cloak with the brown embroidery. At that he went straight to her house.

Old Mariana looked at him for a while. "Well, well, Angelo, pretty death's-head," she said. "We Christian people should bear one another no grudge, and I forgive you, today, that you did reject my fond love, and keep thinking of another woman, when I wanted you. I shall help you. Now listen well, and afterwards do exactly as I tell you. Walk from the broadest street of the town into a narrower one, and from this narrow street into one still narrower, and go on like that. If from your narrowest alley you can find your way into

CONTINUED ON PAGE 212

CARPET IS SO EASY TO CARE FOR

h soft beautiful carpet, you can sing "goodbye ver" to scrubbing and waxing hard floors. Car- is so easy to "pick up" and keep clean. A whisk our vacuum keeps it delightfully fresh and full fe...so lovely to look at, you feel that extra l of pride in your home.

it there's so much more in carpet than meets ye. Carpet brings relaxing peace and quiet, soft dly warmth, cozy comfort—an atmosphere of hominess and security that makes every member of your family feel "there's no place like home." Today, more than ever, your family will appreciate the quiet comfort and restfulness of carpet.

Lovely, long-wearing carpet costs far less than you think. And it's so easy to buy on convenient budget terms. So why not start enjoying it now? Ask your dealer to show you the wonderful colors and textures of today's new rugs and carpets.

Buy carpets designed and made for the American way of life by these American manufacturers

Artloom • Beattie • Bigelow • Downs • Firth
Gulistan • Hardwick & Magee • Hightstown • Holmes
Karastan • Leedom • Lees • Magee • Masland
Mohawk • Nye-Wait • Philadelphia Carpet
Roxbury • Sanford • Alexander Smith

CARPET INSTITUTE, INC. 350 Fifth Ave., N.Y. 1, N.Y.

HOME MEANS MORE — WITH CARPET ON THE FLOOR

MORE QUIET, MORE COMFORT, MORE BEAUTY, EASIER CARE

Printed terry . . . the most dramatic way to dress up your bath. Enjoy, too, the complete coverage of a superbig bath sheet, 36″ x 78″

PACIFIC'S NEW LAUREL ROSE

with accenting solid-color towel in a Decorator ensemble

Zing . . . suddenly your bathroom blooms with spring. All because of Pacific's new Decorator towels that blossom forth on both sides with the fresh beauty of laurel roses. In lilting shades of pink, grey, aqua, or pineapple-yellow . . . each print is enhanced by a range of complimentary solid-color towels . . . to make your decorating easy. And just wait till you feel the lusher, richer caress of Pacific's Supersorb ® terry. From bath sheet to face cloths, you'll want a complete ensemble.

Superbig bath sheet about $5. Bath towels about $2. Hand towels and face cloths, too. Available at all fine stores tighter passage, enter it, and follow it, and draw your breath lightly once or twice. And at that you will have fallen asleep."

PACIFIC SUPERSORB TOWELS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 210

Angelo thanked Mariana for her advice, and pushed it down to the bottom of his mind. Only when it was quite dark did he make up his mind to test it.

His own room was in an out-of-the-way alley. He had to proceed into the broadest and best lighted of the boulevards. For a long time he had not been in this part of the town, and he was surprised to see how many people there were in the world. They walked faster than he, they were intent on their errands, and as far as he could judge an equal number was walking in each direction.

How, he asked himself, has it become necessary for all people who live east of the boulevard to come west, as well as to all who live west to come east? It might make one feel that the world was badly managed. The whole city of Naples is now set up as a big loom, men and women are the shuttles to it, and the weaver is busy tonight. Yet this great pattern, he reflected as he walked on, is no concern of mine—others will have to look after it. I myself will keep my thoughts carefully collected on what I have got to do.

At this he turned from the Via di Toledo into a smaller street, and from that into one still narrower. It is not impossible, he thought, hope strangely dawning in his heart, that this time I have been well advised.

After a while he found himself in a lane so narrow that, looking up, he saw above him only a handbreadth of evening sky a little lighter than the eaves. The paving was here very rough, and there were no lamps, he had to place his hand on the wall of a house to walk on. The contact with solid matter did him good; he felt grateful toward this wall. It suddenly vanished under his palm. There was a doorway here, and the door was open. It gave into an exceedingly narrow passage. I am in luck tonight, he thought, I am lucky to have come upon such an exceedingly narrow passage. He proceeded until he came to a small door. Underneath this door a faint light shone.

Now for a while he stood perfectly still. In there sleep awaited him, and with the certitude of sleep memory came back to him. He felt, in the dark, his hard, drawn face smoothening, his eyelids lowering a little like the eyelids of a happy, sleeping person. This moment was a return and a beginning. He stretched out his hand, took care to draw his breath lightly twice, and opened the door.

By a table in a little, faintly lit room a red-haired man was counting his money.

THE sudden entrance of a stranger did not seem to surprise the host of the room, he looked up casually and then sank back into his former occupation. But his guest felt the moment to be formidable.

The man by the table was ugly, and had nothing kind about him. Yet in the fact that even while counting his money he left his door unlocked, to be entered by a stranger, there was a kind of friendliness which might hold great possibilities. But what am I to say to him? Angelo thought.

After a while he said, "I cannot sleep."

The red-haired man waited a moment, then he looked up. "I never sleep," he declared with extreme arrogance.

After this short interruption he resumed his work. He carefully arranged his coins in piles of two, scattered them with his big hands and re-collected them in piles of five—to scatter these once more, and build up, absorbed in the task, new piles of six, of ten and fifteen, and at last of three. In the end he stopped, and without taking his hands off the silver leaned back in the chair. He gazed straight before him and repeated, with deep scorn, "I never sleep.

"Only dolts and drudges sleep," he took up his theme after a while. "Fishermen, peasants and artisans must have their hours of snoring at any cost. Their heavy natures cry out for sleep even in the greatest hour of life. Drowsiness settles on their eyelids. Divine agony sweats blood at a stone's throw, but they cannot keep awake, and the whizzing of an angel's wings will not wake them up. Those living dead will never know what happened, or what was said, while they themselves lay huddl and gaping. I alone know. For I never sleep

Suddenly he turned in his chair toward guest. "He said so Himself," he remark "and had He not been so hard driven, w what high disdain would He not have spok Now it was a moan, like the sea breaki against the shore for the very last time bef doomsday. He Himself told them so, fools: 'What, could ye not watch with one hour?' "

FOR a minute he looked Angelo straight the face.

"But no one," he concluded slowly, in describable pride, "no one in the world co ever seriously believe that I myself did sleep on that Thursday night in the garden."

It was a lovely spring day, and the almo trees were blossoming, delicately pink a coral like flamingo feathers, down the slop front of the white villa. From the terrace the top there was a wide view over the la scape, and all shapes and colors within i the far-off, air-blue mountains, the green gray olive groves on the nearer slopes; serpentine, dust-gray road through the va below; the free, fleeting groups of big clou and the noble, mathematically straight, dar blue line of the sea on the horizon—in the of the evening were as beautifully harmoni as if an angel had stood behind the shou of the observer and poured out it all from flute.

Angelo Santasilia, the famous sculptor owned the villa, was sitting on the terr shaping tiny figures in clay. His long work was over, and he was satisfied with his w But his three children—two fair-limbed l boys and a little girl with a skin as transpa as an almond blossom and big, childishly fathomable dark eyes—before consentin go to bed had demanded that these t equestrian statues should be ready by the morning. No one horseman was to be perior to another, yet they all were to b different that each of the children could mediately pick out its own from among th The task had gripped the artist's imaginat so that he was now deeply engrossed i His wife, Lucrezia, wrapped in a crim shawl, sat a little behind him, and smile her husband's gravity.

A nightingale sang in a distant thicket, all on a sudden another struck up, enraptu quite close by.

Angelo was still in his working smock great beauty since we last saw him had bec richer, almost blooming like that of a wo

A small man came from the house d toward husband and wife. He did not carr hat in his hand, for he had no hat, bu attitude was as dignified and deferential he had been sweeping the ground with panache of one. Lucrezia first caught sig him, and drew her husband's attentio him—but Angelo, who was just about to s a rearing horse, did not want to be interru Still when he turned his head, and recogn in the approaching figure the wand Giuseppino Pizzuti, a friend of old time waved his hand to him.

Giuseppino greeted his host as if their ing had taken place that very morning. Al same, the years had not passed over him out leaving their mark. He was even le than before and more poorly dressed. His brows were raised high on his forehead, a permanent deep amazement had placed there. He seemed to be without weight, l withered, rolled-up leaf.

At first he seemed quite unaffected b changed circumstances of his old compa in misfortune; indeed, he hardly seeme notice them at all. But when he was introd to Lucrezia and saw what a lovely wife A had, he was so deeply impressed that he s him "Signor Santasilia" and "Maestro."

"Nay," Angelo interrupted him, "speak so. I am no fine gentleman and no maste you remember where we last spoke toget

"Yes," Pizzuti answered after some liberation, "it was at the inn of Mariana Rat, the good home of thieves and smug down by the harbor."

"Aye, and let us talk together as w there," said Angelo.

Lucrezia after a while noticed that her husband's guest had three fingers missing on his right hand, and turned her face away. She was expecting her fourth child, and feared any impression of ugliness which might put its stamp upon the unborn baby. She therefore rose as quickly as with courtesy she could, remarked that the wanderer must be in need of something to eat and drink, and walked back to the villa to prepare something. The two men followed her with their eyes until she disappeared through the door.

"And how, Pino," asked the host, "have you been doing since I saw you last?"

The old man began to tell his story. He had traveled far and wide, had seen famous places and people and witnessed remarkable natural phenomena. He had also consoled the distressed and set on the right path those who had strayed from it. Suddenly he gave himself up to tears.

"Why do you weep, Pino?" asked Angelo.

"Oh, my friend, weep with me," Pino answered. "I have loved since last we met."

"Loved?" Angelo repeated, slowly and with astonishment, as if he were repeating a word of a foreign tongue.

"Oh, loved, loved!" cried Pino. "Life's sorest pain has penetrated and torn asunder even this heart of mine. A woman, radiant, triumphant like a song, smiled upon me—and went away again!"

"Life's sorest pain?" Angelo repeated as before."

"She was a great lady traveling from England," said Pino. "Three years ago, in Venice, as she got into her gondola, she gave me such a deep, friendly, animated glance, such a goddess glance, that thereby heaven came down and walked on earth! I followed her, we met again, and each time her eyes gave me the same greeting out of her soul's inexhaustible riches. Once she spoke to me. She was tall like a statue, she wore a silk robe that rustled faintly, her hair was like red-golden silk!"

Pizzuti raised his right hand to the sky. "But I," he cried out, "I lack these my three fingers, and will nevermore make my puppets dance! When she had gone away, the world was a void—and yet how full of pain! I had left one thing left to me in my infinite destitution: to talk with somebody who might possibly, just once in the course of the day, speak her name. I remained in Venice for two years, solely to sit with her gondolier, a plebeian who could neither sing nor play, hoping for this: that he would pronounce her name, as if waiting for sweet music to come from his lips. But he married, and his wife forbade me her house. O Angelo Santasilia—all life that I have in me consumes itself!"

Pino let his head fall onto his breast; tears poured down his face onto his greasy black cloak.

"You must not let that worry you," said Angelo. "It is a good thing to have a great sorrow. Or should human beings allow Christ to have died on the cross for the sake of our toothaches?"

After a while he continued: "Tell me her name, Pino. Then you will stay on in my house, and I will speak it once a day."

Pino closed his eyes, made two attempts to speak, but remained silent. He whispered, "I cannot."

Lucrezia's red-cheeked maid came from the house, smiling, with a tray containing wine, cheese and bread, and a cold chicken. Angelo poured out wine to his friend and to himself. The old wanderer was obviously hungry, yet he ate and drank slowly, as now he did everything.

"And you, Angelo," he said, "how have things gone with you?"

It was now Angelo's turn to report on his life in the seven years that had gone. He told Pino of the works he had completed since they had seen each other, and of the large orders he received from princes and cardinals, of the pupils who flocked to his school and of his children. When he stopped, Pino's gaze met his, and for some time they sat thus in silence. It came strange to Angelo to be sitting again with Pizzuti.

"Yes, you see, Pino," he at length said slowly. "All this—art, a lovely wife, beautiful children, renown, friends, wealth—all this will constitute a man's happiness, my happy life. But you know that there be rivers which at one place in their course disappear into the ground and run beneath it for a couple of miles. Woods and rose gardens grow in this ground, but beneath them runs the river. In that same way a river is running beneath my happiness, and only to you can I speak of it. That river is the secret which Lucrezia bears and keeps from me. For I do not know what happened on the night when I was hostage for Leonidas Allori in prison.

"She has never spoken of it. Many times I have waited for a word from her lips which would solve the riddle. On our wedding night I waited for it—and the river ran deep below our bridal bed. One day when we walked together along the seashore, and there was an offshore wind, and she gazed at me, I waited for it. But she has never spoken, her full sweet lips have always been sealed over the secret.

"She'll be right down—her mother's briefing her."

the most luxurious sheet
you ever dreamed on . . .

Mercerizing makes Miracale exquisitely silky-smooth!

NEW MIRACALE

210-thread mercerized percale only in famous Pacific Contours

Four box corners hold the Pacific Contour Bottom sheet wrinkle-free. No re-tucking in the morning—sides can't pull out!

Kick-fold gives six inches of extra toe room! . . . two box corners anchor the Pacific Contour Top* sheet to the mattress foot

Heavenly—the first, the only mercerized sheet! Pacific weaves the long strong fibres used for highest quality combed percale . . . 210 threads to the square inch. Then—a special mercerizing bath silkens, lustres, defuzzes, strengthens these fibres—for the finest sheet you can sleep on!

Miracale† Twin Bottom sheet, about $3.95. Twin Top sheet, about $4.29. Also in Double Size. Pillowcases. Sanforized®. White, Rose Pink, Pineapple Gold, Mint Green, Blue. Pacific Contours also in standard qualities. Widest range of sizes.

Pacific Mills, 1407 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.
"Contour" is the registered trademark for Pacific's mattress-fitting sheets. *Pat. Pend. †TM Pacific Mills

EVERYBODY'S CHANGING TO

PACIFIC Contour SHEETS

While I was still young, I felt that I might have to kill her if she continued to keep silent.

"But I have reflected," he went on, "that I have no claims on her. For the entire being of a woman is a secret, which should be kept. And one more deep secret to her becomes part of it, one charm more, a hidden treasure. It is said that the tree under which a murderer buries his victim will die, but the apple tree under which a girl buries her murdered child does blossom more richly and does give more perfect fruit than others—the tree transforms the hidden crime into white and rosy, and into delicious flavor. I must not expect her to part with this secret either."

He gazed out over the valley.

"And I have further thought," he said, "that in the moment when at last I should be asking Lucrezia, 'Tell me, for I suffer, what happened that night that Leonidas Allori came to you, in the house of the vintager, in the mountains? Did the master learn, then, that you and I had betrayed him?' she would turn her face toward me, her clear eyes dark with sorrow, and answer me: 'So you have known that your master went to the vintager's house in the mountains, and you have never told me that you knew! For seven years, day and night, you have hidden your knowledge from me, and even my kisses have not been able to make you speak!' Maybe, after that, she would leave me forever. Or again, maybe she would still stay with me for the sake of the children, and because my great fame gives her pleasure. But she would never again be my happy, smiling wife.

"And I have come to understand that she would be in the right. For in the mind and nature of a man a secret is an ugly thing, like a hidden physical defect. And thus," he finished, "the river runs beneath my life."

Pino remained silent for a while, glanced at his friend and then gazed at the mountains. "And how goes it?" he asked. "Can you sleep now?"

"Sleep?" Angelo repeated, as before, as if from its sound he were repeating a word from another language, "Aye, do you remember when I could not sleep? Yes, thanks, now I can sleep."

Again there was a silence.

"No," Pino said suddenly, "you are mistaken, and things are not as you imagine. I happen to know. A person who—because of you—did have this matter at heart, might—for your sake—ask Lucrezia, 'What happened the night your lover pledged his life for your husband? Did the great artist then get to know that you two, whom he had held dearest of all, and whose hearts and fates he had directed as by strings on his fingers, had betrayed him? Did the blow then break his great heart? Or did he stand up to it, even if staggering, trusting to the law of the golden section?' She would then look up at the inquirer, her eyes so clear that he would be ashamed to doubt even for a moment the truth of her words, and answer him, 'I am very sorry that I cannot tell you. But I do not remember. I have forgotten.'"

"Do you mean to tell me," Angelo asked in a low voice, "that you have asked her?"

"I have seen your wife for the first time today," answered Pino. "But you forget that I have once written marionette plays. I had then a lovely puppet, the jeune première of my theater, with rosy cheeks and white bosom, and with eyes of clear dark glass, who resembled Lucrezia."

When after a pause the old man again looked at Angelo, he noticed that he was smiling a little. "What are you thinking of, Angelo?" he asked.

"I was thinking of those small instruments that we call words, and by which we have to manage in this life of ours. I was thinking of how, by interchanging two everyday words in an everyday sentence, we alter our world. For when you had spoken, I first thought, 'Is that possible?'—then secondly, after a moment, 'That is possible.'"

They now for some time talked of other things, and to give Giuseppino pleasure, Angelo made him tell of his marionette theater. But from time to time the smile left the face of the old theater director, and he sank back into melancholy.

"But listen now, Pino," said his friend. "Today your heaven is seven years nearer to you then when we last met. There you will see again both your puppets and your milady. For I take it that you are still Demas, the thief on the cross who had Paradise promised him?"

"Well, Angelo," said Pizzuti, scratching his head with his two fingers, "there you bring up something to which I have been giving a good deal of thought. I certainly still do believe that I am that great sinner to whom hope was given. But how, now, did things really go with this thief on the cross?

"'This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise,' the Saviour said to him. But when on the evening of Good Friday Demas presented himself at the gate of Paradise, Christ was not there, and as you know, forty days passed before He came home in all His splendor. Very likely the young King of Heaven, in those days of great events, gave not much thought to an invitation. But I myself—better than most people—will know with what confusion and anxiety the poorly dressed guest did approach the gate.

"And I have pondered," Pino went on, "who will really have been present behind the gate at which Demas was staring, with the authority to let a thief into Paradise? The Rock of the Church, the great Fisherman Peter, at this dark hour crouched at the back of the high priest's house, farther away from Paradise than ever before or after. St. Mary Magdalene, whom Demas knew from Jerusalem, was sobbing into her long hair and had

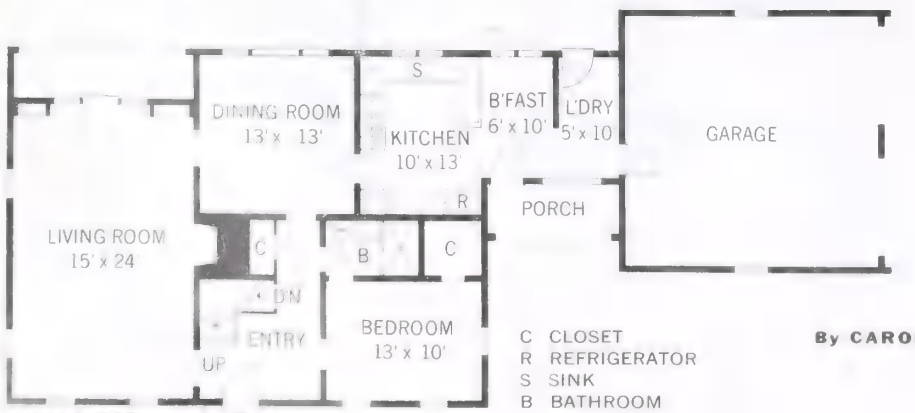
CONTINUED ON PAGE 216

ARCHITECT: OSCAR DE BOGDEN, A.I.A.; PHOTOGRAPHER: RUDOLPH E. LEPPERT, JR.

Up-to-date

TRADITIONAL

SECOND FLOOR



A happy blend of old and new, this house combines the best of the past with the best of the present.

A TOUR through this traditional plan explains its time-tested appeal. See how the central hall eliminates through traffic, leads directly to living and work areas, to the second floor and to the basement. The downstairs bedroom serves many uses—it's a study, guest room or children's playroom, a handy sickroom for isolating a case of measles or mumps too. The adjoining bath, with its hall entry, doubles as guest powder room.

Sleeping quarters upstairs are spacious, airy; the master bedroom has a quiet reading corner—for parents only! Hall closet and attic cupboards provide ample storage space.

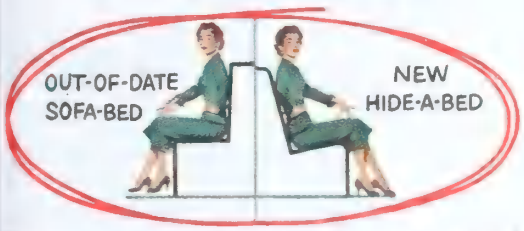
Barn-red clapboard, gray roof shakes, white trim and natural fieldstone masonry are becoming to this traditional design, and are attractive and practical as well.

TERRACE

FIRST FLOOR

C CLOSET
R REFRIGERATOR
S SINK
B BATHROOM

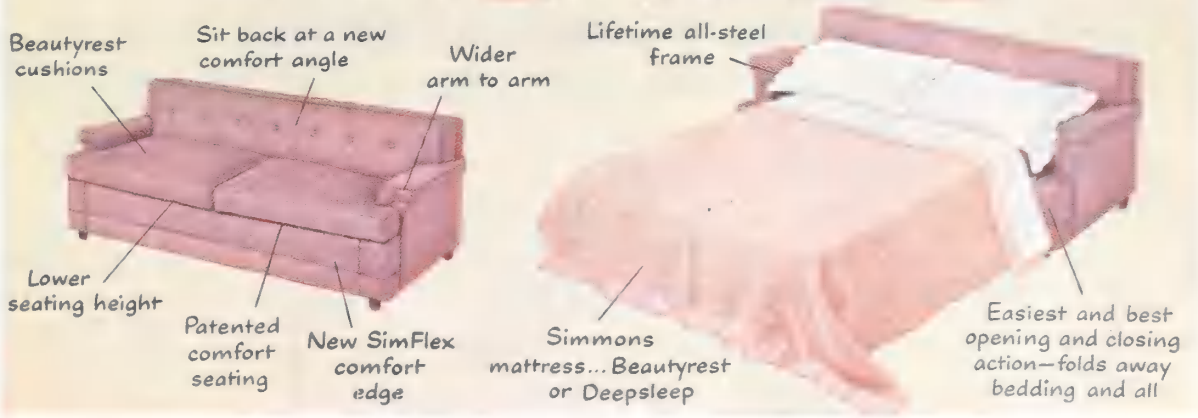
By CAROL L. MERCADO



Lower, lovelier, more seating comfort than ever. More than 30 sizes and styles. From $199 to $399.

T-Cushion Lawson model shown in ice pink metallic tweed. Also in hunter green, toast, turquoise and lime green. Full size, $279.50. Apt. size, $269.50.

Never before a sofa-bed so smart as the new luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed®!



Never before a sofa-bed as smart looking and as comfortable as the new Hide-A-Bed sofa! And inside all that sofa beauty is a genuine Simmons mattress for the best in healthful, restful sleep! (Beautyrest* mattress just $20 extra.)

Choose from more than 100 decorator fabrics. See the new luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed today!

Greater seating comfort—with lower seating height. Beautyrest cushions slope back to let you sit back. Soft cushion-front "gives" under your knees!

Read about these important features...some new, some exclusive...that make Hide-A-Bed unequalled as a sofa... unequalled as a bed!

Only Simmons makes HIDE-A-BED sofas

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office. Copr. 1955 by Simmons Co., Mdse. Mart, New York 22, N.Y.

Telephones around the house

save steps

save time

save YOU!

There's no measuring the convenience, security and pleasure you'll enjoy with telephones in convenient places.

A bedside telephone, for example, puts protection within easy reach. It's a real blessing, too, when you or someone else must stay abed.

In your kitchen, a handy telephone saves countless steps and precious energy. Upstairs and down, telephones make things easier for everyone.

And the cost? You'll find that these additional telephones will add very little to what you now pay for telephone service. Just call the business office of your local Bell telephone company.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Reminding you that someone, somewhere would enjoy hearing your voice today

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 214

not yet made up her mind to go to the grave. Those friendly saints with whom we are now familiar—Francis, Anthony and sweet Catherine—came upon the heavenly stage only many centuries later. The gentle Blessed Virgin, had she by that time been Queen of Heaven, would have understood all that was going on in Demas' heart, and so would have come to the gate herself, with her crown on and her retinue of angels—but even her strong heart could not hold or bear any more on that Friday night. Yet after a long time, I have imagined, the little children whom King Herod had had put to death in Bethlehem came running along to throng around the newcomer. No doubt they laughed at the sorry figure collapsed in a small heap over his sundered bones, perhaps they did even point their little fingers at him, as children will do at a ragged cripple. But in the end two of them ran in to fetch Saint Anne, Christ's blessed grandmother. And as this worthy woman now appeared at the gate and spoke to him, Demas suddenly realized how everything is explained and made clear to the blessed in heaven, for even after the happenings of Good Friday, she was mild and bright as a lighted candle.

"I have now imagined the following conversation to take place between the two of them.

"'Come in,' the lady says, 'come in, my good man, you are expected. But my grandson has been delayed, for He has found it necessary to descend into hell.'

"'O Lady,' Demas answers, much ashamed, 'there will have been some mistake, just as I expected, and it is down there that I am to see Him once more. May I make so bold as to ask the way, for I want nothing better than to be where He is.'

"'Certainly not,' said Saint Anne. 'You must do as you are told. And I myself very much want to speak with one who has seen Him so recently.'

"'O Lady,' says Demas again, 'how can one such as I discourse with you on that which no man on earth can describe?'

"'I know, I know,' says the holy grandmother. 'Who would know better than I? My good man, you did not see Him when He first learned to walk. I myself held one of His little hands, and His mother held the other—never have I seen a child so like his mother! No, it is as you say—it is indescribable!'

"And led by Lady Saint Anne's hand—that same hand of which she had spoken—Demas stepped across the threshold of Paradise."

Angelo laughed at his friend's story.

"Aye, if I had still got my theater," said Pizzuti, carried away by his own eloquence, "I should have played this scene on the stage. Might it not have been sublime and thrilling, dear Angelo? Now it must content itself to become reality someday.

"And you yourself now," he said after a minute. "Are you going to Paradise? And shall we meet and talk together there, as we do here now?"

Angelo for a long time found no answer. He took up one of his small clay figures and set it on the balustrade, a little to the left.

"A man is more than one man," he said slowly. "And the life of a man is more than one life. The young man who was Leonidas Allori's chosen disciple, who felt that at his hand he would become the greatest artist of his age, and who loved his master's wife—he will not go to heaven. He was too light of weight to mount so high."

He set up another figure on the balustrade, at some distance from the first and to the right of it.

"And this famous sculptor, Angelo Santasilia," he went on, "whom princes and cardinals beseech to work for them, this good husband and father—he will not go to heaven either. And do you know why? Because he is not at all eager to go there."

He placed his last figure in between the two others, farther back on the balustrade.

"Do you see, Pino?" he said softly. "These three tiny toy figures are placed to mark three corners of a rectangle, in which the sum of the two is to the length as the length to the sum of the two. These, you know, are the proportions of the golden section."

He let his skilled hands fall to rest in his lap.

"But," he finished very slowly, "the young man whom you met at the inn of Mariana-the-Rat—the good home of thieves and smugglers down by the harbor—the young man with whom you talked there at night, Pino—he will go to heaven." END

"Our Teen-Agers Have Become Careful Drivers"

JUDGE HAROLD G. KNIGHT,* of the Montgomery County Juvenile Court, Pennsylvania, began in 1951 a new system of dealing with traffic violations by juveniles. He requested police in the various towns to refer all juvenile offenders to the Juvenile Court, rather than to justices of the peace, as formerly. Then he worked out an arrangement with the director of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Highway Safety, whereby operating licenses would be suspended on recommendation of the court, and reinstated only with the court's approval. Montgomery, a test county for this system, has shown positive results, as evidenced by these comments:

"This system has created a deep impression on our teen-agers, and has been a big help to us. Violations have dropped appreciably."

ALWYN STREEPER
Chief of Police, Abington

"Where formerly teen-age operators were of the wildest type, they are now becoming very careful operators of motor vehicles. Arrests among juveniles have dropped by 65 per cent."

CHARLES DICKENS
Chief of Police, Lansdale

"Violations have decreased at least 75 per cent. There are no fixes, and the teen-agers who operate in Norristown now are capable, careful drivers. I hope the system will continue."

ROBERT REILLY
Chief of Police, Norristown

"Juvenile violations have decreased 50 per cent."

GEORGE A. MCLAUGHLIN
Supt., Lower Merion Police Dept.

"In the past three years, we have had only five repeaters."

PETER J. FRASCINO
Chief Probation Officer, Montgomery County

"This system in use in Montgomery County is the best in the commonwealth. Judge Knight has not been swayed by threats or by attempts to fix cases, yet he has been fair. He has returned licenses when I personally would not, because he felt the juvenile had rehabilitated himself. We are for this method."

EARL PITZER
Director, Bureau of Highway Safety, Pennsylvania

*President Judge of the Thirty-eighth Judicial District, Pennsylvania, who also sits as Judge of the Juvenile Court.

Printed in U.S.A.

8 of Gorham's 23 timeless patterns: (A) "Theme"* (B) "Camellia"* (C) "Willow"* (D) "Willow"* (knife) (E) "Lyric"* (F) "Buttercup"* (G) "Chantilly"* (H) "Rondo"* (I) "Décor"*

Let Gorham show you how to tell right from wrong when you're picking a sterling pattern ook first at the fork. That's how experts determine ie full beauty of a pattern. Because. while you will ee the design prettily expressed on all the other ieces of a place-setting. experts consider the fork ie real key piece of a sterling pattern.

Then, when you've looked your fill at all the forks, nd you find your eye coming back again and again one particular pattern. ask to see it in a complete lace-setting. Pick up the spoon and move it slowly om side to side so it catches the light. Notice hether it has a glow that seems to come from deep nside. This is how you learn something of the en-uring beauty of the sterling. All Gorham* Sterling as this deeper glow that grows more beautiful with se because it begins with the fineness of the sterling itself: and the sterling Gorham uses is finer than even the government standard for sterling.

Now pick up the knife. and examine it closely. This is the piece that tells you the most about the solid strength of your sterling. how it will stand up to day-in, day-out use. If it's Gorham. you'll notice the knife handle is seamless. all in one piece. which assures you that it's dent-resistant. and won't rattle or come loose. Only Gorham makes knives this way.

Finally. look for depth of cut in the pattern you like best. This is the expert's way of making sure a pattern won't blur with good hard use. And if you find that every little detail is lovingly deep-cut as it is in Gorham "Buttercup" or "Chantilly," for example, then you'll know for sure you've made the right choice.

Next step. Why don't you ask your dealer about the new budget plan which makes it easy to have a whole chest full of Gorham Sterling right from the start and pay for it as little as $5.00 a week. Single place-settings start at $27.50. Fed. Tax included.

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS SINCE 1831.

*TRADE MARKS © 1955 BY THE GORHAM CO. PROVIDENCE, R. I.

TWO REAL VALUES – PERSONALLY YOURS!

Personal Size Ivory

4 FOR THE PRICE OF 3

You save! You get 4 cakes of Personal Size Ivory for about the same as 3 cakes of other leading toilet soaps!

You'll love the saving and you'll love the purity and mildness Ivory's so famous for! Remember—the milder your beauty soap, the prettier your skin! And more doctors recommend pure, mild Ivory for baby's skin—and yours—than any other soap! Put your trust in Ivory—your skin is so pretty to look at . . . when you have "That Ivory Look!"

Personalized Stationery

ONLY 50¢ and 4 wrappers from Personal Size Ivory

Custom-Quality Stationery! Rich Ripple Bond Printed in Aristocratic "Bernhard" Type with YOUR Name, Address, City & State!

Such Quality! Snowy white paper with a rich "feel"! Your name in clear Oxford Blue.

Perfect Taste! Useful for both social and business letters. Neat "Portfolio Pack"—ideal for traveling.

Such a Saving! You couldn't duplicate this value unless you paid more than twice as much! And what a thoughtful, impressive, inexpensive gift! Better order several!

50 single sheets (7" x 5½"), 25 envelopes

SEND TODAY . . . OFFER HOLDS FOR LIMITED TIME ONLY!

Personal Size Ivory
P.O. Box 33, Dept. A
Cincinnati 1, Ohio

Please send __ box(es) of Personalized Stationery. I am enclosing 50¢ in coin and 4 Personal Size Ivory wrappers FOR EACH BOX. Please print the Stationery as follows:

1st line _____
(PLEASE PRINT)

2nd line _____

3rd line _____

Please send this stationery to:

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____ STATE _____

NOTE: Use a plain piece of paper for additional orders. Mail 50¢ in coin and 4 Personal Size Ivory wrappers FOR EACH BOX ORDERED. Be sure to use sufficient postage when mailing your order. Please allow at least 21 days for delivery. Offer expires Nov. 1, 1955. Good only in Continental U.S. (including Alaska) and Hawaii.

No wonder families see eye-to-eye on NEW IPANA!

(It's the best-tasting way to fight decay)

Once your family tries new-formula Ipana, we're sure you'll all agree with the enthusiastic users above. Because Ipana's wonderful new minty flavor makes brushing teeth a pleasure.

In fact, new Ipana tastes so good it beat all three other leading tooth pastes hands down—after nearly four thousand "hidden-name" home taste tests.

Destroys decay and bad-breath bacteria with WD-9

Even more important is the way new-formula Ipana with wonder-ingredient WD-9 fights tooth decay—stops bad breath all day. It destroys most mouth bacteria with every single brushing, even bacteria your tooth brush can't reach.

So enjoy new Ipana . . . and trust your family's precious teeth to it. At all toiletry counters in the familiar yellow and red-striped carton.

New-Formula IPANA®

WITH BACTERIA-DESTROYER WD-9

Destroys hidden decay and bad-breath bacteria.

Beats all other leading brands for taste.

Ipana A/C Tooth Paste (Ammoniated Chlorophyll) also contains bacteria-destroyer WD-9 (Sodium Lauryl Sulphate).

Products of Bristol-Myers

you'll enjoy summer more—with extra CANNON TOWELS for all those extra summer needs

New Cannon Stripes! Smart as can be—in oversize bath towels, big family-size beach towels for dozens of summer uses: beach, backyard, car seats, picnics! Bath sizes, 69¢ to 98¢; beach sizes to $2.98.

Extra Luxury for all those extra summer baths and showers! Big, beautiful Cannon Gold Label towels, the finest you can buy—extra thick, extra soft, extra extra absorbent! Bath size, about $1.98.

Midsummer Value! Cannon summer-weights that lap up water, yet dry out in a jiffy, because of Cannon's exclusive Beauti-Fluff finish. Ideal for vacation travel and small fry. Bath sizes, 69¢ to 98¢.

Carefree Colors—Cannon's own exclusive colors, airy as summer itself! Stock up with your favorites in these sturdy value-packed beauties, for camp, cottage, pool or guest house. Bath size, about 98¢.

CANNON Cannon Mills, Inc., 70 Worth Street, New York City 13 Towels • Sheets • Bedspreads • Draperies • Stockings • Terry Cloth

Journal

Contents

June, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 6

Journalities

EVAN HUNTER, whose first novel, The Blackboard Jungle, caused many drums to beat when it was published in the JOURNAL last year, has written the short story on page 48 titled The Fallen Angel. It's about a circus aerialist who learned to perform the most shocking stunt in the twentieth century. We want to tell you right now we don't think it ever really happened. We do not. It's fiction, that's what it is. Still, and all—well, it might have happened. Strange things do happen at circuses, and it's just possible a man could train himself to—but, of course, we don't believe it happened to Evan Hunter. We do not. He and his lovely wife, Anita, and their three young children were snugly situated in a New York suburb, last we heard. Evan Hunter is not and never was the daring young man on a flying trapeze. Or was he?

Evan Hunter

Hardly anybody pays any attention to The Bride's Sister—and that's a story (see page 58). One writer who has is ANN CHIDESTER, who lives in Stillwater, Minnesota, the town where she was born. She reports: "I have just returned from Europe where, just as here in my home town, I met people I knew everywhere. I have written five novels and innumerable short stories, a good percentage of which went into a wastebasket. I have been writing for fifteen years and find it much more difficult now than in the beginning—but more stimulating and natural too."

Ann Chidester

Here is a photograph of photographer TANA HOBAN taking a photograph of photographer TANA HOBAN. She does it with mirrors, probably, so don't worry about it. Tana does most of the photography for the Sub-Deb page and has done many JOURNAL covers. She says her family consists of one husband, one daughter, one cat, four finches and three fish. She was an artist before becoming a photographer and she likes to cook and sew. She has written a book, just published, called How to Photograph Children. She is also a do-it-yourself carpenter, plumber, electrician and interior designer, having completely remodeled, with her husband's help, their four-story house in Philadelphia. With mirrors, we said.

Tana Hoban

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

OFF THE CITY STREETS, Lester Atwell . 46

Stories

THE FALLEN ANGEL, Evan Hunter . 48
THE BRIDE'S SISTER, Ann Chidester . 58
UP HOME (Third part of five), Ardyth Kennelly . 64

Special Features

CAN WOMEN BE LADIES?, Dorothy Thompson . 11
NURSES . . . A MAJOR NATIONAL NEED . 29
OPPORTUNITIES UNLIMITED, Margaret Hickey . 29
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 43
THEY LET US TALK TO THE RUSSIANS . 50
BORN TO BE QUEEN (Fourth part of six), Betty Hoffman and A. N. P. . 54
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 68
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 92
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES:
Victory . . . Ten Years After, Jean Todd Freeman . 131

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 19
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 34
THE BOY-WATCHER'S GUIDE (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 38
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 41
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 45
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 69
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 105
REFERENCE LIBRARY . 118
THIS IS A NEVER-PUT-BACKER, Munro Leaf . 164

Fashion and Beauty

THE BEST TWO WEEKS OF THE YEAR, Wilhela Cushman . 60
SO EASY TO MAKE, Nora O'Leary . 62
PRESCRIPTION FOR BEAUTY, Dawn Crowell Norman . 136
SUMMER'S THE TIME TO SEW, Nora O'Leary . 140

Food and Homemaking

COMING OUT PARTY, Ann Batchelder . 66
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 70
A NEW LOOK AT LAUNDRY CENTERS, Margaret Davidson . 102
BOUNTY ON A BUDGET, Anne Patton . 142

Architecture and Interior Decoration

MAJOR JOSIAH COFFIN HOUSE, Richard Pratt . 52
VICTORIAN BEDROOM, Henrietta Murdock . 138
LARGE-SCALE LIVABILITY IN A THREE-BEDROOM HOUSE, Carol L. Mercado . 156

Poems

FROM THE GARDEN, Christie Lund Coles . 75
HOW FAIR, Elizabeth McFarland . 81
UNTIL YOU CAME, Barbara Shook Conklin . 86
"WHO WEARS THE WORLD AS A GARMENT," Dorothy Lee Richardson . 97
PIANO LESSON, Mary G. G. Burns . 100
SILHOUETTE, Elizabeth Graham . 106
THE NIGHT WIND, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 114
TO A MARIE LAURENÇIN GIRL, Elizabeth Coatsworth . 125
SUMMER CAPE SONG, Katherine Garrison Chapin . 145
THE WIDOW, Alma Roberts Giordan . 153

Cover Photograph by Mead-Maddick

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered ▪▪ second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters ▪ all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is ▪ coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on ▪ bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Trayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Harsh shampoos "dry" your hair!

Halo Glorifies it!

No other leading shampoo leaves your hair so sparkling clean—so shining bright—yet is so mild as Halo!

YES, tests in hardest water prove no other leading shampoo leaves your hair so sparkling clean—so shining bright—yet is so mild as Halo!

No wonder you'll see a beautiful difference in your hair . . . when you change to milder, gentler Halo!

The reason—there are no drying, irritating chemicals, sticky oils or harsh soaps in Halo! Milder, gentler Halo's exclusive "glorifying" ingredient removes dull film and loose dandruff . . . leaves your hair cleaner, softer, more sparkling—never dry! Halo is so effective, just one Halo shampoo brings out all the natural brilliance of even dull hair . . . makes it more fragrant, much easier-to-manage. All without special rinsing!

So change from harsh shampoos to Halo—and see the shining difference! Try the 29¢ size—or get an average three months supply 89¢

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Halo—

glorifies dry, oily or normal hair

You hear a bigger whoosh

You smell a fresher aroma

You taste an extra richness

Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

Chase & Sanborn

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

Our readers write us

All-Around Approach

San Jose, California

Dear Editors: When you describe incomes less than ours and show families living in less fortunate circumstances, my perspective changes and I realize how lucky I am. That's why I like your "all-around" approach—and why I found your recent issue on delinquency so excellent. You've made the "woman's world" a real outlook on the world.

Sincerely yours,

DELLA BELANSKY

Dear Editors—Help!

Boston, Massachusetts

Dear Editors: I couldn't live without some of my modern kitchen devices—but the big hitch, I find, is in getting these things serviced. When will manufacturers learn that none of even their fine appliances are better than the service that keeps them operating? Can it be, in reaching for automatic devices we've made them too complicated? When servicemen fail to keep an appliance operating, the housewife holds it against that brand, and will be influenced when she makes a next purchase.

In our kitchen we have a refrigerator that is claimed to defrost automatically, but every day a pool of water collects in the tray where we are supposed to keep the meat cold. We called in the local serviceman, who looked it over and then admitted that he can't cope with the situation. In fact, he claims he can't understand the instructions from the home office! Can't you use your influence to remedy this situation?

Desperately,

MRS. ROBERT F. FIELD

Children and Pets

Toulon, Illinois

Dear Editors: My idea in sending you this photo was simply this: pets are more than a means of teaching children responsibility, something for them to "take care of." They're companions—something they can freely show affection toward, something they can love.

Companions.

Sincerely,

ERNEST ROBSON

A Question of Loving

Detroit, Michigan

Dear Editors: Your Children in Trouble has caused me to retract a statement I made to my daughter only a few days ago—and to urge her not to act upon my too hasty advice.

Mary's neighbor is a businessman whose work takes him far and wide over the world. His five-year-old son, James, likes to play with my grandson—so much so, in fact, that he is at my daughter's most of the time. And this causes a few problems. James apparently doubts that he belongs to a family; he has had a different nanny in four different countries, and now is left at home with a nurse who cannot cope with him.

When Mary herself became quite disturbed over problems she had with the boy, I—all sympathy for her—said, "I don't see why you should be obliged to discipline James when you're so busy caring for your own child."

Then last night I read Children in Trouble and The Child Nobody Cares About, and I was ashamed of my earlier reply. I told my daughter that for her son's sake as well as for James', we should both take an interest in his problems. And we shall—for we know it is simply a question of loving.

You, in these pages to cherish, have reached straight to my heart.

Sincerely,

A.S.G.

Gold Under the Wings

Bartow, Florida

Dear Editors: Every magazine I've read recently has had one or more articles about the schools, but it seems to me that all of them have left out something. I call it gold under the wings. And I would like to tell you why I call it that:

I had tidied my desk at school and leaned back with a sigh of satisfaction. For once I had done everything planned. Then came a timid knock and one of my slowest learners. In his hands he tenderly held a dead moth. "I just had to give you this. We were so busy today we didn't have time to talk about it."

I thanked him, and then determined to have science lesson right then and there. To all my questions he shook his head. Then he began a backward retreat. Suddenly he stopped. He hurried back, his face suffused with happiness.

"I don't know any of those things you asked me; but, look, there's gold under the wings!" Then I knew my day hadn't been perfect. It had passed like a well-oiled machine. I thought of a little boy riding a crowded school bus holding a fragile moth so carefully that not even a speck of gold was lost.

First thing next morning Randy showed his moth. Nothing was said about scientific facts. We concentrated on the gold under the wings!

And that's what I want to talk about now. Aren't we becoming so enmeshed in problems that we're forgetting and neglecting some far more vital needs? I want my pupils to learn the skills and facts they will need; but more than that, I want them to have a dream, new worlds to conquer, a desire to serve one's fellow man. I want them to know God.

To me there is nothing more fascinating than teaching. You aren't just a teacher. You're a doctor discovering what each child needs, a psychologist, an artist helping to create and nurture ideas; more than anything else, you're a friend, someone never too busy to listen.

We need more teachers desperately. I hope I can say something which will give young men and women a glimpse of the things I find most heart-warming:

That tense moment when everyone is trying to figure an arithmetic problem and suddenly a face has that "I've found the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow" look.

When the bell for dismissal rings, and I walk with them down the steps, telling each one good-by and listening to last-minute rush of things they've just thought to tell me.

The things they carry around in their pockets and eagerly show me, inviting me into a magic world! One day we are going to have a lesson woven around those treasures. If we run out of things, I can empty my pocketbook!

One of my favorite times is early in the morning when we're all standing at attention. I love America. I believe that it

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things
...for yours, too

. . . for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHINE!

FOR DIAPERS . . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap you can buy for fine hand washables.

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like luncheon cloths, curtains, and blankets thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

99 44/100% PURE®

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

When an argument gets hectic, should you—

☐ Tape record it ☐ Break it up ☐ Take the loser's side

One man's politics (or ball club or disc collection) can often be another man's poison ivy! So before either arguer blows his stack, take over. Shatter the chatter—tactfully. Maybe with music; or a funny story; anything you and the other gals can think of to quickly change the subject and save the party from bogging down. You can save yourself many an anxious moment at calendar time, as well. For when you choose *Kotex, you're getting protection without fail. You're sure of the softness, safety, complete absorbency you need—to maintain your poise, your peace of mind.

Quick way out of your hero's heart?

☐ Confess you can't cook ☐ Be a mambo maniac ☐ Kiss and tell

All those sweet nothings he whispered in her ear, last night . . . all cancelled, in nothing flat! Why? Because today a complete playback reached his blushing ears! Only a chrome dome babbles to her cronies; broadcasts her Romeo's romancing. It's a fatal mistake. On certain days, you need make no mistakes about sanitary protection—not with Kotex. For this napkin can be worn on either side, safely; and you get special softness that holds its shape.

What's smart to have on an auto trip?

☐ Wisp control ☐ A face lift ☐ Dramamine ☐ Hitchhikers

Seeing America this summer? Look pretty, please—for America (Mrs. and Mr.) will be seeing you, too! On a long jalopy jaunt, carry a bottle of skin freshener to give your face a quick wash. Bring hair spray, for wisp control. And at "that" time, too, you can meet the public eye serenely—what with Kotex and those flat pressed ends preventing telltale outlines. Try all 3 sizes of Kotex; it's the only way to learn which one best suits you . . . Regular, Junior or Super.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins

Made for each other—Kotex and Kotex sanitary belts—and made to keep you comfortable. Of strong, soft-stretch elastic, they're designed to prevent curling, cutting or twisting. So lightweight! And Kotex belts stay flat even after many washings. Buy two . . . for a change!

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

is the land of the free and the home of the brave. We can't afford to let our future leaders down. Can't we—church, home, school, newspapers, comic books and TV—get together?

Sincerely,
ANNE McCALL

Love Letter to an Aunt

Hartford, Connecticut

Dear Editor: You ought to write about my Aunt Jenny. She takes care of me and my grandfather. She lets me have dogs and cats and turtles and snakes.

She does it herself.

She bought us a house because we were living in an apartment and she is shingling it all by herself.

Yours truly,
BOBBY BOGDAN

P.S. I'm sending you a picture of my aunt and a picture of me and my dog.

▶ Bobby, 12, thinks everybody ought to buy the JOURNAL. He regrets other kids can't see the zooky hat Aunt Jenny made him, so their mothers could copy, but agrees that Aunt Jenny, professional woman and homemaker, takes precedence. We agree with Bobby. ED.

Speaking as a Husband—

Cholon, Indochina

Dear Editors: The opportunity to read your magazine in this far-away corner of the world seems not easy, for they are at least fifty days behind the published date. Here, I want to tell you how much we appreciate everything in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

As a Christian looking for a better world, I like your editorials; as a teacher and father I like the way you deal with the problems concerning the teen-agers; and also as a husband, I feel so proud to watch my wife improving our home life by reading your magazine.

Hope to hear a word from you, many thanks. Sincerely,

SZE-TO KWONG

Army Gripes

Berkeley, California

Dear Bruce: Since most of my buddies were in the Army, and the group of us represents a pretty broad (if not very deep) body of military experience, I seem to spend quite a lot of time reminiscing. Poor old Army. What a pitiful instrument to have put your trust in. If you have an ear among the Younger Set—I don't particularly mean the Ivy League younger set—you've heard that the boys look forward to going in as they would to prison terms, and that they come out, most of them, filled with resentment. The unfortunate thing is that the Army is bending over backward to make things just as pleasant for them as it can. In my opinion, it's bent so far backward it'll be hard to straighten up again.

Looking back from the distance of about three years to my enlisted experience, and more than a year to my last commissioned service, my formerly incoherent feelings are beginning to take shape. By order of the commanding officer, I conducted a survey in our company in Germany on why the men weren't signing up again. Questionnaire: no signature required, use back of sheet for additional comments. Every possible complaint was made. The food was overdone, or underdone; the sergeants were incompetent, or the officers; the chain of command was too strictly observed, or not strictly enough; discipline too rigid, and too lax; uniforms unsatisfactory, pass policy, leave policy, promotion policy, all unsatisfactory. The boys just didn't like the military.

And neither did I, but until recently I didn't know why either. I can see now it was that having responsibility without authority is an impossible situation. In 1948 arrived the "new Army," the "citizens' Army"; distinctions of rate and rank were very largely abolished; a "policy" was proclaimed by Washington, and "implemented" with many "directives," "special regulations," and "standard operating procedures"; the whole business culminated in the Manual for Courts-Martial of 1951. The effect of all this was much too large and complex for me to try to deal with here. Unless you want me to write about 20,000 words on the subject (and I'm sure you don't), it's enough to say that while the authority of the sergeant was abolished both in fact and theory, the authority of the junior officer (to and including major) was abolished only in fact.

This preposterous state of affairs leads to my second complaint: that having jobs to do, recalcitrant timeservers to do them with, and no power to compel, the proud officer of our citizens' Army is obliged to spend many painful hours trying to justify his failures.

I suffered with it, but no worse than anyone else. I don't believe I was a particularly good officer, but I know I wasn't a particularly poor one. It's the system. Yours,

WARREN

▶ When asked for permission to print the above excerpt from his letter, Warren—now a law student—said, "You understand, I'm sure, that you'll be publishing an unpopular point of view. If anyone's moved to comment, the comments will take issue. The ex-privates will be quick to point out what gall the man has to have been an officer and afterward complained about it, while the ex-colonels will hasten to correct the false impressions lent by this upstart lieutenant. No doubt there's some justice in both viewpoints." ED.

What to Do with Old Specs

Short Hills, New Jersey

Dear Editors: Do you know about New Eyes for the Needy? This is a nonprofit organization which provides new eyeglasses and artificial eyes for people who cannot otherwise afford them. The work was started by Mrs. Arthur Terry, who died in 1947, and now is carried on by the Short Hills Junior Service League. Up to 1953, more than 75,000 people had been helped.

The system is this: Old eyeglasses are collected, and reusable frames are set aside. (Lenses without frames cannot be used.) Metal frames and old gold and silver scrap are sent to be melted and redeemed for cash. This fund is then used to buy new prescription glasses.

Distribution of new glasses and artificial eyes is uncomplicated. A needy person may apply to a hospital, clinic or welfare agency—or directly to us. He is then examined and referred to an optician for glasses paid for by the organization.

The need for optical scrap is greater now than ever! Please help by sending your old eyeglasses and gold and silver scrap to New Eyes for the Needy, Inc., Short Hills, New Jersey. Help, too, by telling others about this unique charity. Sincerely,

ABBY N. DUNN

she's got VIV

you can have it, too!)

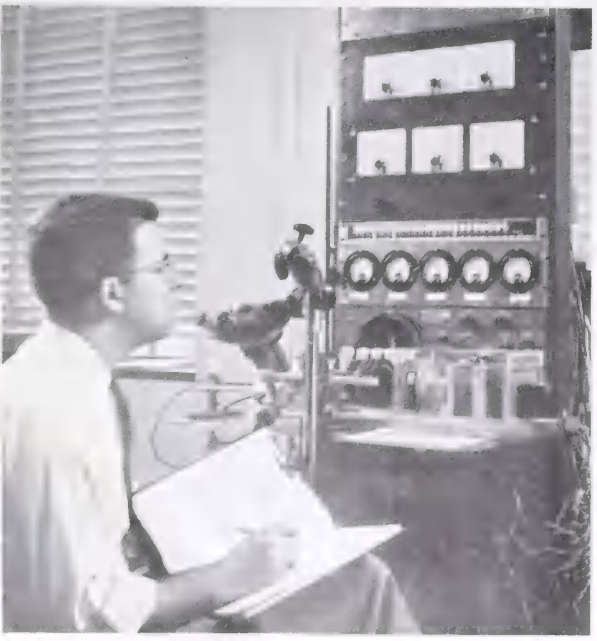
s not so much beauty as it is personal vibrancy and sparkle, and all those efinable qualities that make everyone instantly aware of her.

For now there's a new lipstick that brings out all the vividness and sparkle he real you with exciting colors that make you look and feel vividly alive. It's the new lipstick by Toni. VIV's new High-Chroma Formula gives you the most vivid colors woman has ever worn. Choose from six bright shades, each as sparkling as the id Coral you see here. Try VIV, that vivid new lipstick by Toni.

mfortable, long-lasting and very, very vivid.

new viv lipstick
by Toni $1.10 plus tax

The Gillette Co.



An Advertisement Presented in the Public Interest by New York Life

Should Your Child be an Electronic Engineer?

by Mervin J. Kelly

President, Bell Telephone Laboratories, as told to DONALD ROBINSON

At Bell Telephone Laboratories, where the Nike guided missile system was developed, flight problems are worked out with electro-mechanical equipment simulating Nike, providing in a few months flight data which would otherwise take years.

Making experimental transistors—tiny, solid amplifiers which do the work of vacuum tubes—is done automatically by this machine now being developed at Bell Telephone Laboratories. It employs many principles which are bringing automation to industry.

AN AGE of electronic miracles lies ahead of us. The next few decades will witness some of the most exciting advances in the history of this wonderful new science.

Just take the field of communications. In the predictable future, you really will be able to see as well as hear the person with whom you are talking on the telephone. Each telephone may be equipped with its own television screen.

The day is coming when there will be a powerful radio transmitter and receiver no bigger than a wristwatch. You'll be able to carry it in your pocket and use it wherever you go.

Business procedures will be revolutionized by electronic devices.

The boys and girls who choose electronic engineering as a career will participate in these forward strides and countless others. They will have an opportunity to help open great new scientific frontiers.

I envy them the broad horizons that stretch out before them.

Electronics covers such a wide area that many people are confused about it. Again and again, I am asked,

"Precisely what does an electronic engineer do?"

The answer is simple. The electronic engineer is concerned with all spheres of science that depend for their effect on the negative charge of electricity which we call the electron. Radar, radio and television are three examples of the electronic engineer's work. The electronic computer—the so-called artificial brain—is a fourth. There are many more.

If he is involved in research, the electronic engineer generally spends his time developing and designing electronic devices. If he is in the manufacturing end, he plans and supervises the production, operation and maintenance of electronic equipment.

Today, the demand for electronic engineers is a vast one. The industry has grown so fast that there just aren't enough. According to the National Society of Professional Engineers, less than ten percent of the 450,000 professional engineers in the United States specialize in electronics.

Opportunities for advancement are, therefore, excellent. In most reputable companies, the young engineer is limited solely by his talent and enthusiasm. As he demonstrates the capacity for it, he is sure to receive more and more responsible work to do.

The rewards of the profession are large. A graduate of an engineering college can expect a starting salary of $360 or $375 a month. Within ten years, if he has evidenced ability, he should be earning twice that much. He probably won't become a millionaire. Few engineers do. But top men in the field can anticipate an income of $25,000 or $30,000 a year.

Over and beyond that, the average electronic engineer gets a lot more out of his profession than his salary. I know I do.

There is a challenge in electronic engineering that is hard to match—the challenge of taking a nebulous idea and making it assume shape as a constructive, operating reality.

I can remember as vividly as if it were today the thrill that came when a group of us Bell engineers were working on the first trans-Atlantic radio telephone.

The problem was a tough one. The biggest vacuum tube available could produce only 250 watts. We had to develop a tube capable of twenty to twenty-five times that output.

It was my good fortune to be able to design such a tube.

Then we had to devise a system that would use this tube to transmit voices unfailingly across the 3,000 miles of static-ridden Atlantic water.

We built an experimental station out on Long Island and started transmission tests to England. Deliberately, we picked the most difficult sentences in the language for transmission to see if they could be heard and understood there.

"Joe took father's shoe bench out," we said.

And, "She was waiting at my lawn."

And, "Why do people eat oysters?"

Could these sentences be understood—not just once but day in and day out, no matter what the hour or the weather?

Finally, the word came back. Our messages were getting through. Trans-Atlantic telephone service was assured.

I was a very happy man.

There are still other rewards. The electronic engineer has the respect of his community as a well-educated professional man. He has the gratification of doing work which is beneficial to mankind. Just think of the lives that have been saved, for example, by the X-ray tube. In these days of international stress, he also has the satisfaction of knowing that he can make a marked contribution to the defense of democracy. More than one-half of the electronic industry is now engaged in defense work. The continental defense system is all electronic. The brain which makes the Army's land-to-air missile Nike so effective in hunting out enemy planes and destroying them is electronic. The instrumentation of atomic weapons like the H-bomb, the A-bomb and the warheads on missiles is electronic. In fact, the electronic engineer is as essential to atomic weaponry as the nuclear physicist.

e first trans-Atlantic telephone cable will require more than 0 underwater amplifiers with vacuum tubes that can give interrupted service for years. Here research specialists ke transmission measurements on an experimental model.

I am not saying that electronic engineering does not have its drawbacks. Certainly, it is not the field for a man absorbed only in money-making. No man who cares merely about getting rich should submit himself to the disciplines of such a creative technology.

It is not the most attractive field for the man who wants to go into business for himself. Too much capital is necessary for the average electronic engineer ever to set up a laboratory or business of his own.

And, it is surely not the field for the rugged individualist who hates to collaborate with others. More and more, electronic engineering has become dependent on teamwork.

When the Bell Laboratories began its research on solid state physics, shortly after the end of World War II, a group of three senior engineers and ten technical aides was set up. As it probed deeper into the matter, the group was enlarged. Soon we had almost 30 men in it.

Out of their three years of teamwork came the transistor, the epochal device which is replacing the vacuum tube and has metamorphosed electronics.

Had these men not been able to work together, the transistor would probably never have been invented.

How can you tell whether your son is fitted to be an electronic engineer?

I'd say that you first should determine whether he has a scientific bent. Find out whether he likes mathematics and makes good marks in it. How about his physics? Do the experiments fascinate him?

If he seems genuinely interested in science, then you should check up on certain broad characteristics. Is he willing to work hard? Thomas A. Edison aptly remarked,

"Genius is one percent inspiration and 99 percent perspiration."

Is your son painstaking? This is a field that requires great attention to detail. A misplaced decimal point can do much damage.

Is your son intellectually honest? A scientist must allow facts, not prejudices, to set his course.

Does your son have an open mind? Is he willing, even anxious, to look at new evidence? He must be if he is to arrive at true scientific answers.

Should your son decide to go in for engineering, I would urge him not to select electronics—or any other line—as his specialty too soon. He can make a grievous error if he does. I did.

As a high school student out in the Midwest, I had a brief conversation one day with a metallurgical engineer. His tales of adventure in British Columbia impressed me so much that, then and there, I resolved to become a metallurgical engineer, too.

I was mistaken. After I enrolled in a school of mining, I learned that my interest lay in other fields of science. I had to switch courses.

To avoid making a similar mistake, I would recommend that every would-be engineer secure a broad foundation in all the sciences before he chooses the kind of engineering which interests him the most.

Actually, an engineering education starts in high school. A boy who wants to be an engineer should study all the mathematics and physics he can get there.

After high school, comes an engineering course at college. Ordinarily, it is a four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree. In most colleges, the first two years are the same for all students. The choice of a specialty usually is not made until the end of the sophomore year.

As a rule, the boy who wishes to specialize in electronics should take the course in electrical engineering. This will give him a background not only in electronics but in all facets of electricity. He should also take as much English and the other humanities as possible. They will come in very handy.

A course such as this is not easy. It probably will necessitate more classroom work and more study hours than almost any other course. You can't bluff your way through it. It is always engrossing, though.

Is college expensive? In many instances, yes. It can run from a few hundred dollars a year to almost $2,000. However, a recent survey by the National Society of Professional Engineers disclosed that American colleges make over 2,800 scholarships available to engineering students. Several thousand more scholarships are granted by the various states. At least 36 of our 48 states make some legal provisions for engineering scholarships and fellowships.

I am often asked, "Can girls make a go of engineering?"

The answer is a resounding "Yes." It is true that there are less than 4,000 women graduate engineers in the United States today. Nevertheless, there are some very good women engineers who hold down splendid jobs and do fine, creative work. This is particularly noticeable in electronics.

To the girls as well as the boys who have the requisite aptitudes, I say: by all means, select electronic engineering for your career. You can help create a better, more livable world.

nylic

HOW TO HELP YOUR CHILD PREPARE FOR ANY CAREER

Whether your child is a toddler or in his teens, you are the keystone to whatever career he is to build. Your task is to inspire, guide and make possible. In the course of building his career many people will make contributions: teachers, researchers, specialists of many kinds.

One specialist—and his training and devotion to duty earn that title for him—is your New York Life agent. It is never too soon to enlist his aid—for he can help you to make sure that the future you plan for your child will become a reality.

Booklets available on other careers

This article on Engineering is one of a continuing series on career opportunities for young men and women. Thus far, similar articles have been prepared on Newspapering, Law, Medicine, Accounting, Teaching, Architecture, Aeronautical Engineering, Public Service, Farming, Chemistry, Selling and Nursing. Each is available in booklet form and will be sent to you on request. You'll also find additional help in our free booklet, "The Cost of Four Years at College." Just write:

NEW YORK LIFE
Insurance Company
51 Madison Ave., Dept. 13-J, New York 10, N. Y.

The New York Life Agent in Your Community is a Good Man to Know

Copyright 1955, New York Life Insurance Company

THE THIRTEENTH OF A SERIES OF ADVERTISEMENTS PRESENTED TO HELP GUIDE AMERICA'S CHILDREN TO A BETTER FUTURE

How long since you've tasted real cheese?

No ordinary cheese here! This is Miss Wisconsin Natural Aged Cheddar with the rich texture, superior flavor only real cheese can have! Its flavor comes from pasteurized whole milk—plus a year's natural aging of the cheese itself. That's why Miss Wisconsin is in a class all its own. That's why it's the finest cheese you can buy!

You know it's good!
ARMOUR
The Armour Star label is one of the world's great guarantees!

See what you buy! These generous wedges come in transparent wrappings . . . Sharp Aged, Medium Aged or Mild.

Miss Wisconsin NATURAL AGED Cheddar Cheese

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BLUE, BRICK, PROVOLONE AND ROMANO

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Bruce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

Can women be ladies?

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THE MORGAN LIBRARY

"Landscape With Three Gabled Cottages Beside a Road." Signed and dated Rembrandt, 1650. Three versions of this etching exist today.

A newspaper advertisement of a "foundation garment" recently attracted my somewhat startled attention by announcing that it would give its wearer "the only fashionable look, the only possible look . . . the ladylike look."

Good gracious, I thought to myself, is the ideal of the lady about to be revived?

I confess that I was puzzled as to how one such garment or another could contribute to making a girl or woman appear to be more or less of a lady. I suppose—from the description, which promises to make one "subtly" beautiful—that it is not a garment designed to emphasize, enhance or call exaggerated attention to the physical endowments associated with sex and "the sweater girl." Such garments, particularly bras, have catered to the long-current trend of making the most of the female bosom, or even of building one in if Nature has not sumptuously endowed, and the advertisers have intimated the "sexy" effect of their wares. Could it be, I ruminated, that a too obvious sexiness of appearance is about to become unfashionable?

Well, I don't know. What I do know is that, with the exception of certain religious sects, women, whether ladies or not, have always tried to make the most of their natural endowments, and to improve on Nature with art, though fashion is a whimsical thing, and has an extraordinary power to create and undo ideals of erotic beauty. It has made the "boyish" figure modish, designing clothes to eliminate the waist, compress the hips and flatten the bosom; it has decreed skirt lengths from knees to ankles; it has hobbled women into tight sheaths, and split these sheaths to expose glimpses of enticing legs; or it has corseted the waist to such breathlessness that no wonder Victorian ladies were perpetually swooning. From steel-bound waists it has pushed up bosoms to resemble bouquets erupting from slender vases; it has draped the ladies in Grecian folds, or surrounded them with the swirling skirts of peasants; it has topped them with mountainous hairdos, exposed their foreheads or covered them with bangs, or cut their locks to resemble the head of a medieval page, or of an Italian gamin, or of a poodle.

And by and large, the Captain's Lady and Judy O'Grady have gone along, starving themselves when the mode called for extreme thinness and fattening themselves (in happier modes) and always, always painting their faces, shadowing their eyes to make them appear larger, and reddening their mouths.

Not long ago, in Egypt, I visited some excavations around the oldest of the pyramids, from which I learned that 9000 years ago women, certainly classed in their day as "ladies," used eye shadow, mascara, rouge and lipstick. And always they have perfumed and bejeweled themselves.

Modesty of dress and deportment has, however, been associated with the greatest "ladies"; namely, royalty.

One cannot imagine either of the two living queens of England—the Queen Mother and Elizabeth II—or the queens of Holland or the Scandinavian countries dressed to call attention to their sexual attributes. Their clothes are beautiful, but conform to no exaggerations of fashion—nor do they set the standards of fashion. Their figures are natural—as natural as their exquisite manners; and they do set the standard of good manners, considerate, delicate and unrestrained. Like Caesar's wife's, their virtue is, and must be, above suspicion. Divorce and, of course, scandal are out of the question for any twentieth-century sovereign who will retain the throne.

But that was not always true.

Catherine of Russia was a great queen, but her morals were notorious. She was quite unashamed about them, too, not even paying the tribute of hypocrisy which vice so often pays to virtue; nor, among the intimates of her court, was she modest in any way. A great sovereign, she was certainly in modern terms no lady.

But what is a lady?

(You see to what extent one's thoughts can be led by contemplation of a simple advertisement!)

The Encyclopaedia Britannica devotes 7½ lines to define "lady" in two applications: as a title of nobility correlative of "lord," and as the correlative of "gentleman." It devotes about 2 pages to describing the male correlatives of lady, but still leaves "lady" pretty indefinite, since, as James Branch Cabell remarked in Something About Eve, "No lady is ever a gentleman"!

We are not concerned with "lady" as a title of nobility. There are no American lady-lords.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

naging Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Ruth Mills Teague
Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford Wood, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe
Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado
Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey, Laura Date

Imagine! Homemade jam and jell

Perfect results every time!

IT'S WONDERFUL to know you can make delicious jam and jelly at home and get perfect results—even if you've never made any before! All you need is 1.) sugar 2.) the prepared fruit of your choice and 3.) either Sure-Jell or Certo!

What are Sure-Jell and Certo? Both are natural fruit pectins. Pectin, you know, is the substance found in fruit—always in varying amounts—that makes jam and jelly "jell." When you follow the simple recipes exactly, and use Sure-Jell or Certo, you're always sure of getting just the right amount of pectin for perfectly made jam and jelly.

And wait till you taste that homemade fresh fruit flavor. That, Ma'am, is flavor you just can't buy anywhere in a jam or jelly. Put either Sure-Jell or Certo on your shopping list right now.

You'll find real homemade jam and jelly cost only a few pennies a glass to make!

Try this quick and easy recipe!

HOMEMADE STRAWBERRY JAM

Make it today . . . serve it tonight!

(Yield: about 11 medium glasses)

2 quarts fully ripe strawberries
1 box Sure-Jell fruit pectin*
7 cups sugar

1. Crush berries, one layer at a time, so that each berry is reduced to a pulp. Mix 4½ cups crushed strawberries and 1 box Sure-Jell in a very large saucepan. Measure sugar and set aside.

2. Put saucepan over high heat and stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. Stir in sugar at once. Bring to a full rolling boil, then boil hard for 1 minute, stirring constantly.

3. Remove from heat. Stir and skim for 5 minutes. Then ladle quickly into glasses. (No paraffining necessary if used in 2 months—just cover and keep in refrigerator.)

*or if you prefer Certo liquid fruit pectin, use recipe attached to Certo bottle.

Make your favorite jams or jellies any time of the year!

Why wait just for seasonal fruits? Now by using Sure-Jell or Certo with canned, bottled, or frozen fruits and juices, you can make glorious jams and jellies all year round. You'll find every recipe you need in the Sure-Jell package and attached to the Certo bottle!

Your choice! SURE-JELL powdered natural fruit pectin, or CERTO liquid natural fruit pectin.

n only 11 minutes cooking time!

Stay-lively bristles of DuPont TYNEX® nylon almost do the work for you

1. HANDS STAY DRY . . . when you use this long-handled dishwashing brush. Its firm "Tynex" bristles whisk stubborn foods off dishes, won't absorb odors, clean with a rinse and shake!

2. YOU MAKE LIGHT WORK of the toughest jobs with this sturdy scrub brush bristled with "Tynex." And you'll find "Tynex" bristles last 3 to 5 times longer than ordinary bristles.

3. RING TEST shows how "Tynex" bristles squeeze into tightest places, then snap right back as straight and springy as new. Even boiling won't take the life out of "Tynex" nylon bristles!

4. SKIN FEELS GLOWING, REFRESHED! This bath brush with "Tynex" bristles is soft and gentle, yet leaves skin clean and tingly. Be sure your household and personal brushes have "Tynex" bristles.

"Tynex" is the registered trade-mark for genuine Du Pont nylon bristles

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Not As Advertised Therein

Look for brushes with stay-lively bristles of Du Pont TYNEX® nylon

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

"Gentleman" is not a title, though the word (or concept) has had an interesting evolution. In its original meaning a gentleman was a man of good family, belonging, in the Latin "gentilis," to a distinguishable race, or gens. "Those whom their race and blood, or at least their virtues, make noble and known." There seems always to have been this dual association. A man of noble birth was accepted as a "gentleman," unless his behavior contradicted it. A story is attributed to James II of England, who, when a mother entreated him to "make my son a gentleman," replied, "Madam, I could make him a nobleman [by giving him a title], but God Almighty could not make him a gentleman." In short, a gentleman is created not by a king or a title, nor by birth, but by his demeanor and behavior.

In the days before there were conscript armies, a development of democracy unknown before the French Revolution, those who bore arms for their country were considered of superior social rank, their families distinguished by having a "coat of arms" to signalize the fact—a habit that made fortunes for the heralds who designed them. Shakespeare was turned by grant of a coat of arms from a "vagabond" into a "gentleman." In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries fighting was apparently the sole honorable profession for gentlemen—but Joan of Arc, who fought in those times, was never considered a "lady."

Almost all our faults are more pardonable than the methods we think up to hide them. —LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

"Gentleman" has gone through a wide, democratic revolution. Already, in Shakespeare's day, all in the learned professions—clergy, lawyers, scholars—were considered "gentlemen." But a learned woman could not have been a lawyer, nor her desire to be one the aspiration of a lady. In 1815 the Encyclopaedia Britannica described a gentleman as anyone who without title bears a coat of arms or whose ancestors have been freemen. By 1845 all above the rank of yeomen (free farmers) could be regarded as gentlemen, and by 1856 the title was accorded all persons above the rank of "common tradesman when their manners are indicative of a certain amount of refinement and intelligence."

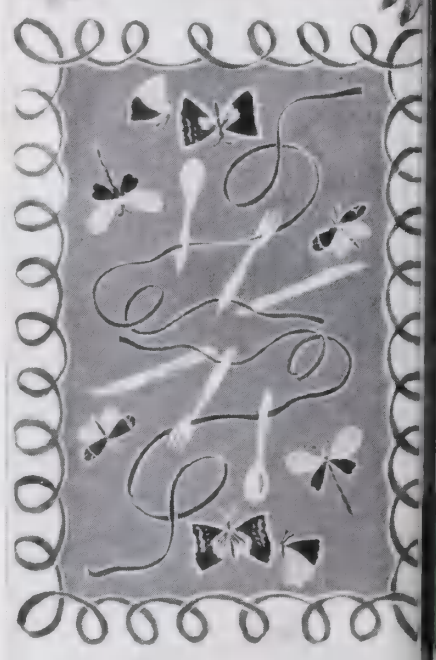
Until fairly recently trade was not considered an appropriate occupation for a gentleman. Buying and selling were thought inconducive to the development of culture or character. But all these considerations of professional activities or engagement, never applicable to women, have gradually faded. Position, education and unaffectedly good manners still mark the gentleman in any society, but the term also involves a superior standard of conduct, related to self-respect, honorable dealings—"his word is as good as his bond."

"The gentleman owes his acceptance as such, not to circumstances but to his behavior in them," one historian records.

We may assume, therefore, that a lady must possess sufficient education or culture to enable her to converse grammatically and in a pleasant voice above the level of idle, personal gossip; that under whatever circumstances she lives, she conducts a home with a degree of refinement; and that she conforms to a superior standard of conduct.

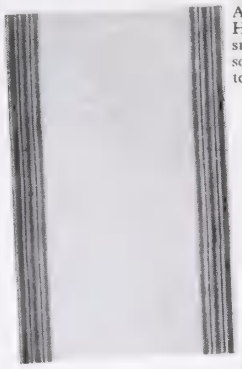
And yet, despite the increased equality between the sexes, the standards "becoming to a gentleman" are still not always consistent with those "becoming to a lady." What society finds acceptable in a gentleman is not equally acceptable in a gentlewoman—or lady.

For to men (who have written innumerable books, romances and poetry about woman) she still appears in a dual light. She is the eternal seductress and temptress leading men



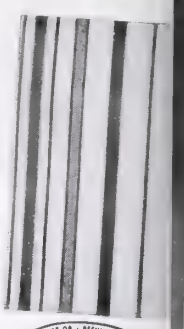
CONTINUED ON PAGE 17

Startex Towels



LIKE MY BEST FRIENDS . .

ARE ALWAYS WELCOME IN MY HOME!



Many millions of Startex Kitch Towels are bought each year American homemakers from coast coast. Women everywhere agree: y can't run a home today without ple of good dish towels on hand . . . M too, prefer to see china, glassware a silver that's spotless and bright fr proper drying with a fine Americ made absorbent towel . . . Star Towels dry so swiftly, so easily—a with their fast colors, they launder beautifully, they last so long! Be s it's the Startex brand when you for kitchen towels at your favorite st

Above—one of many Hand Printed pattern smart decorator colo some all-cotton, others ton-linen blend, as labe

The famous part-linen GRENADIER multistripe (at right) and the all-cotton GIANT SIZE multiborder kitchen towel.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Not As Advertised Therein

STARTEX®

WHEREVER HOUSEHOLD LINENS ARE S

Startex Mills, 55 Worth Street, New York

Ever notice how much cleaner milk tastes, protected in glass?

That's because nothing can get in to spoil the sweet, fresh flavor when milk comes to you protected against all contamination in pure glass. And don't you find it keeps better, too? Why don't you call your local dairy now and tell them you want all the milk your family uses safely sealed in glass?

GLASS CONTAINER MANUFACTURERS INSTITUTE, 99 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK

Often a bridesmaid . . .
Never a bride

Most of the girls of her set were married . . . but not Eleanor. It was beginning to look, too, as if she never would be. True, men were attracted to her, but their interest quickly turned to indifference. Poor girl! She hadn't the remotest idea why they dropped her so quickly . . . and even her best friend wouldn't tell her.

Why risk the stigma of halitosis (bad breath) when Listerine Antiseptic stops it so easily . . . so quickly.

No Tooth Paste Kills Odor Germs Like This . . . Instantly

Listerine does what no tooth paste does—instantly kills bacteria, by millions—stops bad breath instantly, and usually for hours on end. Bacterial fermentation of proteins which are always present in the mouth is by far the most common cause of bad breath. Research shows that breath odors remain longer depending on the degree to which you retain germs in the mouth.

No tooth paste, of course, is antiseptic. Chlorophyll does not kill germs—but Listerine kills bacteria by millions, gives you lasting antiseptic protection against bad breath.

Listerine Clinically Proved Four Times Better Than Tooth Paste

Is it any wonder Listerine Antiseptic in recent clinical tests averaged at least four times more effective in stopping bad breath odors than the chlorophyll products or tooth pastes it was tested against? With proof like this, it's easy to see why Listerine "belongs" in your home. Gargle Listerine Antiseptic every morning . . . every night . . . before every date.

A PRODUCT OF THE LAMBERT COMPAI

LISTERINE ANTISEPTI
STOPS BAD BREATI

4 times better than any tooth past

You'll feel SAFER moving in a ®Sanitized van an Extra

United Service

...no extra cost!

Only UNITED VAN LINES offers the extra care and cleanliness of ®Sanitized Moving. UNITED also provides "Pre-Planned" Service to "blueprint" all the details of moving day in advance. Yet you pay no more for this modern moving service than you would for the ordinary kind. That's why so many thousands of U. S. and Canadian families last year chose the "Pre-Planned," ®Sanitized, UNITED way to move. Call your nearby UNITED Agent—no obligation.

PACKING • CRATING • STORAGE

More than 450 Agents in the U. S. and Canada

Free ... MAIL COUPON

UNITED VAN LINES, Inc.
Dept. L, St. Louis 17, Mo.

I'm planning to move . . . please send me free Pre-Planning Kit, containing carton markers, change-of-address cards, moving day hints.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

United Van Lines Inc.

Look Under "Movers" in Phone Book for Nearest United Agent to evil; the Eve who lost for Adam paradise. And she is the angel, Goethe's "eternal feminine" who "leads us ever upward."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

She is considered either infinitely worse than man or infinitely better. Her influence for good or evil over man is vastly greater—or so the poets have always thought—than man's influence over her.

She need not be as brilliant, educated or even creatively as intelligent as man. But she must be more virtuous than man usually is, or she will ruin him and the race.

I gather this from reading what men (and some women) have written about "woman" from the ancient Greeks to the present day. And I also gather that "woman" is a subject far more mysterious, frustrating and interesting than "man."

Burton Stevenson's Home Book of Quotations, Classical and Modern, devotes 31 two-column finely printed pages to quotations of what great and lesser poets, philosophers and sages have said about Woman, and additional pages to "Maids, Virgins and Girls," but fills only 18 with what they have said about Man—including under "man" mankind as such! Far more attention has been paid to her than to Wisdom or War. And in the sum of this concentrated interest, little concern is expressed for woman as a lady. She is "the weaker sex, to piety more prone," according to William Alexander. Edmund

There is something inevitable about an idea whose hour has struck.

—GOETHE

Burke considered her "but an animal, and an animal not of the highest order." But she has also been called "a temple sacred by birth, and built of hands divine." She is pictured as utterly frivolous and mysteriously wise. She is the one creature on whom man can depend, but inconstancy is the essence of her nature. "Even to vice they are not constant," said Shakespeare of women in Cymbeline, commenting further that:

There's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lust and rank thoughts, hers; revenge, hers.

But Milton, in Paradise Lost, called her "the last and best of all God's works," and Shakespeare himself made Portia the very embodiment of justice and mercy.

Whatever she is or isn't, the poets have tended to regard her, for better or worse, as an elemental force, far harder to tame and civilize than is man. "Women will be the last thing civilized by man," said George Meredith in Richard Feverel. She has been likened to "wars and troublesome cattle." Dryden found women "not compris'd in our laws of friendship; they are ferae naturae [in a wild state of nature]." Kipling found that "The female of the species is more deadly than the male." Created from a rib of Adam and not from his head, she is made to be commanded by men—since the head commands; but since Adam was made of dirt in the first place and she of man, she is an advanced and superior work of creation: goodness, how many words, in prose or rhyme, have been devoted to that theme! She is, in short, man's greatest blessing and greatest curse.

Now, one wonders how such an elemental force of nature—for good or for evil—can ever be made, or make herself, into the pale image of a lady!

After reading reams about women, I decided she'd better just be woman—a gentlewoman, if possible, with what attributes of a gentleman the viewpoints, desires, imagery, mythology and prejudices of men will permit her. She can be sure that if she is chaste, men will call her cold; if she is brilliant, men will call her "like a man"; if she is witty, they will

CONTINUED ON PAGE 141

TENSE NERVOUS HEADACHES

call for

STRONGER Yet SAFER

ANACIN®

Won't upset your stomach

Also goes to work instantly to relieve pains of

- NEURITIS
- NEURALGIA
- RHEUMATISM
- ARTHRITIS
- NORMAL PERIODIC PAIN and
- DISTRESS OF COLDS

ANACIN not only gives stronger, faster but also safer relief from pain. Anacin Tablets won't upset the stomach. They contain no narcotics or habit-forming ingredients. Despite their great strength, you can take Anacin Tablets as directed as often as needed without the slightest harm.

You see, Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proven, active ingredients.

The highest medical authorities in the nation declare that the Anacin way—a formula combining smaller quantities of a number of highly effective pain relievers—gives faster, more effective and safer relief than a large dose of one single drug. This is one of the first fundamentals of medicine taught in all schools of medicine and dentistry. Just ask your own physician or dentist if this isn't true.

Highest medical authorities have established beyond a shadow of a doubt that Anacin's combination of potent pain relievers acts smoother and more efficiently than any single drug.

So whenever stronger yet safer medication is needed—you can depend upon Anacin. Remember—no single drug can give you the same strong safe relief of Anacin's combination of powerful pain relievers. Buy Anacin Tablets today.

If pain persists—see your doctor.

You can depend on

Here's a fabulous new Summer Dessert!

Cool, Cool Danish

So easy to make with creamy-light SPRY!

Step One for Flaky, Tender Piecrust:

7 tablespoons Spry
3 tablespoons boiling water
1 teaspoon milk
1¼ cups all-purpose flour (sifted once before measuring)
½ teaspoon salt

Put Spry in medium-sized bowl, add boiling water and milk. Break up shortening with fork, tilt bowl, then with cross-the-bowl strokes, whip until mixture is smooth and thick like whipped cream. Sift flour and salt onto Spry mixture. Stir with round-the-bowl strokes into a dough that clings together and "cleans" the bowl. Work dough into a smooth round, roll between 12" squares of waxed paper into a circle ⅛" thick. Fit pastry into 9" pie pan, prick, flute rim. Bake in very hot oven (450°F.) 14-19 minutes. Cool.

Spry "Water-Whip" pastry is the easy-to-mix, easy-to-roll kind! Why? Because Spry is pure all-vegetable shortening, homogenized to that just-right, easy-blending goodness. So you never fail to get the tender, flaky kind of piecrust that fairly melts in your mouth. Spry makes the difference!

Pie

Step Two for Cool Danish Pie Filling:

1 package "Junket" Danish Dessert
2 cups cold water
2 3-oz. packages cream cheese
3 tablespoons sugar, dash salt
⅛ teaspoon vanilla
¼ cup heavy cream—whipped
1 cup sliced sweetened strawberries (or most any fruit—fresh, or well-drained canned or frozen)

Add package "Junket" Danish Dessert to water—boil just one minute. Then cool at room temperature until lukewarm. Meanwhile cream the cheese with wooden spoon, add sugar, salt and vanilla, and mix well. Fold whipped cream into cheese mixture and spread on bottom and sides of cooled baked pie shell. (Reserve about one-fourth for garnish.) Fold strawberries into cooled Danish Dessert and spoon into cheese-lined pie shell. Chill in refrigerator until set (3-4 hours). Garnish with border of cheese mixture.

Truly refreshing and deliciously different, "Junket" Danish Dessert makes a fabulous filling for summer pies. Try it as a pudding, too. You'll love its unique currant-raspberry flavor and sparkling ruby-red color. This wonderful new 2-step Danish Pie is an easy "hot weather" dessert. And remember, to make perfect piecrust every time, use pure, digestible Spry.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

THE first week in June should be the best week in June for the wedding. According to the Farmer's Almanac, which predicts the weather with amazing accuracy, that week will be fair and cool with clear skies across the entire country. Only along the Eastern Seaboard will there be a touch of fog. That will be between the fourth and the seventh.

But rain or shine, Father's Day will be celebrated on June 19th. And father, we regret to say, is rated pretty low as a literary prospect. In a list of twenty books suggested as gifts for Father's Day, we note HOW TO RAISE A DOG; POPULAR MECHANICS' PICTURE HISTORY OF AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION; THE FISHERMAN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA; THE GUN COLLECTOR'S HANDBOOK OF VALUES; SUNSET BARBECUE COOK BOOK. Apparently as a concession THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY is included—"entertainingly and wittily explained"; and HOLY BIBLE—"the kind that lets dad record family data."

Bob Hope says that a few years back on Father's Day his children gave him a book called HOW TO PLAY WINNING GOLF. The next year they gave him HOW TO IMPROVE YOUR GOLF. The following year it was DON'T LET BAD GOLF DISCOURAGE YOU. Now he expects a volume entitled HOW TO CHEAT AT GOLF.

●

Comic books in this country sell a billion copies a year, and the money expenditure is about $100,000,000. This is four times the combined annual book-purchasing budgets of all public libraries in the country, and more than is spent on textbooks for all the nation's elementary and secondary schools. (University of California survey report.)

Another survey, made by the Herald Tribune Education Department, shows that in the field of television children prefer adult shows to those designed for their own age group. They like the shows that are gay (I Love Lucy) and those that are warmhearted (Mama). Their own shows evidently aim too low. This survey has also discovered that children care more intensely about their books than about television programs. Their com-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 21

"If you never spent your time looking at such stuff, what did they have on television when you were my age?"

CALORIC is one of a number of automatic Gas separate range units, made to "CP" standards. See them, find out about them, at your Gas company or Gas appliance dealer's

Look to GAS for the smartest ranges you ever saw!

Here, in a sweep of satiny chrome, is a remarkable new kind of design . . . separate range units. The top burners go right into your counter, hardly take up more space than a chopping block. The fully automatic, eye-level oven can flank them or go on the other side of the room. Women who own such separate range units find a new excitement in rediscovering all the things Gas does so well. Flame-kissed broiling takes on new meaning when the meat is searing almost before your very eyes. It seems absolutely essential to have "no lingering after heat" when your range top is built into your counter. In fact, you feel a little like a very fine restaurateur—the kind who loves to put up polished metal to echo the glow of his cooking flames. For the way you live today, for the value they will add to your home tomorrow, do consider Gas separate range units now.

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Only Gas gives such matchless performance

GAS—the modern fuel for automatic cooking . . . refrigeration . . . water-heating . . . house-heating . . . air-conditioning . . . clothes-drying . . . incineration.

for smart cooks
. . . and smart tables

From Holland

royal DRU iron

Porcelainized Cast Iron
COOKING-SERVING DISHES

- Hand-painted Dutch motif, Tulip and Windmill
- Delft Blue, or Delft Green

Your party casserole, breakfast bacon — all foods cooked in Royal DRU-iron "oven to table" ware have delicious new flavor. That's because you boil, bake, broil — simmer, saute, fry — at lowest heat. Royal DRU-iron is porcelainized cast iron — burn-proof, stain-proof, chip-resistant, easy to wash. Cook in it, serve in it. The authentic Provincial design flatters every table setting, and the porcelain surface has the beauty of finest china.

by appointment to Her Majesty, Queen Juliana

From Holland
CORA pattern
by SOLA
STAINLESS STEEL FLATWARE

distinguished for the rich patina of its satin finish, and impressively heavy weight
5, 6, 16, 26-Piece Settings
Serving Pieces

ALWAYS AVAILABLE FROM OPEN STOCK

Good Design Award Museum of Modern Art for store near you, write:

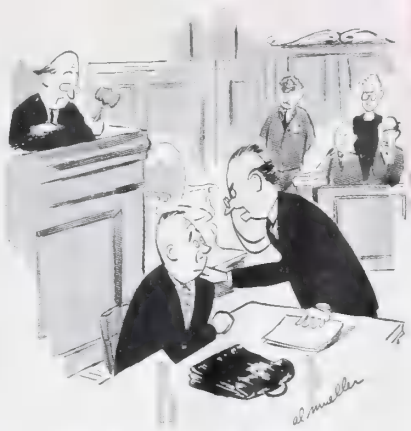
EVANS INTERNATIONAL
194 Great Road, Acton, Mass.



CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19

ments on favorite books are firmer and more personal than their comments on TV. Why not compromise, these investigators suggest, and put some of the old book favorites on television?

●

If you're going to tell a lie, be careful—be careful of your feet. A court reporter who has sat for twenty-three years immediately below and in front of the witness chair, and thus has

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Now, when I say, 'The mere thought of crime makes my client recoil'—you recoil."

seen thousands of feet, claims that the witness who is lying not only twitches his feet while he is lying, but begins twitching them when he is about to tell a lie.

●

One of the best mysteries come across in a long time is SOMEWHERE IN THIS CITY, by Maurice Proctor, a tight, intelligent, swift, robber-murder-police-detective story which is way above average because of the soundness of its reasoning and the unusual overtones of character.

THE TALL DARK MAN, by Anne Chamberlain, is also good suspense. It is one of those increasingly popular stories of a bad little girl. The tall dark man was after Sarah May Gross for a very sound reason, and she knew it; but even as he closed in on her, she could get no help. She had told so many lies and got so many people in trouble that even when it was a matter of life or death no one, at home or in school, believed her.

●

Recording for the Blind is a remarkable life-giving organization. Its aim is to provide the blind—particularly the hundreds of young men blinded in the two last wars—with the books they need to make their way in life. The organization records educational books on disks and sends them—as they are requested—all over the country. The work is done by a small group of volunteers who are outstandingly efficient because they are a top-notch group of people to begin with, and because their hearts are in it.

The reading for these disks is also done by volunteers. Scientists in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, read texts on atomic energy after work hours. Five nights a week lawyers and teachers and other professionals in New York climb two long flights of stairs in a public library and read books in their respective fields. Housewives, actors and actresses and business people read. But not just anyone can be a reader. Volunteers must first pass a voice test—a trial recording which is judged by a com-diet right...

CONTINUED ON PAGE 23

feel right...
look right...

Diet Delight BRAND
DIETETIC FOODS

Low-Calorie, Low-Sodium
Fruits • Vegetables • Dressings • Juices

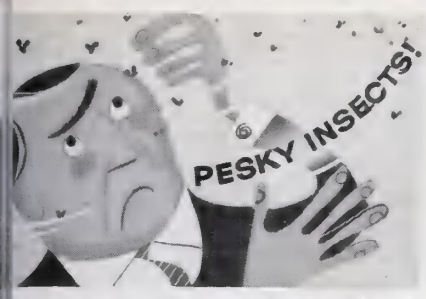
"Diet" no longer need be a discouraging order when you have the wonderful variety of Diet Delight Dietetic Foods to help you diet right. Their delicious flavor makes your diet seem like "regular" eating. Plan all your diet meals around Diet Delight Sucaryl® sweetened fruits; low-calorie dressings, low-sodium vegetables, juices. Calorie and carbohydrate content clearly marked on each label.

FREE! Delicious menus and recipes that fit your diet needs. Write Dept. L.

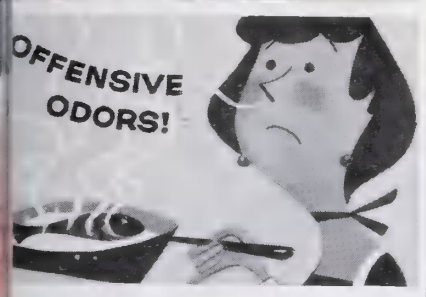
RICHMOND-CHASE COMPANY • Pioneer Packers of Dietetic Foods • San Jose, California

2 FOR "MEAT-AND-POTATO" MEN

l man-style eating in Dinty Moore Beef Stew! It's ble-rich in beef: to a lusty beef gravy is added still e beef, in tender succulent chunks. Then come firm e potatoes, golden carrots. Plenty of everything! It's the BIG meal in the BIG can.



DINTY MOORE BEEF STEW.



"Do it again," he'll say, on tasting Mary Kitchen Roast Beef Hash, pan-browned in a crusty "omelet". To make this superb hash, Hormel oven-roasts good beef to a juicy brown, blends it with potatoes, subtle seasonings. It's new. It's different!

MARY KITCHEN ROAST BEEF HASH.

Bothered?

t Rid of 'em and Relax with the Amazing

New

RI-WONDER*

Bug-n-Odor Killer

$2.95

Complete
Ready to Plug in ue Light Bulb with Indented Top Does rick! You drop a Tri-Wonder insecti- or deodorant pellet on the indented Heat of the bulb evaporates pellet, g the room with a potent insect kill- r air freshening vapor. Works like a m! Pleasant to use and effective!

Sure Death to Flies, Moths, Mosqui- Gnats, Other Household Insects. No ing with swatters, sprays or buzz bs when you have a Tri-Wonder in r home. Tri-Wonder kills insects kly, automatically. One application tive up to two weeks.

Destroys Kitchen Smells, Tobacco ke and all Other Unpleasant Odors. es air in the room clean, fresh and t-smelling as a woodland breeze!

A Decorative Utility Light, too. Glows a soft, non-glare, indirect light that's ct for television viewing. Also useful night light.

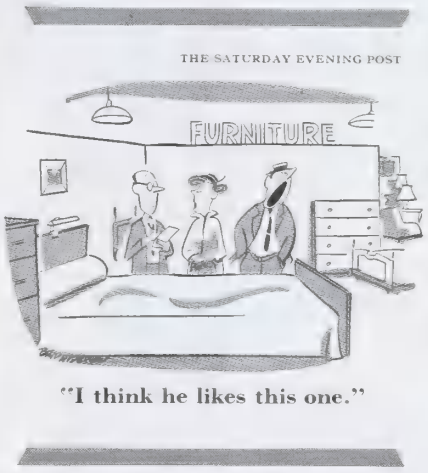
COST—Model shown above only $2.95, lete with bulb, 12 insecticide and 12 de- zing pellets. Black or ivory ceramic base. ment shade in choice of beautiful colors.

At Department, Hardware, Houseware and Notions Stores

d. by Kissner Industries, Inc., Madison, Wis.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

mittee of blind persons on a basis of quality and clarity.



The service is free. It is supported by contributions. The books are not sold but loaned. After they have been used they are returned and sent elsewhere. Textbooks go out as fast as readers can put them, chapter by chapter, on disks. Great books, general literature, books that are in demand from everywhere, are done on tape. No records are made of books already obtainable either in Braille or on the "Talking Books" that are made available by the Library of Congress. There is no duplication.

There are now units in eight cities. At the end of November, 1954, 100,000 disks had been recorded—more than 200 books—but the number increases every day. More than 200 colleges use the service, and disks have been sent to forty-seven out of the forty-eight states. For further information write Recording for the Blind, Inc., 36 W. 44th St., New York 36.

●

HADRIAN'S MEMOIRS, by Marguerite Yourcenar, has been out some time. But it is a work of art and therefore dateless. Although entitled memoirs, it is fiction, based on contemporary letters and commentary.

"Of all the joys which are slowly abandoning me," writes Hadrian in his sixty-first year, "sleep is one of the most precious. . . . What interests me is the specific mystery of sleep—the inevitable plunge risked each night by the naked man, solitary and unarmed, into an ocean where everything changes, the colors, the densities, and even the rhythm of breathing. . . . What reassures us about sleep is that we do come out of it, and come out of it unchanged, since some mysterious ban keeps us from bringing back with us in their true form even the remnants of our dreams. . . . I smile with some bitterness at the realization that now out of any two thoughts I devote one to my own death."

"I think he likes this one."

Hadrian was a thinking man—a statesman, an emperor and a connoisseur of the arts. He met each problem in his full life face on. He never became indifferent or careless. This book is the essence of a remarkable personality.

●

But if you're tired of crime and sex and juvenile delinquents, of neurotics and statesmen, you can sit back and relax with THE MISSOURI TRAVELER, by John Burress. It's a warm, happy book (about a boy and some decent grownups) that convinces you there's some good left in the old world after all.

●

And I mustn't forget GORDON OF KHARTOUM, the life of General Charles

CONTINUED ON PAGE 26

THERE'S NEVER BEEN ANYTHING LIKE IT BEFORE!

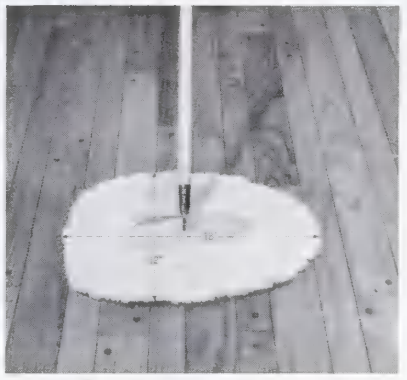
O cedar

"Every-Which-Way" NYLON DUST MOP

with the amazing "MAGIC-ACTION" SWIVEL SOCKET



Takes the work out of dusting

Washes easily like your nylon stockings

Flick of the wrist and it goes around corners

Twist of the handle adjusts pad to dust 50% wider path

O-Cedar's sensational new "Every-Which-Way" Nylon Dust Mop adjusts to any position with no effort at all. It twists in and out of hard-to-dust places . . . steers around chair and table legs . . . glides under low, heavy furniture. The big 100% virgin Nylon pad creates an electrostatic action that picks up and holds more dust . . . it stays in the pad until you shake it free. Washes and dries quickly . . . remains soft and fluffy. Choice of white or blue Nylon, $3.95. In fine cotton yarn, $2.59. Ask for the mop that goes "every-which-way."

Available where you buy cleaning supplies

O cedar — O-CEDAR CORP'N, Chicago, Illinois—Subsidiary of AMERICAN-MARIETTA COMPANY — O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd., Stratford, Ontario — A·M

A New O-Cedar Product Worth $1.79

(Offer good in U.S.A. only, expires August 31, 1955)

FIRST TIME AVAILABLE!

FREE Nylon Dust Mit

with purchase of ANY O-Cedar Dust Mop

Not yet on the market, this unique, easy-to-wash, long-wearing Dust Mit with all the advantages of Nylon, lets you zip through furniture dusting like magic. As proof of purchase just send a paid receipt or the plastic cover bag from any model O-Cedar Dust Mop you buy (it folds easily into an envelope) together with this coupon and 10¢ to cover mailing to: Betty Woods, O-Cedar Home Service Institute, P. O. Box 366, Park Ridge, Illinois. You'll receive your Nylon Dust Mit by return mail.

Recipes for Salads that go with Chicken...

LIKE ANY OTHER SALADS,

THEY'RE BEST DRESSED

BY Kraft

WITH FRIED CHICKEN...FROZEN FRUIT SALAD

Gradually add 1 c. Miracle Whip or Kraft Mayonnaise to one 8-ounce package Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese, blending until mixture is smooth. Add 2 tbsps. confectioners' sugar, 1 c. each diced pineapple and apricots and ½ c. chopped maraschino cherries. Whip 1 c. heavy cream; fold into fruit mixture. Pour into 6 or 8 individual molds; freeze until firm. Serve on leaf lettuce garnished with maraschino cherries.

When you're choosing the salad for a chicken dinner, experts suggest that you serve one of these. A light tossed salad with hearty roast chicken. The bright flavor of tomatoes with fricassee. And when the chicken's fried, velvety frozen fruits to contrast with its crispness.

Then comes the choice of just the right dressing . . . and here Kraft lends a hand. You can choose from a whole list of favorites. There's Miracle Whip—best-liked of any dressing for salads in the whole wide world. Three delightful French dressings. And the finest of mayonnaise.

So pick your salad dressings from the Kraft shelf at your store. Compliments come easy with salads dressed by Kraft!

Kraft Salad Dressings are also available in Canada

Tastes different because it is different There's nothin else anywhere like Miracle Whip Salad Dressing. It's unique type of dressing, combining the best qualities o good old-fashioned boiled dressing and fine mayonnaise No other dressing has ever even approached the on and only Miracle Whip in popularity. Taste it an you'll see why!

Such smooth, firm-bodied mayonnaise Kraft Mayon naise is made with extra egg yolks for extra richness an firm body, and Kraft's exclusive beating process give it special smoothness. Even when you mix it with ta juices, or use it in frozen salads like the one above, stays deliciously smooth—never separates.

WITH CHICKEN FRICASSEE...TOMATO-ARTICHOKE SALAD

For each serving, peel a firm, red tomato. Cut into slanting wedges almost to the stem end. Place on leaf lettuce on a salad plate. Spread the tomato sections apart and place a canned artichoke heart in the center of the tomato. Garnish with watercress and serve with Miracle French or Kraft French Dressing. If you like a touch of onion and garlic, Miracle French is the one to choose.

Touched with onion and garlic When you want a robustly seasoned French dressing—on sea food for instance, or tossed greens—try Kraft's famous Miracle French. Also, compliments will come your way if you brush Miracle French Dressing over chicken before broiling.

Most popular French dressing Kraft French is far and away the most popular French dressing ever offered for sale. Not too sharp, not too bland, it has a just-right flavor that appeals to children as well as grown-ups. This thick French dressing doesn't separate. Just try it. See if you don't like it even better than your own!

WITH ROAST CHICKEN...GARDEN MEDLEY SALAD

For each serving, tear head lettuce and Bibb lettuce into bite-size pieces—enough to fill an individual salad bowl. Add sliced radishes, thinly cut celery and shredded cucumber. Toss with Casino French Dressing. Casino is the newest of Kraft's three French dressings, and a tremendous hit. It's a perfect base for variations like Roquefort dressing as well as to serve "as is".

A little bit sweet—a little bit garlic-y New Casino has a most intriguing flavor . . . sweet, with a tang, and a touch of garlic, too. It takes 12 different seasonings, in most precise proportions, to get this special flavor! For easy, delightful variety in your salads, it's a good idea to keep each of Kraft's 3 French Dressings on hand.

For homemade French dressing, Kraft has a very special, smooth-blending Oil that mixes superbly with other ingredients. Kraft All Purpose Oil gives best results in cooking, too.

KRAFT

Five days of new freedom

MEDS are so absorbent . . . completely protective . . . so comfortable you never know you're using them. The modern form of sanitary protection. The only tampon with the exclusive, disposable applicator that can't fall apart.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23

George Gordon, by Lord Elton, a fine biography of an extraordinary man, a great British hero, and a character about whom I have a story of my own.

In Khartoum there is a little park with a statue in it of Gordon sitting on a camel. Every day a certain little English boy whose father was in Civil Service in Khartoum used to go into this park with his nurse, and walk to the statue of Gordon, where he always stopped and stared up in wondering admiration. When the time came for his father to be transferred from Khartoum, the child insisted on a last visit to the park. He headed straight for the statue and gazed upon it for the long last time. Then he turned to his nurse and asked, "Who's that man on Gordon?"

●

Several fine collections of short stories have come out in the past few months. These last longer than a novel. Focusing on a moment in time, as the short story so often does, or on a single foible in personality, or a heightened dramatic incident, these stories make much better reading when taken singly. For full flavor, I'd say, read them one at a time:

THE BRIDE OF INNISFALLEN, a new collection by Eudora Welty.

THE MOMENT BEFORE THE RAIN, by Elizabeth Enright.

THE BLACK PRINCE, nine stories by Shirley Ann Grau.

HESTER LILLY, twelve stories by Elizabeth Taylor.

THE RED PETTICOAT and other stories by Bryan MacMahan.

MORE STORIES, by Frank O'Connor.

●

For those who refuse to call it a day at 80, an experiment in education is now being conducted at Cold Spring Harbor, New York, called the Cold Spring Project. It is a series of courses open to men and women, 60 years or more of age, college graduates, married or single. Women predominated in the first graduating class, but two thirds of the applications for the second class, when last we heard, had come from men.

Incidentally, there are three widows to every one widower in this country, according to the Census Bureau. The death rate among men is higher; also, widowers are more inclined than widows to remarry and, when they do, usually choose women five to ten years younger than themselves.

REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION
COPR. 1953 THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE INC.

"Which ten books would you have brought, if you'd known?"

AN EXTRAVAGANT 8-OUNCES for just $1.00

CHARBERT

"Breathless Mist"

The big beautiful bottle that usually sells for $3

So much Summer luxury . . . for such a little price! For this is the very essence of the beloved "Breathless" fragrance . . . light but lasting, so divinely cool, you'll want to use it lavishly. Limited time special . . . so order several bottles for yourself, for presents . . . in the frosty gift box.

FRAGRANCE COMPANIONS AT EXCITING SAVINGS.

Breathless Mist Dusting Powder, usually $2.00 now $1.00

Breathless Lotion Deodorant, $2.50 value now $1.25

Extra special! Mist and Dusting Powder, also in Charbert's new "Consent" fragrance, each $1.00

At fine stores everywhere

prices plus tax

PARFUMS CHARBERT, 630 Fifth Ave., New York

DOCTORS PROVE A ONE-MINUTE MASSAGE WITH

Palmolive Soap Can Give You A leaner, Fresher Complexion...Today!

GETS HIDDEN DIRT THAT ORDINARY CLEANSING METHODS MISS!

See the difference with your own eyes!

t left on face after ordinary cleansing!

our face hard with a cotton pad after ordinary casual cleansing with ap or cold cream. You'll see that you failed to remove deep-down dirt ake-up. "Ordinary-clean" is just superficially clean! Your skin can't oveliest with such dirt left on!

2. Beautifully clean after 60-second Palmolive facial!

Rub your face the same way after 60-second massage with Palmolive. Cotton pad is still snowy-white! "Palmolive-clean," you see, is deep-down clean. Your skin is free of clinging dirt that casual cleansing misses. Just think what this means when you use Palmolive care regularly!

RS PROVE IVE'S
RESULTS!

Only a Soap This Mild CAN WORK SO THOROUGHLY YET SO GENTLY! PALMOLIVE BEAUTY CARE CLEANS CLEANER, CLEANS DEEPER, WITHOUT IRRITATION!

No matter what your age or type of skin, doctors have proved that Palmolive beauty care can give you a cleaner, fresher complexion the very first time you use it! That's because Palmolive care gets your skin deep-down clean by removing hidden, clinging dirt that casual methods miss.

Just massage your face with Palmolive's rich, gentle lather for 60 seconds, morning and night. Rinse and pat dry. But remember . . . only a soap that is truly mild can cleanse thoroughly without leaving your face feeling drawn and uncomfortable. That's why Palmolive's mildness is so important to you. It lets you massage a full minute . . . lets you clean cleaner, clean deeper, without irritation.

Just one Palmolive facial makes an immediate difference. And, day by day, your skin will be softer to the touch, clearer and prettier. Palmolive care, you see, is removing hidden dirt that accentuates lines and pores—dirt that encourages blackheads and tiny blemishes. Your skin becomes deep-down clean . . . "Palmolive-clean"! And the natural loveliness of your complexion can show through at last!

Try mild Palmolive Soap today. In just 60 seconds, you'll be on your way toward new complexion beauty!

Today, a bright new package. And yes, there's more of nature's own Get Up and Grow with enriched Nucoa!

Now! You can see the difference —at a glance!

In the West, look for this new Nucoa package.

It's New!
Enriched!

When you take your first bite of today's new enriched Nucoa, you'll know you've discovered the table spread for your family.

Yes—this modern Nucoa that comes to you in this bright new package—adds elegance to everything it touches.

You'll agree—you can't buy better for twice the price!

nucoa —so pure it's digestible even for babies

Nurses . . . a major national need

Opportunities Unlimited

By MARGARET HICKEY

When the Nursing Council of Metropolitan Philadelphia recently asked 1300 young women—first-year students in schools of nursing—why they had chosen nursing as a career, nearly everyone answered, among other reasons: "I want to help people." More than half considered it also a "secure way of earning a living."

Whatever their reasons for entering nursing, all will find great opportunities, both in terms of humanitarian service and in career attainments. Today, with hospitals and public-health facilities on the increase, more babies being born, people living longer, the need for good nurses is growing each year. The President's Commission on Higher Education has predicted the need for more than 500,000 nurses by 1960—that is, 40 per cent more than we now have.

According to the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor, the number of job openings for nurses will probably be greater for years to come than for almost any other occupation traditionally undertaken by women and requiring career training. In professional nursing, there are many avenues for advancement, not only in actual practice but in supervision or teaching in hospitals, public-health and other Government agencies, including the armed services, business and industry, schools and universities. Those who wish to specialize in a particular field, such as psychiatry, communicable diseases, pediatrics or surgery, may do so with assurance that their talents will be needed.

To reach the 7,000 000 young people in our high schools at a time when they are making career decisions, the National Health Council is undertaking a new project called "Operation Health Career Horizons." A school wishing to plan a special health day, stress health at a career forum, or offer special counseling service can get helpful suggestions from materials supplied by the Council. A concise word-and-picture guidebook for teachers and vocational counselors covers 156 different occupations in health services. A leaflet for young people themselves and for their parents tells briefly pertinent facts about opportunities in nursing; a series of health-career posters will draw attention and interest to a school project.

From the National League for Nursing, 2 Park Avenue, New York 16, New York, may be obtained a list of "Schools of Professional Nursing," a chart on "Opportunities in Professional Nursing" and an illustrated brochure, "Careers in Nursing."

In many communities, the local nursing council is stimulating interest in career opportunities. The Philadelphia council, for example, plans a year-round schedule of activities. Forums will be held for students already interested in nursing. A Nursing Week will feature classroom and ward demonstrations, get-acquainted luncheons at schools of nursing, the distribution of informative literature, special television and radio programs. The Board of Education will provide scholarships (these totaled $30,000 in 1953–54) to promising students of nursing. END

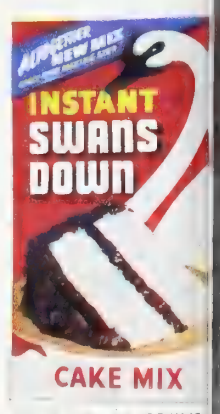
College Offers Preparation

Charlotte Werner stood tense, motionless, watching the doctor. With one hand he held the purplish, newborn baby by its feet and with the other slapped the tiny bottom gently, rhythmically. A second seemed to stretch into a minute. Again, slap-slap, slap-slap. Another second. Then the infant eyes crinkled, the mouth opened wide with a loud "WAAAaaah!" Charlotte relaxed and saw that everyone else was smiling too—the doctor, assisting nurse, Charlotte's two second-year classmates from Pasadena City College and their instructor. The nurse began washing the baby. She treated his eyes with a normal saline solution of penicillin and with a soft moist washcloth wiped his head, arms and feet. Then, applying a little ink on his right foot, she recorded a tiny print—for posterity. Cooing, she wrapped him up in a large white sheet and headed for the nursery.

Charlotte, her usually composed face flushed, eyes bright, went out into the hall. Removing her green surgical mask and cap, she began writing her report on the morning's observation at Huntington Memorial Hospital, Pasadena, California. When she had finished, she added an impulsive personal note:

"Nursing to me had meant comforting, healing. But today it's more—I saw them bring new life into the world."

Listening to Charlotte describe her morning's experiences at lunch in the hospital cafeteria made beginning student Liz Warner, who had been assigned to simple patient care in the convalescent ward, more sure than ever that she had chosen the right field. It was just a year ago that Liz had walked out of a fourth-year university class because she realized she wasn't cut out for teaching. Eager for a change, she took the first unskilled job that came along— CONTINUED ON PAGE 32



DENNIS STOCK

Preparing for bedside nursing, one of the nation's great needs, this young woman student of Pasadena City College, California, gains practical experience tending a young charge. The new two-year program stresses both physical and emotional care of the patient.

ALTOGETHER NEW

...a new way to make a cake

A product of General Foods

nstant Swans Down CAKE MIXES

nly one nixing step!

- Everything goes into the bowl all at once.
- Beat only once . . . and in ⅓ less time.
- Only Instant Swans Down Mixes mix in just one step . . . so simple you can't go wrong.

- The only mix with famous Swans Down Cake Flour, so you know how good every cake will taste.

It's "Swansational"

What makes a party DELIGHTFUL _in a hurry?

More new-sized cubes from the INLAND "Magic Touch"

ICE CUBE TRAY

THE "MAGIC TOUCH"—an easy flip of the "Magic Touch" lever on this brightly colored Inland Tray. That's all you do . . . and you have three full rows of sparkling ice cubes—in the new faster-cooling size, designed to fit any glass. Replace those worn out trays in your refrigerator with smart, new Inland "Magic Touch" Trays—the latest in ice cube convenience. Four gay colors: natural aluminum, gold, blue and bronze—one just right for you . . . at your dealer's.

Be sure your new refrigerator is equipped with Inland "Magic Touch" Ice Cube Trays. Ask your dealer for them.

INLAND MANUFACTURING

INLAND MANUFACTURING DIVISION
General Motors Corporation • Dayton, Ohio

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29

ward aide at a Los Angeles hospital. It was there she heard about the new kind of nursing course planned at Pasadena City College.

Liz had always thought of nursing students as leading cloistered and regimented lives with long shifts of hospital duty. So the idea of studying nursing in a two-year junior-college program (tuition-free) and living at home appealed to her. Liz wanted to sign up immediately for the first class starting in September, 1953. But to earn enough for living expenses, she decided to continue working for a year. In September, 1954, after passing the scholastic-aptitude tests, she entered the second class, one of 60 chosen from 200 applicants.

These are the figures Miss Lillian Vosloh, experienced director of the Pasadena City College department of nursing, points to when, enthusiastically, she tells you that the new program already has fulfilled one of its purposes—to bring more girls into nursing. Huntington Hospital, which in September, 1953, admitted its final class of five-year traditional students (and in the future will help prepare only Pasadena City College girls), "worked hard to get 35 students," Miss Vosloh says. "But we got 200 applicants without half trying." And by way of emphasizing the need for more nurses, she adds, "The Southern California area is growing so fast, our health facilities can't keep up."

The idea for a two-year experimental junior-college program grew out of the feeling of many educators and medical people that nurses' training should become part of the nation's general education system—for two important reasons: one, the ancient apprentice system still practiced in nursing is not attracting sufficient numbers of students; two, because of growing costs of medical care, hospitals can no longer shift the expense of educating staff nurses to the patient's bill. Would it be possible to prepare in two years a nurse who is as good as or better than the graduate of the three-year hospital program? Pasadena City College hopes to answer this question—affirmatively.

The God to whom little boys say their prayers has a face very like their mother's.

—JAMES M. BARRIE

Planned and taught entirely by the college faculty, the Pasadena program offers two years of concentrated full-time study. (Since California law requires 36 months of preparation for registered nurses, Pasadena City College has planned a third year of combined education-work experience—with pay—for the students. Miss Vosloh hopes someday to see the law amended to provide for two-year education for nurses.) It eliminates many of the repetitive tasks usually assigned to students in a hospital program. (Miss Vosloh recalls that she worked a seven-day week during her nurse-training days in Chicago in the early thirties—mostly making beds and giving baths.) In the new program there is no hospital "service," as such—all work in the hospital is geared to the college instruction. For the students themselves, this new nursing education means more freedom, enjoyment of college life, a more rounded education, and the chance to start earning a year sooner.

MANY hospital nursing students don't get into work in the wards until after six months of classes. At Pasadena City College, first-year nursing students spend four weeks in the classroom taking temperatures, counting pulses, giving simple medications, applying dressings—taking turns acting as patients. Then—after only a month—they are assigned patient care at Huntington Hospital one morning a week from 8 to 11, another morning to the nursing classroom. The three other days are spent on campus in science, English composition and physical-education classes—plus student assemblies. From now on all their nursing classes will be coordinated with hospital assignments.

One of the most joyful experiences in nursing, as Charlotte Werner discovered, is in the obstetrics ward. There the students follo the complete maternity cycle. A you woman, her brown hair neatly brushed ba against the pillow of her hospital bed, smi as three students follow their instructor, M Anna Steffen, into her room. The patien knees are bent to relax her stomach, whi moves up and down as she breathes. (She h been practicing this, she explains.) "Yes, t is my first baby," she says in answer to M Steffen's question. "It's so exciting." H eyes squint as another contraction com They come now every five or six minut last about 30 seconds. To the girls she sa with a grin, "It feels like its foot is up unc my ribs."

In obstetrics class, which emphasizes t nurse's role in preventing injuries, the gi have learned that the heartbeat is the c to the condition of the unborn bal Now Charlotte adjusts the stethosco places it low on the mother's abdomen a listens. "It's faster than a normal beat," s comments, looking up at Miss Steffen. D ing the first stage of labor, the heartbeat counted about every 45 minutes. In the s ond stage the nurse must listen to the be every 15 minutes.

FOR the first three or four sessions of t 18-week course in maternal and child nu ing the girls learn by observing each st in the preparation for delivery, then wat the actual delivery (which they have seen several medical movies already), follow t postnatal care of mother and baby. Later t students will be assign to actual care—unc supervision.

After each mornin work, the girls, dressed their blue nylon unifor with crisp white taff pinafores and starch caps, gather with their structor to discuss t care they have given, h they could have improve how they would feel in the patient's pla One student's mother, a former nurse, or made the mistake of asking her daugh about her "cases." She was promptly buked: "We think of them as patien mother, never cases." All the "pilots," students in this new program are calle seem to have this personal feeling toward t people they care for. And in their co-or nated classroom-and-hospital work in an omy and physiology, obstetrics, pediatr and psychiatry they learn to look after t patient's total care needs, which include em tional as well as physical health.

Eighteen-year-old Betty Hallstrom, of t second-year class, has found through h care of a cardiac patient that health educ tion is also part of a nurse's work. Tall, so spoken, with curly red hair, Betty has a cal mature air that reassures. In physiology cla which was studying the cardiovascular sy tem, Betty learned something about her p tient's ailment, the type of treatment needed. As Betty walked into his room, ca rying an attractively arranged breakfast tra her first thought was "Why, he doesn't lo sick at all." And she soon found that her j was to convince this apparently robust m that he needed complete rest. When Betty s the tray down, the patient picked up a pie of toast and started to butter it.

"Here, let me do that for you," Betty sa gently but firmly.

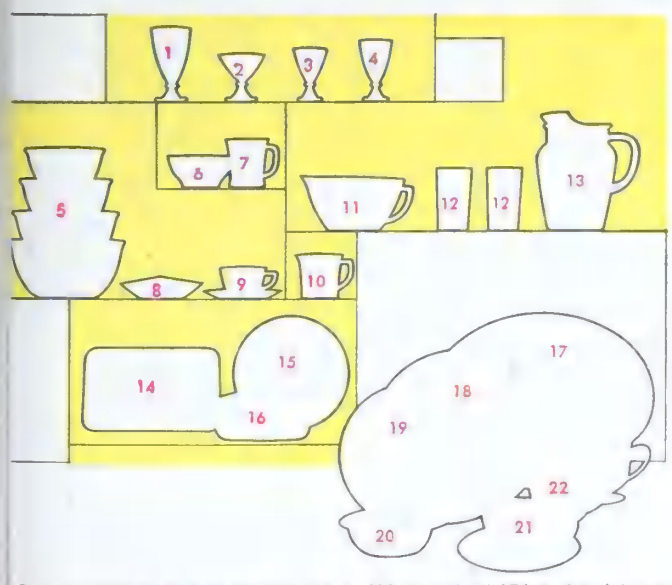
"I can do it myself," the patient protest Betty smiled. "Now, if you had a brok leg, you wouldn't try to walk on it, wou you? Right now your heart needs a goo rest. It will heal only if you keep your enti body still."

The man sighed, leaned back heavily an submitted to Betty's spoon-feeding.

Betty's sister Alice is a student in Huntin ton's traditional five-year program, workin toward a Bachelor of Science degre awarded by the University of Southern Ca fornia. Unlike Betty, Alice must live at t nurses' residence, where she receives boa and room in payment for her ward service She works on a planned, rotated schedul

CONTINUED ON PAGE 129

Can you name the glassware you use most often?



• Newest Anchorglass dinnerware – "GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY" – banded in 22 K gold!

The name is sure to be

Anchorglass

for 50 years

the most famous name in glass!

9-oz goblet 15¢*. 2. 6 oz sherbet 15¢. 3. 3½ oz cocktail 15¢. 4. 4 oz juice or ne 15¢. 5. set of 4 mixing bowls 98¢. 6. soup or cereal 10¢. 7. 8 oz coffee mug ¢. 8. 4⅝" ash tray 10¢. 9. 8 oz cup and saucer 20¢. 10. 8 oz Fire-King meas- ing cup 25¢. 11. Fire-King batter bowl 29¢. 12. 11 oz decorated tumbler 10¢. . decorated ice lip pitcher 59¢. 14. Fire-King utility baking pan 49¢. 15. Fire-King pie plate 29¢. 16. Fire-King 1½ qt. casserole 69¢. GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY— . platter 59¢. 18. dinner plate 29¢. 19. soup plate 25¢. 20. dessert dish 2 for 25¢. . cup and saucer 25¢. 22. sugar and creamer 39¢.

Recognize these pieces of Anchorglass? Chances are many of them are in your own home. Recognize the low, low prices? Not a single item on this page costs more than 69¢. Yet each is the finest of its kind, designed to give you years of proud and satisfying service.

Why is it possible to get such good styling and such value at these prices? Because Anchorglass is made by the largest manufacturer of household glassware in the world— with an output of millions of pieces a day. Such volume means savings— savings Anchorglass passes on to you. Take advantage of them every time you shop for glass.

PRODUCTS OF THE ANCHOR HOCKING GLASS CORPORATION • LANCASTER, OHIO

*Prices may vary slightly in different sections of the Country.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D.
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

What can a wife do if her husband refuses to take responsibility?

Helping Him be Responsible

ANY girl likes to date a man who is good-looking, popular and "fun to be with." Certainly good looks and an attractive personality are desirable traits. Unfortunately, they have little to do with qualifications or readiness for marriage. In fact, the very traits which make a man desirable as a date may interfere with his adjustment to the role of a husband.

Consider this letter: "When Tom and I were married three years ago, I thought I was the luckiest girl in the world. He's very good-looking, a wonderful dancer, and a favorite at parties. He is always cheerful and good-tempered, and he loves me. He hasn't changed, but maybe that's the trouble.

"I want to quit my job and start a family, but we can't afford it. He sells insurance and has the ability and personality to do well if he'd really work. But he sleeps late, quits early, and sees clients mostly at lunch or on the golf course. His business expenses and personal bills take most of his earnings. He rarely lifts a hand to help me around the apartment.

"When I talk to him he always promises to do better. But nothing comes of it, and I go on working, and paying the bills.

"I haven't stopped loving him, but I'm worn out and getting discouraged. Did I marry the wrong man, or are all husbands like this? What can a wife do if her husband won't take responsibility?"

No, not all husbands are like Tom. Some young husbands assume the responsibilities of marriage naturally and easily at the outset. At the other extreme are the irresponsible playboys who expect to enjoy the privileges of marriage without altering the carefree attitudes and habits of bachelor life. A man like this is not cut out to be a good husband; the woman so unlucky (or unwise) as to marry him had best recognize that his wife will have to bear most of the load.

But most men, like Tom, are in between. They are neither burdensome parasites nor model husbands. If they are decent, reasonable, and love their wives, they want to do their share but don't yet know how. They can and will learn, with their wives' help.

Tom's personality and disposition attracted his wife in the first place. If she is realistic, she does not want to destroy them. Properly controlled, his social gifts can be a business asset and a source of pleasure. But at present, his preoccupation with social activities is interfering with his work and undermining his marriage.

His wife's goal should be to help him adapt his youthful qualities to his present status, so that he remains himself, the Tom she loves, but becomes a better husband. Here are suggestions she (or you) may find helpful:

Begin at the beginning, with small, specific tasks instead of a general request to take over the household repairs. Ask him to replace a washer in the kitchen tap, or a defective light plug. Assemble the tools, and thank him when he's finished. What he has done may not seem like much, but it is more than nothing, and a step in the right direction.

Help him get started. Some men don't intend to evade duties, but are expert at postponing. If your problem is getting the bills paid, simply assemble them in a convenient work space with pen and checkbook. Point them out, offer to help, and tell him you've postponed dinner so he can get started! And don't forget to thank him, even though it's his job.

If the real trouble is that you are living beyond your means, this is one way of making him face the facts.

Set an example. Some wives, because they are discouraged, or to "get even," gradually relax their own efforts. This is exactly the wrong approach. Continue to do your part, and do it well, without complaining or expecting thanks.

Be definite about your own plans and wishes. Tom's wife wants to quit her job, but has she set a time? It's easy to postpone "sometime," but definite agreements are harder to avoid. Quite possibly, if Tom knew his wife planned to quit work at the end of this year, he would begin to make plans accordingly.

The best time to establish the habit of co-operation is at the beginning. Entranced by her love and her new status, the bride is often too indulgent. By urging her husband to leave everything to her, she encourages an attitude she may regret—and resent—later.

Perhaps this is where Tom's wife made her mistake. She has lost valuable time, but it is not too late. She—or any wife whose husband loves her—can help him be responsible.

Ask Yourself: "Am I Close to My Children?"

Every mother loves her children and wants to guide and protect them. But her ability to do so as they grow older depends on the relationship established when they were young. Are you doing all you can to encourage your children's confidence, respect and love? Answer yes or no.

Do You:

1. Find time to listen when they want to talk?
2. Show father their handiwork in their presence?
3. Scold or punish them only in privacy?
4. Assign them regular tasks, however small?
5. Answer their questions freely and frankly?
6. Encourage them to bring playmates home?
7. Arrange picnics, parties, outings for them?
8. Treasure their gifts (even worms!) to you?
9. Let them "help" you cook and clean?
10. Show your love and respect for their father?
11. Curtail privileges when accompanying obligations are neglected?
12. Let them share mealtime talk?
13. Sometimes join in their games?
14. Refrain from forcing them to eat?

Regardless of the number of your "yes" answers (11 or more is a good score), can you see how this kind of relationship to your children helps them to be good husbands and wives when they marry?

Is Virtue Outmoded?

RECENTLY a bewildered wife wrote me about former neighbors of hers whose marriage of ten years ended in a scandalous divorce. She writes: "They had an ample income, a beautiful home and two lovely children. They were happy until Jim's business took him away from home for longer and longer absences. He turned to other women for companionship, though he claims they meant nothing to him. Perhaps Lou suspected what was happening; at any rate, she had an affair with another man.

"When Jim found out about it, he was crushed; though he'd done the same thing himself. He did try to patch it up, but Lou refused to give up her lover. (She hasn't married him, though.) Now they're bitter, angry and resentful, but neither will admit doing wrong.

"None of this would have happened if they'd paid attention to old-fashioned morality. Is virtue a thing of the past?"

No, virtue is not a thing of the past. There always have been, and always will be, people who disregard accepted standards of conduct. Usually they pay a penalty, whether in practical terms like loss of income or business status, or in emotional suffering. (Jim and Lou have paid both.) And usually, though they may deny it, they are troubled by a sense of embarrassment, if not actual guilt.

To be sure, in a changing world there are bound to be changes in our thinking and behavior as in anything else. Fifty years ago, it was almost unheard of for a woman to use lipstick or other make-up, let alone to smoke! Practices and habits once regarded as questionable, if not downright sinful, are now taken for granted.

But the fact remains that marriage is still an ancient and honorable institution. Most people continue to believe—as I do—that the happiest husbands and wives are those who are faithful to each other. And certainly the greatest single factor leading to infidelity is not the "temptation" of another woman or another man, not the increased freedom of today's wives, not even a different attitude toward sexual relationships. The greatest single factor leading to infidelity is the inability of husband and wife to achieve and continue a satisfying and companionable personal relationship. The husband and wife who achieve that relationship have little to fear from external influences. And they can be assured that their example is the best possible guarantee that their standards will be maintained by their children.

Do You Agree?

Do college girls forsake the standards their parents taught them?

No. One study shows that they follow most parental standards more closely than the standards of their college friends.

with Gifts of Steel

"She's getting married!"

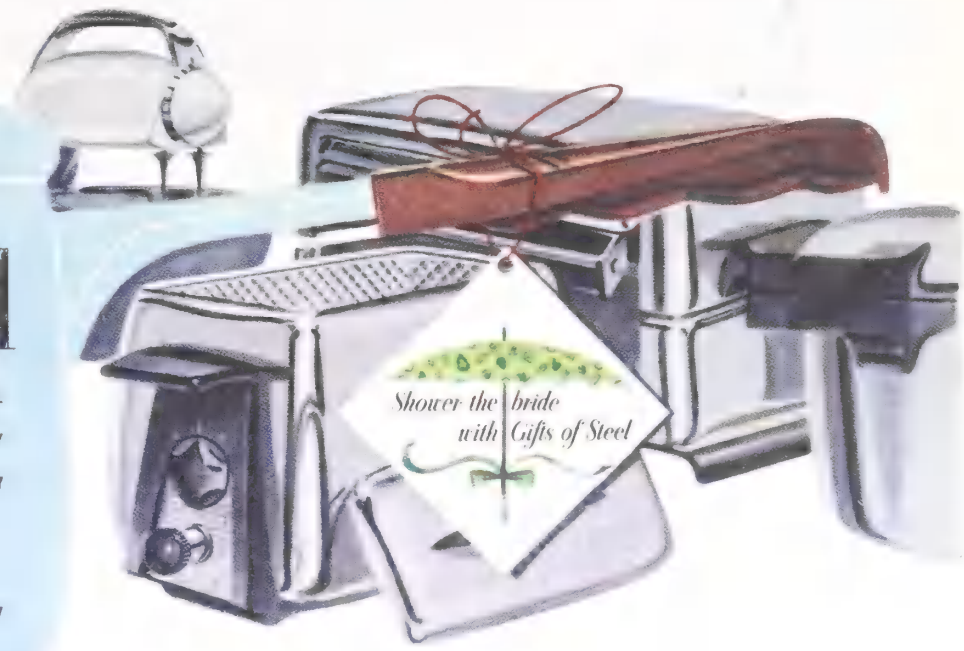
Remember when they said that about you? Remember the excitement and the plans you made . . . the thoughts of a new and wonderful life together . . . the feeling of fulfillment knowing that your most cherished dreams had at last come true!

Or, perhaps, for lucky you, that glorious time is still to come!

Part of the thrill when you live this dream-come-true comes from the good wishes of friends and family. And usually, they are expressed most tangibly in a shower for the bride.



But now there is a new idea in bridal showers . . . a Steel Shower!

Shower the bride with gifts of steel! And there's something quite significant in the idea of a Steel Shower. For a steel gift is first of all enduring . . . as enduring as she wants her marriage to be. It's beautiful, too, and always useful.

Perhaps it will be a gift for her new kitchen . . . a gift of lustrous stainless steel or colorful enameled steel. It might be a lamp or hostess tables of smart, jet black steel for her living room. There are literally thousands of things to choose from . . . made by hundreds of reliable manufacturers. For steel is everywhere in the home and steel will serve her all the days of her married life.

So to carry your best wishes to the happy bride . . . at a shower, or at the wedding . . . make it a smart, lasting, useful gift . . . make it a gift of steel!

Only Steel can do so many jobs so well

United States Steel

AMERICAN BRIDGE . . . AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE and CYCLONE FENCE . . . COLUMBIA-GENEVA STEEL

CONSOLIDATED WESTERN STEEL . . . GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING . . . NATIONAL TUBE . . . OIL WELL SUPPLY

TENNESSEE COAL & IRON . . . UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS . . . UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY

Divisions of UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION, PITTSBURGH

UNITED STATES STEEL HOMES, INC. • UNION SUPPLY COMPANY

UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY • UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY 5-417

TANA HOBAN

The Boy-Watcher's Guide

1 THE GIRL-SHY HERMIT
(Reclusus Timidus)

Distinguishing Characteristics: flies for cover at the sight of a girl and in groups is likely to develop a protective silence which serves to camouflage an inclination for deep friendships.
Natural Habitat: The other side of the street when a girl's walking down it.
Hunting Hints: Infinite patience is demanded. Win his confidence through daily smiles and occasional yes-or-no questions: "Ready for the exam, Bill?" Avoid addressing him in the presence of others—especially boys. Eventually give a party and invite him stag, not as your date. (Because a person-to-person invitation may startle him, use telephone or pen.)
Care and Feeding: Once he's won over, he can be depended upon for loyalty and devotion. (It's a rare Reclusus Timidus, however, who rushes a girl off her feet or is demonstrative in public.) If conversational difficulties persist despite a well-established friendship, be prepared to throw the conversation his way with questions about him, his family, his future, or what he likes or dislikes. If he still has trouble talking, look up at him and say, "You don't mind if we don't talk while we're dancing (or swimming or drinking malted milks!)? I'd rather concentrate on dancing (or swimming or eating)."

2 THE BOY-BUSY HERO
(Masculinus Superlus)

Distinguishing Characteristics: a brisk gait, often described as a "strut," general habits similar to those of the Reclusus Timidus—except he's likely to travel in an all-male gang.
Natural Habitat: ball park, gymnasium, the underside of a secondhand car.
Hunting Hints: Arrange to be where he is. (Although a highly sociable creature, he cannot easily be lured into female company.) Have tickets "given" to you—for a play or a concert—and ask him to go along. Learn to mimic (not talk) his language: batting averages, politics, student activities. He'll respond to a need for his help in a worthy cause (not your dating life). Be straightforward and honest with him.
Care and Feeding: Since you can't change him—not for a while anyway—change yourself. Become like a kid brother. Hang around where he is. Run errands, stand by with he-man snacks, appreciate his friends. (No criticisms or female-type interruptions when they're talking.) Be ready when he is—for a walk in the country or car washing. With time and luck and patience, a cozy little gang of two often develops.

3 THE BOOK-LOVING THINKER
(Scholaris Dedicatus)

Distinguishing Characteristics: a rare species with an unusual fluency of speech, markedly characterized by correct grammar, an absorbed expression frequently mistaken by the amateur for a disinterest in girls.
Natural Habitat: the library, the hobby shop.
Hunting Hints: Curiosity—ask him what he's up to. When he tells you (he usually will—at length), listen attentively. If you don't understand, or think he's talking in circles, get him to explain. Because he's likely to be interested in everything, let him know you're a girl with interests too—not clothes, other boys or dating.
Care and Feeding: Never try to impress him by acting as if everything he says is past history to you. If you have something concrete to say about a book or a movie, tell him, but follow with "What do you think?" Keep developing your interests, adding new ones too—because as long as you're interesting, he'll be interested.

4 SWEET-TALKING SOPHISTICATE
(Homo Semper in Amor)

Distinguishing Characteristics: low, persuasive voice, well-mannered, likely to be an excellent dancer, not above preening. Migratory.
Natural Habitat: a dark corner—usually.
Hunting Hints: Weave a mammoth net of other boys—and place your (attractively dressed and well-groomed) self in the center of it. If this lure attracts him, take an active interest in what he has to say, but argue with him—a little. Be feminine in your approach—appreciative—never know-it-all or know-as-much-as-he.
Care and Feeding: You can expect a rush from this one, but don't date him exclusively. He'll urge you to talk about yourself, but be a little mysterious. Always be firm with him about necking. (This boy, adored by many, may have discovered that it's sometimes easier to neck than it is to rely solely on personality and conversation.) Close scrutiny often reveals a sentimental streak in his nature. Cherish his thoughtfulness—in an obvious way!

5 THE SPOTLIGHT-HAPPY CLOWN
(Vita de Partire)

Distinguishing Characteristics: Flashy plumage (often the latest in clothing). His call—a shrill whistle—is indeed memorable.
Natural Habitat: hanging from a chandelier or on top of a human pyramid at the shore.
Hunting Hints: Equip yourself with the latest in records, fads, slang. Play up to him as long as you can take it. Then intrigue him by not laughing. If he demands to know why you're not, calmly say, "Did someone say something funny? I guess I wasn't listening." Follow this with a compliment on his dancing, or anything—as long as it isn't too obvious that you're making amends for not having laughed at him.
Care and Feeding: Because he'll cross anyone who tries to compete with him off his list—don't; even though he might not show it, he'll be hurt if you belittle him too successfully—don't. Do let him show off his talents: "Let's play charades." At a party, ask him to help you: "You're so good at talking to people. Will you see that the new boy meets everyone?"

THE BOY YOU HAVE YOUR EYE ON (Solitarius Homo en Mundo)

He's shy one moment and a show-off the next. At a big formal dance, he's apt to seem sophisticated and aloof. Then he'll turn around and bewilder you by acting like a good "pal." Knowing what to do when these various moods strike him will make him seem less of a puzzle and, by concentrating on him, you'll forget yourself—the first step to becoming a date-happy girl.

No matter what his mood—or even his "type" if there really is such a thing—all boys go for the girl who:

can make people feel lovable and comfortable;
is enthusiastic about sports, parties and other people;
isn't a great beauty, but who is attractive-looking.

If you'd like to be that girl, collect thirty cents and write to: Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, for Sub-Deb Booklets HOW ABOUT A DATE? (No. 2269); HOW TO BE POPULAR (No. 1022); and PERSONALITY REPORT CARD (No. 1514).

THE SUB-DEB edited by Ruth Imler

ABOUT CLOTHES AND CARS

You're Going to a Picnic

To the white sands of the beach or the cool, green woods!

You'll wear jaunty boyish shorts... a hooded jersey with a light cling....

A Bel Air Convertible takes you there. Here's why...

A short drive or a long one, there's almost no limit to the fun you can have in this fashion-first beauty—the Motoramic Chevrolet. Its long, lean look is stealing the thunder from the high-priced cars! And it's yours in an exciting array of colors gay as a painter's palette.

Take curves with confidence. New outrigger rear springs give the car much greater stability when cornering. You'll notice a delightful difference in the way it steers, too. The new Chevrolet turns with silken ease, thanks to friction-cutting Ball-Race Steering. It drives like a dream!

Emergency . . . well taken care of by those big Chevrolet brakes! All it takes is slight pressure from your toe with the new Swing-Type Brake Pedal. Your Chevrolet stops serenely, smoothly and with its "head up"—thanks to Chevrolet's exclusive new Anti-Dive Braking Control.

You can't help feeling rich, young and carefree in a sweet ship like this. Its luxurious appointments make you feel pampered. You'd never dream it could be so practical about mileage, initial cost and resale value. Why don't you eye and try this glamour package at your Chevrolet dealer's.

The Motoramic Chevrolet

CHEVROLET

STEALING THE THUNDER FROM THE HIGH-PRICED CARS!

Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan

The crisply modern NEW DAWN and graceful SPRING LILY finished mirror-bright. 5-piece place setting, $6.00.

ALL PATTERNS MADE IN U.S.A.

NEVER A DULL MOMENT...

in the whole life of this gleaming stainless steel!

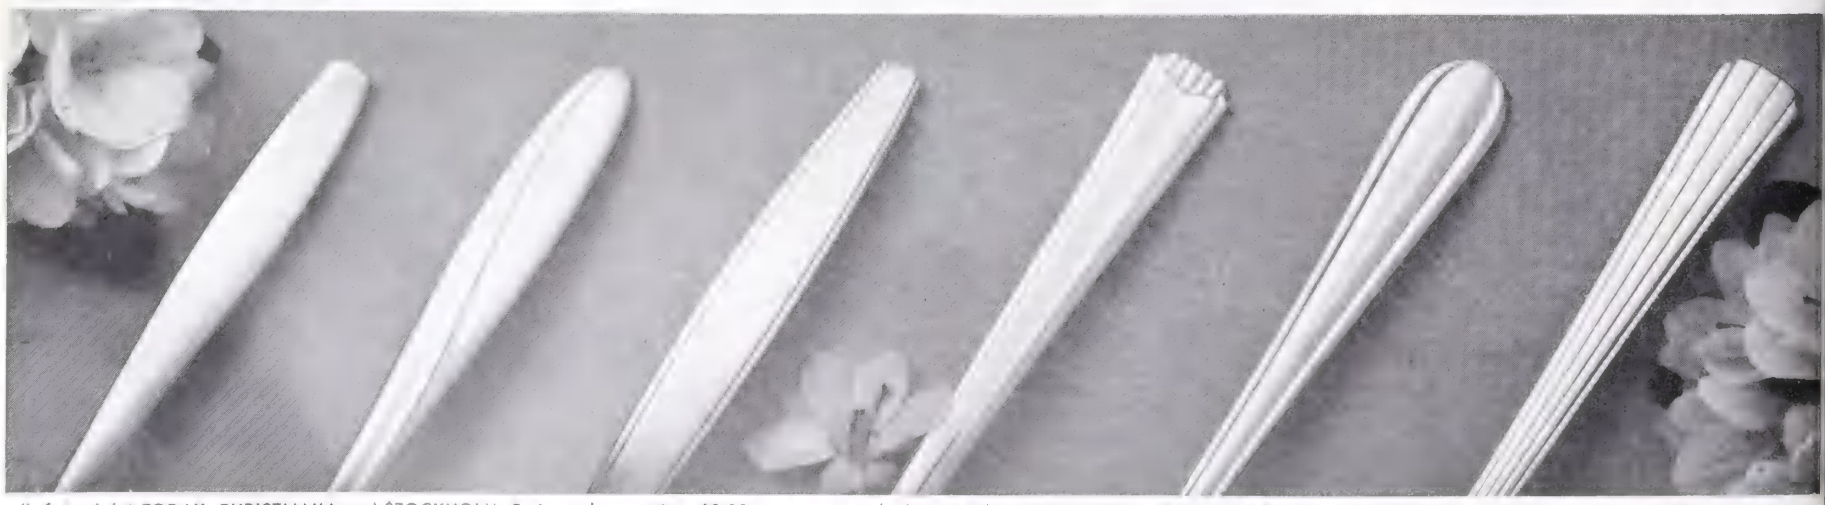
NOT long ago stainless steel was called the "tableware of tomorrow," but women everywhere are eagerly making it the tableware of today.

International Stainless, with its perpetually polished table manners, needs no special care in normal use. It will not rust, stain, tarnish, scale or corrode. The same element that imparts color to precious rubies gives International Stainless its incredible hardness and resistance to corrosion.

The gleaming patterns have a lovely simplicity. Some are crisply modern. All have been designed and fashioned by the world's foremost silversmiths—master craftsmen, who bring to the making of International Stainless more than a century of fine silversmithing experience.

Each piece is modeled in heavy steel, ideally balanced and proportioned, hand-finished and polished to perfection. The hollow-handle knives have forged steel blades; the spoon bowls are deep and rounded. All this marks International Stainless the finest tableware of its kind.

A booklet called "The Story of Stainless Tableware" contains some questions and answers about today's most modern metal. If you'd like to have a copy, send 10¢ to International Stainless, 169 Colony Street, Meriden, Conn.



See the smart new International patterns soon. Even if you already have silver, you'll want a second set of this worksaving, timesaving stainless steel.

There is an International Stainless pattern for every taste ... a quality for every requirement.

International

Stainless

Mastercrafted in Steel by
The International Silver Co.

(Left to right) TODAY, CHRISTIANIA and STOCKHOLM. 5-piece place setting, $8.00.

(Left to right) MASTERPIECE, AMERICAN FASHION and LORDSHIP. 5-piece place setting, $4.00.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Holly knows more than meets the eye—for instance, if there is a bone on top of the refrigerator or cheese in the cupboard.

Now the homespun glory of the ram-blers pours over the countryside, the impretentious Dorothy Perkins in candy pink and the red in a deep scar-let. The red is highly dramatic, but Dorothy is a girl in pink gingham. The Silver Moon is opening, too, such small single pearl-pure blossoms, and she spreads over the picket fence by the gate.

We bought the Silver Moon many years ago at a ten-cent store, in the days when we had not a penny to spare on anything other than orthopedic shoes for the children or Indian costumes for Girl Scout ritual. Now I find the Silver Moon as lovely as a rose can be, and like her the better for her simple background!

My friend Ed Shenton is fierce on the subject of roses. He feels fancy hybrids, elegant long-stemmed florist blooms are decadent. I was so surprised when he uttered this blasphemy, munching a hot clam canapé and looking quite normal at the time.

To me, any rose is a miracle, but I do cherish the country roses that grow so gladly all over our valley and take no care. They climb barn walls, spread over old stone fences, ramble along casual lattices by old gardens. In the Quiet Garden, Jill sprays and fertilizes and hoes our few elegant ones, and all the time the ordinary roses just grow. My favorite in the special category is Peace, which changes from a golden bud frosted with pink to a pale gold, then to a creamy tone as it opens.

And down by the pond blooms Mr. Clark's yellow rose, so called because a Mr. Clark dug it and brought it when he was patching the hearth. It is as sweet and prickery as first love.

I prefer romantic names such as Grey Pearl, or Dawn, or Neige Parfum, to something named Rex Anderson or President Herbert Hoover. The latter should be honored—and I am a devoted friend of Mr. Hoover, though he doesn't know it—but nevertheless it just does not seem to me those names are suited to roses.

I would like to name a few roses my-self. Nice sentimental names such as White Summer Night, Lady in Ermine for whites. Embers, I think, for a real red. Summer Sunrise for a yellow. And Young Love for that perfect pink. However, after sitting an hour thinking up names of roses, I can see it is not simple. New roses come every year, and the horticulturists are only human. So I should settle down quietly with Mrs. Miniver and Rochester and The New Yorker and stop fussing!

Of course Will Shakespeare opined that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. And that should settle that.

Now we have some hot days, New England being what it is, and that is variable. And I learn from our light-and-power company, which furnishes nothing but electricity, that if we put our candles in the refrigerator for twenty-four hours before using, they will not drip. I think it is rather touching that the electric company concerns itself with my candles.

For on June nights, when supper is on, we can eat by candlelight, and that does not make the little meter whirl around at all. Tall ivory candles are good to have at the table, even a humble supper tastes better in the soft wavering glow.

How strange it is, I reflect, as I scrape the wax from the milk-glass holders, that down the years mankind still needs candlelight. Is it some deep instinctive bond with our ancient past? With 25, 40, 75, 100 wattage—not to mention fluorescent lights and concealed wall units and all the rest—a dinner table is still set forth with candles. We are a very odd people, I think. We always cherish the old while we use the new part of the time.

The elegant families of the eighteenth century who sat in satins and velvets at table and ate by candlelight, for that was all there was, would be surprised to see Jill and me in our blue jeans and Dacron sweaters sitting down to eat, and lighting candles! But how lovely it is to think we do have a feeling for another time, other days, right now in the H-bomb age—and for all I know next Tuesday we shall be in an X-bomb age.

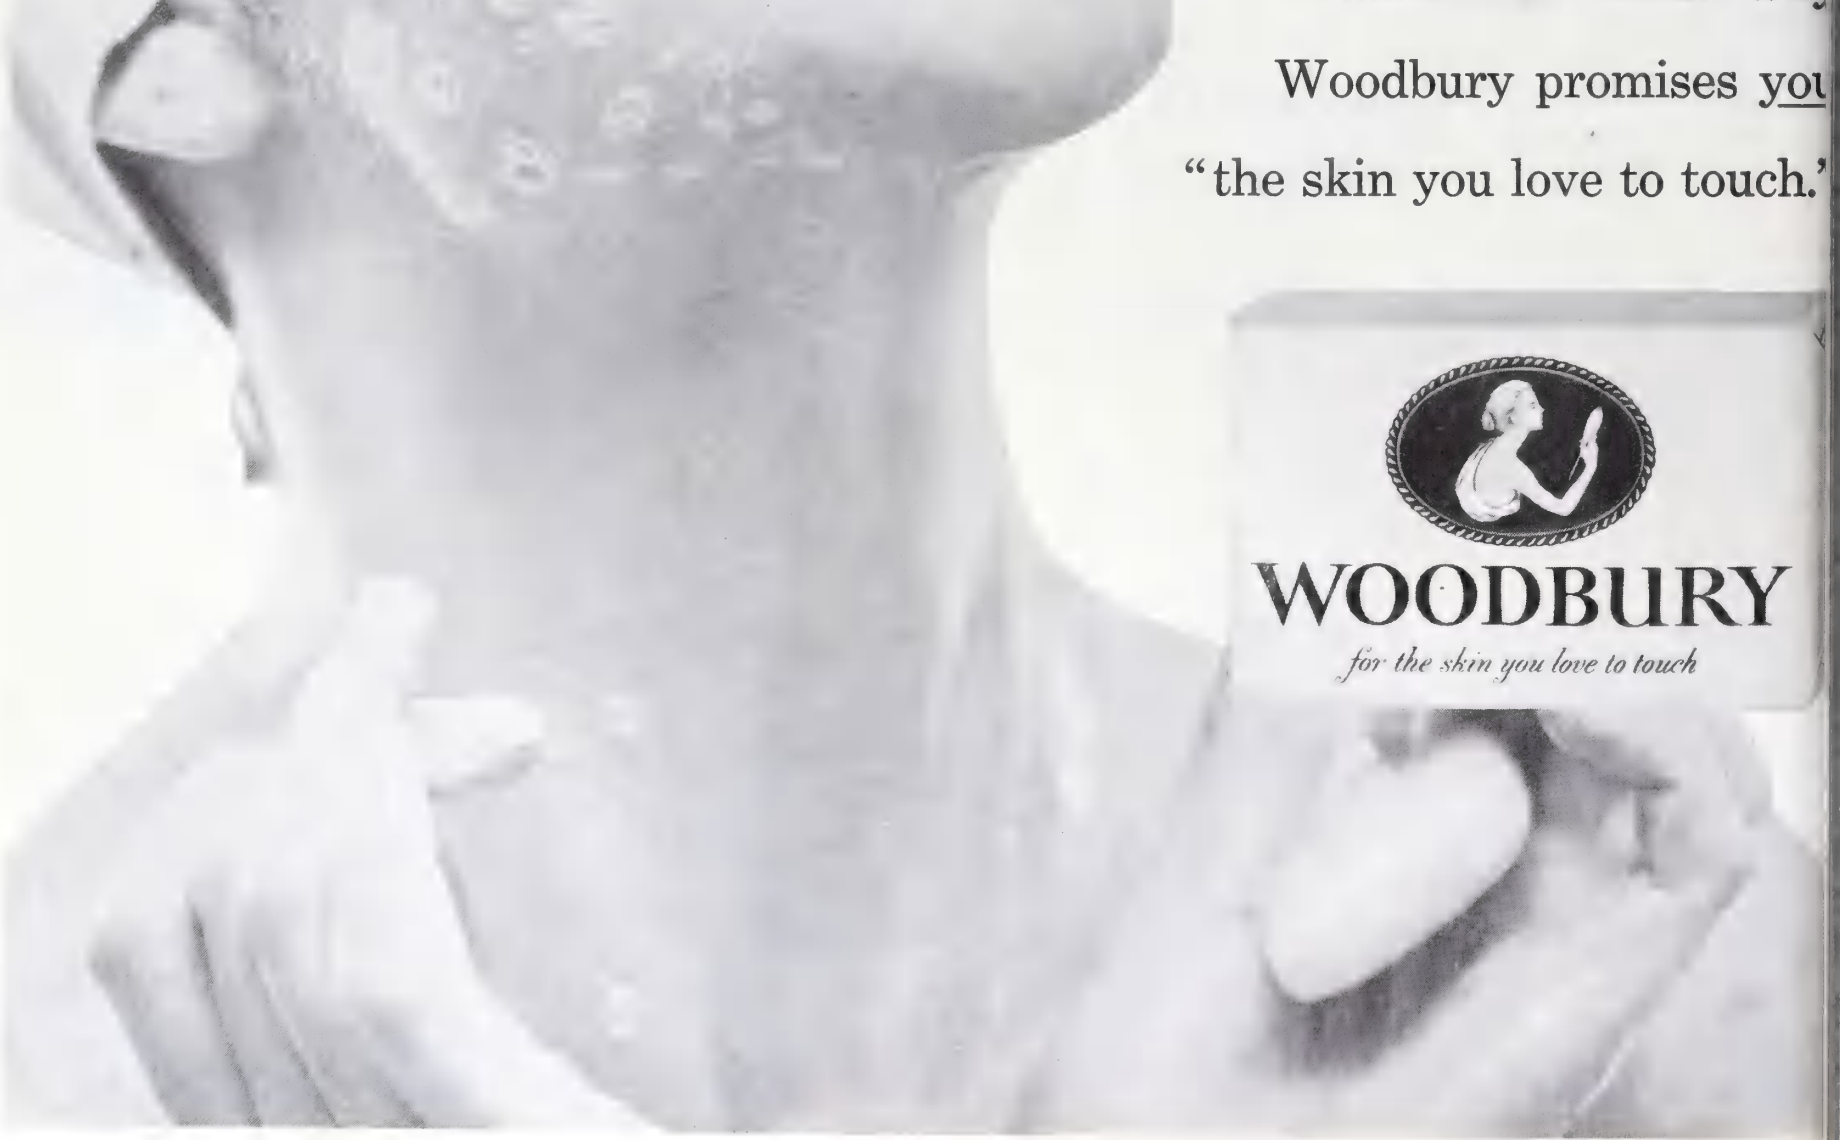
Even now, my African violets bloom as if they felt they should show those outdoor flowers. Evening Star is the color of moonstone, and one delicate bloom has come out. Pink Cheer is

CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

NEW IDEA!

Good Seasons Salad Dressing Mix!

A famous chef put his secret blend of rare herbs and spices into envelopes—named it Good Seasons Mix. You add your own vinegar and oil and get the finest salad dressing you ever tasted. You'll want to try all five mixes, each makes a half pint in seconds—Old Fashion French, California French, Old Fashion Garlic, Exotic Herbs and Bleu Cheese.



SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY KIT—This Self-Measuring Bottle, 2 different Good Seasons Salad Dressing Mixes and a salad recipe booklet are waiting for you at your food store for only 39c.

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Try the soap with 7 FACE CREAM OILS.

Try New WOODBURY SOAP

These oils and emollients are there, be cause skin scientists know they help replace natural oils. (You need these oils for truly soft skin, but ordinary care washes them away.) You'll feel the difference in Woodbury's fragrant, richer lather. Use it on your face.
Use it in your bath. See how it smooths your skin.
This is the reason why
Woodbury promises you
"the skin you love to touch."

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real, but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

"On the bus I saw a poster about e prevalence of venereal diseases and er since I've been worried."

HE patient explained, "I had no inten-)n of visiting a doctor today—I was going opping. Then I saw a poster on the is which said that thousands of people are ffering from venereal disease without even iowing it. 'Maybe that is what is the matter th me,' I thought, and I decided to come re right away and find out."

"Well," said the doctor, "I can give you a finite answer after making a few tests. his is one subject on which there need be guesswork."

"Is venereal disease really as prevalent as at poster said?"

"The health department is responsible for ose posters and their statistics show that out one per cent of the population is af-cted. Saying it another way, there are out one and a half million cases of ve-real disease in the country today—a tragic ct, since there need be none. But tell me, hat has led you to believe that you are suf-ring from venereal disease?"

"Because I have a discharge which has en bothering me for two or three months."

"Please do not be offended, because I ust ask this: Is it likely that you have been posed to such an infection?"

"Why, no, Doctor. But it could come)m a toilet seat, couldn't it?"

"Possibly, but very unlikely. It usually mes from intimate contact—person to rson—with one who has one or other of e diseases."

"There is more than one kind of venereal sease?"

"Yes. The two commonest are syphilis d gonorrhea, and it is possible to contract)th at the same time. Gonorrheal infection about five times more common than syphi-ic."

"Are they anything alike?"

"About as different as black is from white.)norrhea is a local inflammatory condi-)n, while syphilis is a generalized blood in-ction. Gonorrhea is an infection of the ucous membranes, and tends to follow ucous-membrane tissue as far as it can ach, which may well mean the inside of the dominal cavity. A syphilitic infection pen-rates deeper because it quickly becomes an cer with access to the blood stream. The starting place is not confined to the genital organs; it may be transmitted by kissing—a cracked lip is an ideal point of vulnerability."

"Well, I haven't had any ulcers but I do have this vaginal discharge and I've been terribly worried."

"Then let's proceed with the examination. Now, I'll ask my nurse to get you ready, and we will take specimens from the discharge to put under the microscope, as well as a small quantity of blood from one of your veins. Neither procedure will bother you much. Go with the nurse, please."

A few moments later the doctor, grumbling good-naturedly over the fact that it was the technician's afternoon off, was busying himself over a half-dozen glass slides which he was treating with medicine-dropper applications. Later he peered at the specimens, one by one, through the lenses of a powerful bifocal microscope.

At last, turning to the patient, he said, "I am satisfied that there is no gonorrheal infection present. These specimens were taken from several different areas. Gonococci are tiny, growing in pairs, and they cannot be confounded with anything else when the method of staining which I have used has been followed. No, there is no gonorrhea here."

"Then what is causing the discharge?"

"I formed an opinion about that when I saw the clinical signs that are present. We'll prove whether I was right or not in just a few minutes. All that is necessary are a few drops of warm water, to dilute the specimen. Now I will put it under the 'scope. Yes, there they are, little pear-shaped objects scuttling around counterclockwise."

"What are they, Doctor?"

"Trichomonads, as vigorous specimens as I have ever seen. You have a well-developed case of trichomoniasis, and that is all, in my judgment."

"Where did I get this, Doctor?"

"Probably from a toilet seat, as you suggested. Now, if you will let me take a little blood with this syringe, we will be through. I cannot give you the result of the blood-serum test for syphilis today, but when we have it, it will be decisive."

"Is it necessary to do this since you already know what is troubling me, Doctor?"

"Yes, I think it is necessary. You came here to find out if you have a venereal disease, didn't you? This will give us the answer conclusively. However, I expect the serum test to be negative. You have no history of inflammation of the mouth and throat, or ctor Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of omen, containing several chapters which have not peared in the Journal, has been published by Haw-rn Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 129

Life by Formfit promises you figure perfection Anytime!

Your wardrobe is as varied as your busy day that takes you from the typewriter to the theater . . . from the kitchen to a cocktail party. And now you can "match up" every outfit with its own complementary bra! Sweater or scoop neckline . . . sheer blouse or strapless sheath . . . there are Life Bras styled for your every need. Wonderful what these Life Bras do for you and your clothes. But see for yourself how Life Bras meet all your wardrobe needs—all through the day. At your favorite store!

For Daytime

Life Hidden Strip Bra No. 514 . . . in cool cotton broadcloth. New-design stitched underbust with sewn-in strips lifts, molds and holds you to youthful beauty. 32A to 42D. $2.50.

For Playtime

Life Romance Bra No. 577 . . . cotton, frosted with embroidery. Circular stitching of Nylo-Braid for a lasting uplift. Washes beautifully. 32A to 38C $2.50.

Free! "Your Figure Type —What to do About It." Send today for this new Formfit booklet. Mailed in plain envelope. Write to The Formfit Company, Dept. F-55, 400 S. Peoria Street, Chicago, Ill.

Prices slightly higher in Canada

A Formfit CREATION

New Kleenex Economy Pack

Look! 400 strong, soft Kleenex tissues

With this new Economy Pack you really save two ways:

1. You get 400 tissues — more Kleenex for your money.
2. The exclusive "pop-up" box saves as it serves one tissue at a time.

What's more, the new Economy Pack comes in a choice of colors—soft pink, soft yellow or pure white. Today ask for Kleenex — in the new Economy Pack.

Be sure it's Kleenex

—the largest selling tissue in the world

* T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
© 1957 INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN June, 1905, women went bathing in black or navy twill with bloomers, skirts, long sleeves and high necks, worn with sunbonnets and often gloves, as well as stockings and shoes. The Pennsylvania Railroad began "the fastest long-distance train service in the world"—eighteen hours from New York to Chicago. Hammocks were popular indoors and out, and no piazza was complete without its palm.

The June, 1905, JOURNAL calls the forthcoming July Fourth "a day of homicide," cites the previous year's casualties from firecrackers filled with dynamite: 4449 injured persons, of whom 406 died from lockjaw.

"Parents buy the new 'gocart' rather than the old-fashioned carriage, because it's 'cunning' and 'cheaper,'" relates Editor Bok, who brands the new contraption "exceedingly dangerous, exposing the child to the wind and curvature of the spine from sitting so long."

Entertaining: "Try a floral breakfast for a church benefit, served outdoors with each table representing a different flower. Menu: strawberries and cream, lamb chops, potato chips, rolls, cucumbers, omelet and creamed potatoes and coffee."

Beauty: "A strong perfume is one of the earmarks of vulgarity. Buy the most delicate sachet possible. The odor from it should be a mere suggestion of some flower to mingle with the sweet smell of freshly laundered linen."

"Spearmint chopped fine and spread between thin slices of buttered bread makes a popular summer sandwich."

New bride: "In having oatmeal for breakfast, I always cook it two hours the afternoon before, and another half hour in the morning."

Young mother: "When your baby is eighteen months old, he can begin to have a little meat. Give him milk and cereal gruels only for the first year."

"How long should a fifteen-year-old wear her dresses?" Answer: "To the tops of her shoes."

John (Caine Mutiny) Hodiak awaits further honors from the Journal's Biffy Page.

DI PIETRO

Doctor Spock and Mrs. Spock—his laughter indicates her presence.

FROM where we sit in our part of the Workshop here the ripple of voices floating past our open door is one of those accepted sounds like waves, or leaves, or traffic far down below on Fiftieth Street. You lose all awareness of it. Until suddenly a burst of laughter breaks the familiar fluctuating hum. Once we heard a laugh we'd heard a hundred times, but never outside our door before; so we looked, and it was Helen Hayes, just as we thought. Then a while back, a big and brand-new laugh went by, the kind of laugh that makes you wish you'd been the one to cause it—rich, warm, and with you. It was the laugh that millions of mothers would like to hear. And now when we hear it every once in a while, we know that Dr. Benjamin Spock is in town. We even think we can tell, by a fine inflection in the sound, if his wife is with him.

Mrs. Spock—and a large audience—laughed with the doctor the other evening in Philadelphia where he spoke for the Child Study Center, when the chairman, introducing him, quoted the remark of a small boy, unimpressed at news that Dr. Spock was coming to town: "What's so wonderful about him? Where would Spock be without babies?"

Seven out of ten articles left on buses are forgotten by women—and nine out of ten of the lost items are umbrellas.

We've just been bringing ourselves up to date on our How America Lives families for 1947, only to discover that in addition to being productive in the usual ways, they've recently brought out two books. Remember Paul and Louise Kenyon, of Annisquam, Massachusetts, and the Parkses, of Cavecreek, Arizona? Well, last year Paul authored Driftwood Captain (Houghton Mifflin), illustrated by Louise, and just this February Bill Parks had his first novel published, The Mestizo (Macmillan), with, naturally, an Arizona setting.

Though they'd each seen the Caine Mutiny Court Martial twice before, Mary Lea Page, Virginia McCone and Berenice Connor paid the play a farewell visit at its final performance here, and were in Lloyd Nolan's dressing room later saying good-by to this old school friend of Virginia's, when John Hodiak burst in wiping lipstick off his cheek. "The show must have been especially good tonight," he announced. "All the women backstage have been bussing me." It was Mrs. Page, we hear, who was quickest on the trigger. "Can anyone get in on that?" she asked. "Well, from an editor of the JOURNAL," said John, "it would be an honor."

Whenever we have a special situation to size up, we like to take the right experts along; so for the fifty-second annual American Toy Fair here recently we borrowed Nora O'Leary's Wendy and Stevie, and watched them take in their stride such novelties (to us) as toy-size versions of supermarkets, filling stations, make-believe TV cameras on wheels, and baby snorkels for underwater wear in the bathtub. For a moment while we were being buttonholed to hear something we didn't know about toy-selling seasons, we let our two little experts pursue their researches by themselves; then, catching up with them, discovered that Stevie had made up his mind the best thing in the fair was a high-speed back-yard roller coaster, and Wendy had made her choice a Mickey Mouse that could walk right along beside her. . . . And if you want to know something else new for future reference: people buy just as many toys in midsummer as they do at Christmastime.

Wendy and Stevie O'Leary at the toy fair: for her, a walking Mickey Mouse; for him, a back-yard roller coaster.

DI PIETRO

Studies show that articles constructed in the home by a husband and wife working together are invariably better than those produced by either one working alone.

In a recent informal conversation between President Eisenhower and a small group of women, Mrs. Gould was greatly impressed by several remarks of the President and thinks JOURNAL readers also will be interested. In the discussion the need of finding candidates of high caliber for office was often referred to. The President said that people sometimes ask how one can tell a good prospect for office, and he replied that it's not too difficult. The question is whether the candidate is the kind of person you would be glad to have your son or your daughter, your brother or your sister marry—not from a standpoint of worldly goods, but of character.

The President remarked that if one feels that way about a person, the chances are he or she would have the makings of a good candidate.

Mr. Eisenhower continued that unless good candidates of this caliber can be found, unless the good of all the people of all the country is considered, then any political party becomes nothing but a conspiracy to seize power. He was sure that the women present wanted no part in that sort of thing, nor did he.

By LESTER ATWELL

OFF THE CITY STREETS

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

THOUGH it was three o'clock on a Friday afternoon, the town's main shopping street lay white-hot and deserted in the glare of the July sun. Ma Baggley knew, of course, where most of the folks had gone: from the railroad station she could even hear the high-school band playing a practice rendition of Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here, and everything in Ma that loved life and crowds and novelty and excitement tugged her in that direction, but she steeled herself to resist. If they didn't think she was good enough in the first place, why then she certainly wasn't going to show up there now and give them all the satisfaction of crowing over her.

Ma screwed up her big homely face, wondering what to do. Though starting on her seventies, she was still strong and hearty, an unself-conscious woman, independent and free-wheeling. With her weekend shopping finished and the rest of the afternoon ahead of her, it seemed a shame—more, a defeat—just to drive back to the farm; the wind brought the tantalizing tune once more to her ears and it proved more than Ma could bear. Climbing into her rusting 1937 car that was nosed in at the curb—"For Sale" had been painted on the side in Ma's freehand for years and years and then half crossed out with two slaps of the paintbrush—she drove off for the station.

It was a small open country station, surrounded by rolling hills and farmlands, and it fluttered that afternoon with an expectant holiday air. Though the sun still shone hotly, it did so from one remaining patch of brilliant sky; everywhere else monumental storm clouds had gathered. The flags and bunting drooped for a moment, then blew out in a different kind of wind. There was the deep growling of thunder. Heads everywhere craned heavenward where the dark clouds with flaming silver edges threatened momentarily to eclipse the sun. It was at this point that the crossing gates came down, the long-expected whistle was heard and far down the tracks appeared the train that was bearing the one hundred and twenty underprivileged children from the tenements of New York. Through an arrangement between the mayor and the Sunshine Fund, they were to be the guests of the citizens of Turnersville for two weeks. Turnersville had never tried anything like it before, but if the initial two weeks proved satisfactory, further groups of children were to arrive at intervals for the remainder of the summer.

"Hi, Ma," the stationmaster said in passing. "Come to git you a couple of city kids?"

"Just dropped by to watch the fun," Ma replied. "Didn't have nuthin' else to do." CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

Ma was appalled by the group. Thin, rickety, tough, at once fierce, ragged and pitiable—they'd give you a fright.

Nobody wanted them.

They were tough,

mean, smart.

And they didn't like

the country.

"Maybe I should have fired him,

but you can't fire love —and that's what I was battling."

THE FALLEN ANGEL

By EVAN HUNTER

HE first came in one morning while I was making out the payroll for my small circus. We were pulling up stakes, ready to roll onto the next town, and I was bent over the books, writing down what I was paying everybody, and maybe that is why I did not hear the door open. When I looked up, this long, lanky fellow was standing there, and the door was shut tight behind him.

I looked at the door, and then I looked at him. He had a thin face with a narrow mustache, and black hair on his head that was sort of wild and sticking up in spots. He had brown eyes and a funny, twisted sort of mouth, with very white teeth which he was showing me at the moment.

"Mr. Mullins?" he asked.

"Yes," I said, because that is my name. Not Moon Mullins, which a lot of the fellows jokingly call me, but Anthony Mullins. And that's my real name with no attempt to sound showmanlike; a good name, you will admit. "I am busy."

"I won't take much time," he said very softly. He walked over to the desk with a smooth sideward step, as if he were on greased ball bearings.

"No matter how much time you will take," I said, "I am still busy."

"My name is Sam Angeli," he said.

"Pleased to meet you, Mr. Angeli," I told him. "My name is Anthony Mullins, and I am sorry you must be running along so quickly, but ——"

"I'm a trapeze artist," he said.

"We already have three trapeze artists," I informed him, "and they are all excellent performers, and the budget does not call for another of ——"

"They are not Sam Angeli," he said, smiling and touching his chest with his thumb.

"That is true," I answered. "They are, in alphabetical order, Sue Ellen Bradley, Arthur Farnings and Edward the Great."

"But not Sam Angeli," he repeated softly.

"No," I said. "It would be difficult to call them all Sam Angeli, since they are not even related, and even if they were related it is unlikely they would all have the same name, even if they were triplets, which they are not."

"I am Sam Angeli," he said.

"So I have gathered. But I already have three ——"

"I'm better," he said flatly.

"I have never met a trapeze artist who was not better than every other trapeze artist in the world," I said.

"In my case it happens to be true," he said.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 155

He offered glamour, fame — and even love.

But the price, for Sue Ellen, was much too high to pay.

They let us talk to the Russians

American students who traveled 6000 miles through the U.S.S.R. answered questions about lipsticks, movies, "workers starving in Times Square," lynchings, the new automobiles—and asked some questions of their own.

DI PIETRO

Gay Humphrey and Ted Curran at Idlewild International Airport.

Four young American students who cou both speak and understand the Russian langua wrote to Moscow for permission to visit t Soviet Union. The four—Gay Humphrey, T Curran, Jeri Lidsky and Francis Randall training for diplomatic service, were students the Russian Institute at Columbia Universit Five months later (and to their considerable su prise), they received visas. Within a week, wi the approval of the U.S. State Department, th were on their way by air. In Russia they travel 6000 miles, talking (usually with young people questioning, observing.

Miss Humphrey and Mr. Curran recent visited the JOURNAL offices to tell what th found. The comments and opinions are, course, strictly their own. The record of the conversation with JOURNAL editors Laura L Brookman and Peter Briggs follows.

QUESTION: Why do you think th Russians granted your visas?

GAY: We don't know yet why they let u in and there was never any way to find ou I think personally the reason is that the thought they would have to let som American students in if they were ever t send Soviet students here.

Q.: Did you find your Russian wa pretty good?

GAY: We could understand anythin they said and could get any of our idea across. It was amazing how well they un derstood us, because they have so little op portunity to speak with foreigners.

Q.: Did they ask you why you ha come?

TED: Oh, no. They knew immediatel that we were from the Russian Institut because one of the first questions from th young communists at the airport wa "How do you like the Institute in Ne York?"

GAY: We hadn't told them that. W never put that down. You know, we said o our applications we were just students a Columbia.

TED: Somebody had our dossiers some place.

GAY: We wanted to be tourists after w got there. The tourist agency asked u where we wanted to go. We told them ho much money we had to spend and wher we wanted to travel.

Q.: Do you know how much the tri cost, on an average, per day?

TED: Twenty-five dollars. The touris agency supplies you with a little bookle for nineteen dollars a day, which include four meals and your room and a certai amount of travel, not only in the city bu between cities. So you live on that, an then there are some extras beyond that like extra travel, theater tickets.

Q.: Did you live in hotels?

TED: First-class hotels.

GAY: Not really modern.

Q.: Now, were you permitted to go any place you wanted to go?

TED: Yes, with only one exception. We asked to go to the Baltic; but they refused And one day we started to take a short cu across Red Square and a militiaman politely stopped us. Nobody is permitted to jaywalk in the square.

GAY: We found we had much more freedom than any of our people, any of the diplomatic officials, who were more or less confined to the Moscow area; we were permitted to go into places where I don't suppose too many people were, as students and because we had cultural interests.

Q.: There was always someone with you as guide?

GAY: No.

Q.: You'd just go buy a railroad ticket and go out of town?

TED: Any citizen of the Soviet Union has a passport; in order to go from one city to another, you have to have it stamped by the police on your departure and on your arrival, and foreigners are subjected to the same regulations. But in our travel between cities and while we were in cities, we never had any guides with us.

Q.: Did you go to factories?

GAY: We didn't, because we knew that they would only take us to the best factories. It would be a guided tour. And they were really, I think, hurt that we didn't want to.

Q.: Did you get to see the Kremlin in Moscow?

GAY: Oh, yes. That was a guided tour too.

TED: When we visited Moscow University—it wasn't in session in the summertime—we were introduced to a group of typical students. They had been very carefully picked and were all well indoctrinated.

Q.: What makes you sure they were picked?

TED: Because of the conversation. For example, when we arrived at the university, we went to a table very much like this one—a nice round one—and we all sat down quietly and folded our hands while the president of the university got up and said it was very nice to have us there, and it reminded him of a speech from Lenin. Then he quoted Lenin on coexistence, and all the conversation was very much along that line.

There were several instances. When they showed us through the university, for example, we were going into their foreign-periodical room and there were magazines spread on the table.

Q.: Any American ones?

TED: Yes. There was one of those magazines with pictures of artists' models. So we said, "What a shame that you have one of our worst magazines here. Too bad you don't have our better ones." And so they all looked horrified, looked at one another, and we heard one of them saying to another one, in an undertone, "What did you put that out for? They say that that isn't one of their best ones."

Q.: Did they ask you questions?

TED: Sure. One of them came up to Jeri and said, "What's the name of your senator?" She was able to remember that. And he said, "What's the name of your congressman?" And she couldn't remember.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 147

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JERI LABER

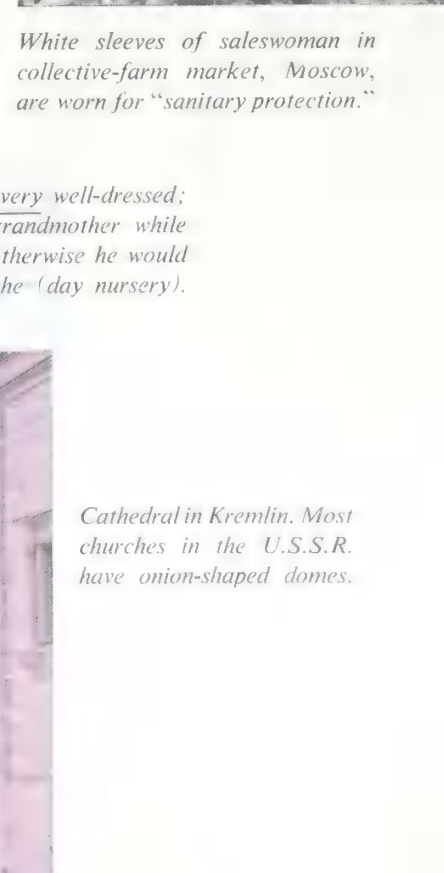
Girls wear uniforms—required by law—to school, cover them with pinafores on special occasions, as here on first day of school.

Fashionable Gorki Street, Moscow, near Central Telegraph and Post Office building, departure point for all news out of Russia.

These university students, loafing in Moscow street, seemed to disprove edict that one must work to eat.

"Foods" in display windows of shops are actually cardboard.

Father Sergi talking with Ted Curran in Zagorsk. The priest was shocked by American girls' use of lipstick.



Boy in tunic is very well-dressed; he stays with grandmother while parents work—otherwise he would go to state crèche (day nursery).

Domestic pigs run loose in Kazbegi. Girl in bus window wanted news of Deanna Durbin.

Cathedral in Kremlin. Most churches in the U.S.S.R. have onion-shaped domes.

White sleeves of saleswoman in collective-farm market, Moscow, are worn for "sanitary protection."

In restoring the living room, or keeping room, as they called it, three successive openings were uncovered before the full original nine-foot-wide fireplace was finally revealed, with its smoke shelf and its fine herringbone brick fireback. The bird on the mantel is an old plover decoy.

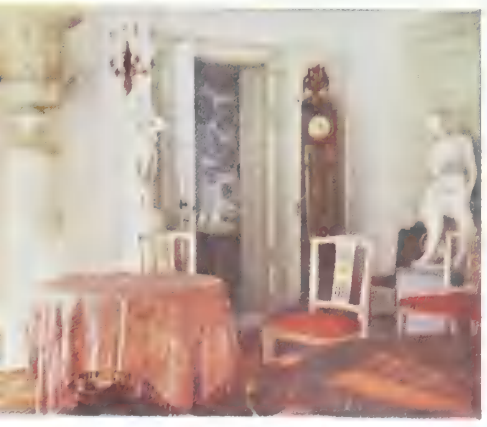
For two hundred and thirty-one years the deep corbeled overhang of the eaves has been shading the upstairs windows from the summer sun, and the salt air from the sea has been giving the shingles their incredible color.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER; OWNED AND RESTORED BY MRS. H. EMERSON TUTTLE

The furniture of the southwest bedroom is virtually all from the island, though one of the low-post carved bedsteads is old and the other is a copy. The Japanese prints were brought to Nantucket during the China-trade days. The chair on the left-hand side of the fireplace is a fine old brace-back fanback Windsor.

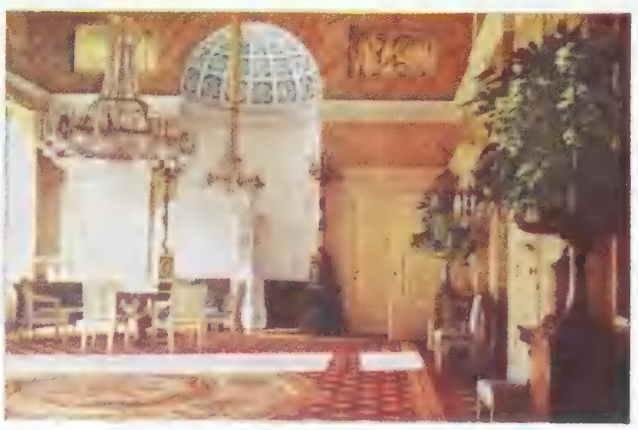
Major Josiah Coffin House ON NANTUCKET

By RICHARD PRATT, Architectural Editor of the Journal



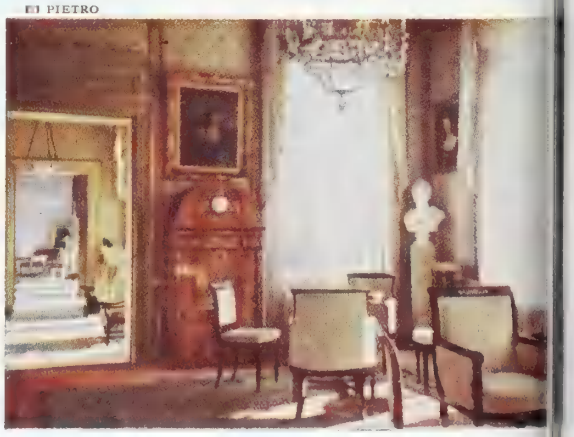
ALREADY in 1724, when Josiah Coffin built this beauty of a house, with its clustered brick chimney and corbeled overhanging eaves, the Coffins were truly old-timers on the island of Nantucket. Grandfather Tristram, as leader of the first little group of settlers in 1660, had put up the first Coffin homestead, over by Capaum pond. And in 1686, Josiah's father, Jethro, had built his house nearby on Sunset Hill, where it still stands, the oldest survival on the island, and a treat for antiquarians. Not a trace remains of Tristram's, except a marker. It may have been pried apart and sailed in sections across to the Massachusetts mainland. Who knows? That is what happened to several hundred old Nantucket houses in the early 1800's when the long-prosperous whaling industry dove into a deep depression. It was from over there that the lumber had always come for any building on Nantucket, where the moors were wonderfully picturesque pastureland but generally treeless. What may have saved Josiah's remarkable old house from sharing in this common fate—having its timbers and paneling returned to the mainland—is the fact that since 1724 it was being constantly lived in and cared for. And it goes without saying that the last occupant before the present owner bought it in 1925 was—a Coffin, Eunice Coffin Brooks. It had begun to be known as the Brooks House. As you can see, it is now being cared for with relish, esteem and understanding. With those aids, every good house, the older it grows, gets handsomer and handsomer.

Born to be



MEYBOOM

"They are hoydens, American hoydens!" Bernhard stormed as his daughters cavorted once again about Soestdijk. Irene, Pietie, Trix.



na and her family use fifteen of Soestdijk ce's eighty rooms, in the west wing. Central wing served for Wilhelmina; east wing is closed.

Pictures above and left show room where large receptions are held, such as Irene's christening. Many of tassels are missing from furniture—pulled off by baby Trix.

PIETRO

"When you forget something at Soestdijk," says Juli "you have to walk a mile for it." This is drawing room where Zussie waited for first interview.

Queen

By BETTY HOFFMAN and A. N. P.* (Netherlands News Agency)

NETHERLANDS INFORMATION SERVICE

Clutching doll and flowers, Pietie steps on Dutch soil for first time.

They had enjoyed life in America, where they were treated only as children – but now they had to learn to be princesses again.

IV ZUSSIE and the little princesses were spending the winter holidays at St. Adèle, Quebec, when Princess Juliana returned from England one cold wet day in January, 1945. From the discouraged slump of Juliana's shoulders as she walked up to the door of their hotel cottage, Zussie could guess the tragic news—there would be no further attempts to liberate Holland that winter.

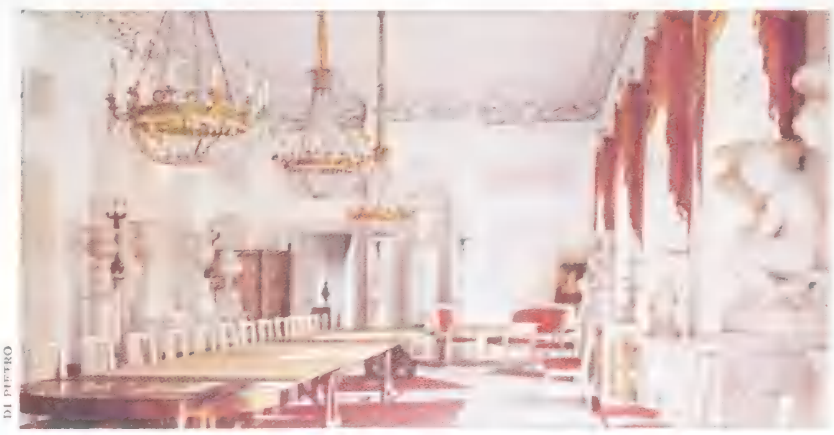
Three flaxen-haired, blue-eyed girls in identical white pajamas pounced upon their mother. Margriet was just learning to talk, but Trix was bubbling on at such a rate that the princess could hear no one else. Slender Irene danced up and down wordlessly, her limpid blue eyes full of laughing secrets.

"How wonderful they looked!" Juliana told Zussie later that day. "So fresh and pretty and happy! I thanked God when I saw them."

The princess told the little group of exiles that she did not see how the Dutch could manage to survive another winter of the occupation, their fifth since the war began.

She explained that when the Battle of Arnhem began, her mother appealed to every Dutch railway worker to go on strike. In this way, the Allies hoped to cripple German troop movements in Holland. "Not one train is running in Occupied Holland," Princess Juliana told the group in Canada proudly, "and forty thousand railway workers are in hiding. Of course the terrible problem is, how will they be fed this winter? There is no flour, no potatoes, no meat, no sugar, no fats. The Germans are boasting that our people will soon be eating the leaves off the trees. Bernhard says that some Dutch homes are stripped completely bare," she went on. "Everything of value has been traded for food, and even the cupboards on the walls and the floor boards have been chopped up for firewood."

Zussie noticed that Trix had stopped playing in one corner of the room and was listening with a concerned expression.



The next morning the nurse heard a great deal of thumping and scraping CONTINUED ON PAGE 57

*This series was written by Mrs. Hoffman, working in collaboration with A.N.P. (Netherlands News Agency) and with full co-operation from Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard. Mrs. Hoffman, a former JOURNAL editor, spent months in Holland (where she had free access to the palace), and in Belgium and Canada.

ROBERT CAPA-MAGNUM

Hollanders pausing by Soestdijk, in hope of glimpse of royal family. One group saw Pietie, two, who had absconded from the nursery, wandering about grounds in pink nightgown.

DI PIETRO

"Thank goodness, that's one less of those!" remarked Bernhard when a guest broke one of alabaster vases in Queen Emma's dining room. Carpet, furniture were gifts of women of the Netherlands.

NETHERLANDS PHOTO SERVICE

Accustomed to privacy in America, Trix resented Dutch interest in her every escapade. "Go away!" she told them. "Are we animals in a zoo?"

Born to be Queen

WILLEM VAN DE POLL WORLD-PRESS-FOTO

Juliana and children returned from Canada in July, 1945, were met by Bernhard out of uniform at last. Trix ringing ship's bell.

"They'll get used to it," said Bernhard. "After all, is it so bad to be stared at by people who love them—who would sacrifice their own lives for them if necessary? As long as the Dutch people want a royal family, our children's roles can never be changed. But something must be done about their manners."

PHOTO FROM EUROPEAN

"No one ever convinced an Orange," says Bernhard. "You can only get them to do what they want." Here Irene and Trix practice skiing in Switzerland.

WILLEM VAN DE POLL WORLD-PRESS-FOTO

Small princesses were required to take some of every dish, and to eat what they took. Pet Sealyham puppy, Kikki, got many a serving of foods Trix didn't like.

NETHERLANDS INFORMATION SERVICE

This photograph of Princess Juliana in satin ball gown and diamond tiara, taken soon after their marriage, is Bernhard's favorite.

ANPFO

Trix (right of bridal couple) and Irene (left) were bridesmaids for nurse Anneke Huidekoper

ANPFOTO

Pietie was a nuisance—always tagging along, declared Irene (right) and Trix, whom Pietie once bit on the thigh.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55 of heavy objects on the second floor. When she went to investigate, she found the two older princesses pushing their heavy blocks and tricycles out into the hall.

"Whatever are you doing?" asked Zussie in amazement. All that was left in their playroom was their dollhouse, stripped of its furnishings.

Trix wiped her perspiring forehead with the back of a chubby hand. Irene giggled and looked at the pile of discarded toys.

"We want to know what it's like to have nothing," Trix explained.

For a week the royal princesses played in a totally bare room. Later on they naïvely collected things for Holland—boxes of old discarded toys and marbles and candies, which they intended to carry across the ocean.

Trix was now seven, with exquisite coloring and springy blond hair which refused to stay tidily in a hair ribbon. Her impish eyes held the shine of a lively intelligence. With other children, she was a natural leader, Zussie found, full of ideas and daring. In some ways this was unfortunate for Irene, eighteen months younger, who was apt to follow Trix like a docile shadow.

Irene had the frail beauty of a fairy-story princess, Zussie thought, with her delicate fine-boned features and silky blond hair. Actually, she was charged with the same kind of nervous energy which drove her father. "What shall we do now?" she demanded a dozen times an hour, her slender little feet in perpetual motion. When she smiled, it was the smile of a pixy. She gave the impression of observing a great deal more than she let on.

Margriet—or Pietie, as they all called her—showed an independence which was frequently Zussie's despair. Just two, her hair was somewhat darker in coloring than her sisters', with an almost olive complexion and extraordinarily penetrating blue eyes which slanted downward at the ends. This gave her a rather haughty air of peering down her nose. Her straight, aristocratic, Hellenic profile reminded Zussie strongly of pictures of the youthful Princess Armgard.

Her two older sisters made no bones about calling Pietie a nuisance as she CONTINUED ON PAGE 94

BLACK STAR, NEW YORK

Dutch princesses went to Boeke School, a "progressive workshop." Trix was good in sculpture, Irene in dancing—both "poor" in arithmetic, spelling.

"Ah," he said, "I see dame Regan is now

delivering the bridal gown. The shroud."

The Bride's

Sister

"I'll never, never learn the secret," Ginger thought—but she knew it all the time.

By ANN CHIDESTER

ILLUSTRATED BY PAUL BURNS

ALMOST overnight, the Bennett house became a gypsy fair, an Arab market and a hive of activity in preparation for Caroline's wedding. The younger sister, Ginger, who was seventeen, could no longer find her place in the house—or in the family and the world itself. Who would now give her advice about clothes, how to make a soufflé and how to do a rumba? With whom would she exchange confidences and laugh in the darkness? Though she was to be the maid of honor at this wedding, she could not imagine herself in the mauve-and-white linen dress which for weeks had lain in a box in her closet, waiting. She and Caroline had planned for their weddings as long as she could remember, but then they planned to be married together, and now the magic, the wonder and the full meaning of the ceremony were somehow denied to her. She was an outsider. She had no place here or anywhere these days.

"Darling," her mother said, pressing her hand for forgiveness, "must you sit on the stairs like an orphan? Do something with yourself. Do!"

She was trying to finish an important paper on Jane Austen, who represented a calm, organized world far from this wedding scene. In three weeks she would graduate from high school, but no one else seemed to remember that. Besides, a graduation was small and childish compared with a wedding.

"But weddings are joyous," Caroline scolded her, coming up the stairs carrying a heap of clothes from the cleaners. "Put on a wedding face, Ginger. Have a wedding heart."

Ginger blinked at Caroline's flowery language. It sounded like a clubwoman's, she thought. Had Caroline already left all of them, even before the wedding? She followed her up to her own room, now Caroline's office and storeroom. Out there on the shaded lawn, Caroline's bridegroom tossed a tennis ball, having no more to do and nowhere to go until the wedding. He was a tall young man with doggish eyes that had begged Caroline to love him, marry him or he would surely die. But he was not Bolly Jackson, Ginger thought loyally. There was someone who, like herself, must feel he had no place

CONTINUED ON PAGE 88

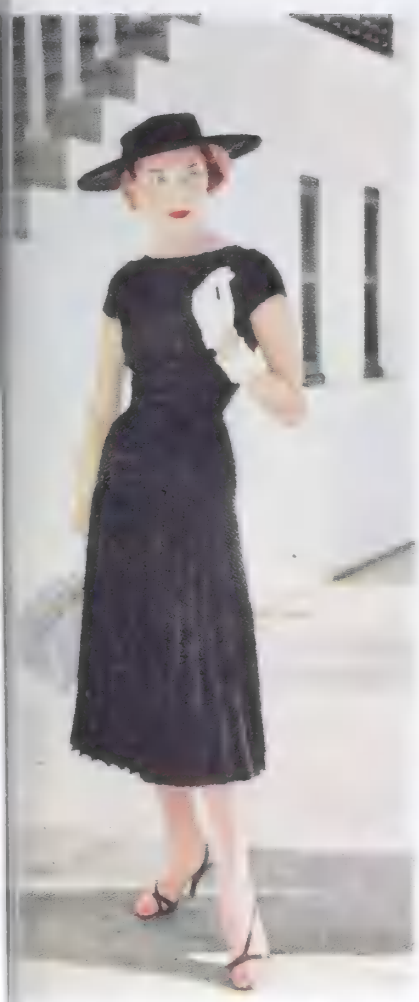
THE BEST TWO WEEKS OF THE YEAR

Summer suit for going places in beige silk pongee by William Bass. Shantung beret by Suzy, kidskin pumps by Jean Bandler. Chamois-yellow wool coat, coral cowhide bag by Roger Van S. Basic stockings are palest neutral pink. The luggage is lightweight plastic.

Cotton-mesh sheath with bateau neckline, by Lorraine Budny, with pearl-and-gold necklace by Frederic Mosell.

Destination—anywhere in the U.S.A. Vacation clothes—good travelers. A cotton-mesh sheath is the newest fashion to live in. "Permanently pleated" means your most glamorous costume is often your most practical. A beautiful white dress is just as useful as a black one, and the "golden touch" comes back in belt and sandals. Chalky blue can be as basic as beige and gray, and this year everybody will have something yellow. Travel-happy accessories: ropes of pearl and gold for day or night, a packable silk beret, a straw carryall big as a hamper, a white sweater, pumps with open insteps. • By Wilhela Cushman

Fashion Editor of the Journal



Something wool for cool days: pale gray flannel skirt by Robert P. Johns, with a white cashmere sweater-blouse.

Sheer white cotton, permanently pleated, by Greta Plattry — a dream dress for travel because it washes quickly, needs no ironing.

Pleats that stay: beautifully packable nylon chiffon dancing dress by Rappi, for any important summer night. Sandals by Margaret Clark.

ack silk Shantung overblouse dress by Larry Aldrich. Horsehair sailor, collapsible crown, by Lilly Dache.

aist casual in yellow checked gingham by R. Woelful. For mornings at a country inn, or to wear in a car.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

Striped cotton poplin for beach, by John Peck — a tunic over cotton shorts.

SO EASY TO MAKE

By NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

White cotton satin embroidered in all-over pattern in pink. The dress wraps to the back, tiny sleeves hug the shoulders. Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8470.*

AND SO PRETTY TO WEAR . . . any one of these dresses could be your favorite dress this summer. Best of all, six are VERY easy to make. One dress has only ONE pattern piece, another only TWO pattern pieces. We have chosen the most summery fabrics in the most flattering summer colors.

Pink gingham looks cool and feminine. We like the longer waistline, the two-tiered skirt (can also be single). 1½ yds. white edging for trim. Vogue E.T.M.  Design No. 8637.

Turquoise-and-white polka-dotted linen makes this pretty coat-and-dress combination. The lining matches the dress which is trimmed with a novelty flower edging (1½ yds.). Vogue V.E.T.M. Designs: coat, Design No. 8549; dress, Design No. 8331.*

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on page 96. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

© VOGUE

What could be prettier for a summer day than a white jacquard-piqué back-wrap dress? Easy to make has only ONE piece. Turquoise edging (3¼ yds.). Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8566.*

Border print, always a summer favorite, in a graduated daisy design comes in several colors. TWO-piece pattern. Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8571.*

This novelty fabric of unusual charm has strips of blue dotted swiss on white batiste matched to a dotted-swiss skirt. Blouse, Vogue E.T.M. Design No. 8590; skirt, Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8644.*

ROGER PRIGENT

Some of the prettiest cottons are the least expensive. This pink-and-red rose design costs only 59c a yard. Surplice line bodice. Pink-and-red cummerbund. Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8646.*

* "VERY EASY TO MAKE"

 "EASY TO MAKE"

"You just don't know what it means!" Sigrid repeated.

"To be married to a man and have him come home and tell you he wants somebody else— eight years younger than you— maybe better-looking ——"

UP HOME

Olaf now spent every night up home; but happy as she was,
Linnea could not forget Sigrid—high and dry, with no husband, no comfort, no nothing!

By ARDYTH KENNELLY

Linnea Ecklund knew that her husband, Olaf, tried to divide his time, money and love honestly between her and his other wife, Sigrid; but she knew, too, that on the nights Olaf spent down home with Sigrid, he closed the tailor shop reluctantly, while he hurried to his nights up home with Linnea and the children as to an oasis of warmth and happiness. As the younger wife, Linnea had faced losing Olaf when polygamy was outlawed in Utah Territory, but amnesty was granted established families; so she counted her blessings and tried not to mind Sigrid's insinuation that baby Myra could not win the Most Beautiful Baby in Salt Lake City contest, with the wonderful "gold" baby buggy as its prize. The children, Bertha, Gertrude, Stellie and Rudie, were all firm in their faith in Myra, and busy Linnea had scant time for resentment. She had given refuge to homeless old Mrs. Troon. Then, as midwife, she was part of the excitement when meek little Mrs. Lilygren had her baby right smack dab in the middle of the Temple dedication. And she looked on approvingly as Mrs. Lilygren found courage to rise from her bed and order her abusive husband from the house and from her life.

Myra did not win the contest, but Olaf, knowing the children would be desolate over loss of the gold baby buggy, arranged to make the storekeeper a suit of clothes in exchange for it. (The winner had providentially taken money instead of the carriage.) And the hullabaloo up home when he showed up with it was even more satisfying than he'd hoped. He did not tell Linnea at once that Sigrid, angered by his purchase, but even more by his going up home on his regular night down home, had told him never to come back—"The door will be locked, and you ain't got the key that will open it!"

III THE day before, which was Friday, Gertrude made arrangements with mamma to have all Saturday off for a very special purpose. Gertrude helped with the meals, with dishes, with taking care of Myra, and not once did she complain, for the agreement was that she would do all mamma wanted this day, in order to have the whole day tomorrow to herself. Saturday dawned, and right after breakfast Gertrude, in a clean starched apron and her good stockings (she had begged for these), set out in great excitement.

She slipped through the fence and in between the gooseberries and red currants and hastened around the house to Mrs. Lilygren's back door, upon which she knocked excitedly. This was the day which came only twice a year, when Mrs. Lilygren would wash her hair and dry it in the warm sun! Gertrude had put in her request many weeks ago, even before Mrs. Lilygren's baby was born or the temple dedicated, and now she was invited to attend the washing.

Mrs. Lilygren looked much as usual, her hair wound around her head and piled and pinned the same as ever. She wore her old brown skirt and a buff-and-white gingham basque, tightly buttoned up the front, but the top three were left undone and she had tucked the collar in under all around, showing an inch or two of collarbone and all her slender neck, giving her a wonderfully bare and wanton look, of which she herself must have been aware, for she often put her little hands up to her throat while waiting for the boiler of water on the stove to get hot, but then, recalling her naked arms—for she had rolled her sleeves above her elbows—she as often dropped them and thrust them into her apron pockets.

Nephi was working on Miss Deatherage's steps, and Ivy had left the house for the factory, so Mrs. Lilygren was all alone with the baby, Deddy, who cozily shook her feet in the air upon a blanket on the kitchen table.

A washtub stood on the floor close to the sink, and when the water on the stove was hot enough, Mrs. Lilygren let Gertrude help her lift it down to the floor beside it. From the cupboard she brought out a bowl of something that looked like glue but was strong yellow CONTINUED ON PAGE 72

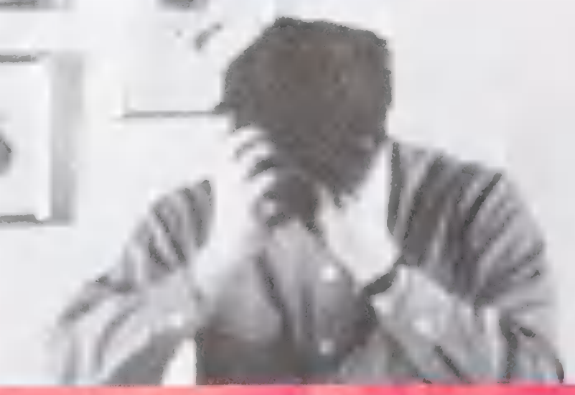
Novel Copyright, 1955, by Ardyth Kennelly Ullman.

Menu
Garden Antipasto
Chicken-and-Meat-Ball Casserole
Garlic Bread
Cream Jubilee
Cherry-and-Strawberry Sauce
Iced Coffee
(Planned for 6)
Coming

STUART-FOWLER

Out party

YOU know by this time, after reading my words of—shall I say wisdom, and thereby crib an expression older than I am and not any too applicable to me?—that I am one whose frivolity is like a sandwich. You get a couple of slices of serious advice, hints, knowledge or suggestions, well buttered with country learning. Churned in the old dasher churn of experience, this butter flavors the bread. In between the slices, there is generous savory or sweet of frivolity, so ingrained in my nature that it's all over the place, like popcorn when you lift the cover of the popper.



And now that "June is bustin' out all over," what better excuse for a party—an alfresco repast? We'll call it our Coming Out Party in anticipation of a long and balmy season for terrace dining.

In the spirit of the occasion we'll call our hors d'oeuvres

"Garden Antipasto." This platter of "antipasto" has such things as you see. Scallions, those premature onions, whose flavor gives only a foretaste of what they'll be at maturity. Cheese helps out with the celery, and you may stuff the latter with one or several of the former. That's up to you. Tomatoes, sliced; carrot twigs; radishes CONTINUED ON PAGE 106

By Ann Batchelder

Set a pretty table for your first dinner on the porch with flower-patterned silver and bright pottery. Fresh flowers tucked in with the fruit add to the gaiety of the occasion.

HE: "My wife is the only person who has ever loved me.
I wasn't smart enough to hold onto her love."

Can this marriage be saved?

JOHN LEWIS STAGE

Jealousy is a danger signal which, if ignored, leads to the wreckage of many a marriage. It is a staple item in the counseling at the American Institute of Family Relations, where more than a thousand consultations are given each month, and where more than 25,000 marriages have been put back into good running order during the past quarter of a century. The first principle in dealing with jealousy is to remove the causes; the second is "no appeasement." If a wife, for instance, continually makes unjustified concessions, she merely leads her husband to make still further demands and to believe that they are justified. Jealousy may be useful if it leads one of the partners to go to work energetically to strengthen the foundations of the marriage and build up its resources. The counselor in this case was Mrs. Maude Ross Ferguson. PAUL POPENOE, SC.D., Director.

Dr. Paul Popenoe

Laura tells her side:

"MARK and I came to our senses almost immediately," said beautiful thirty-seven-year-old Laura, who was Andy's wife. Her face was pale and she sat tensely on the edge of her chair. "We don't belong to the easy-morals crowd. From the beginning it was obvious our infatuation could lead nowhere. An affair was out of the question, divorce was unthinkable. Too many conflicting loyalties were involved. Andy and I have been married nearly twenty years and have three wonderful children, two sons and a daughter. Mark and his wife have four small girls.

"Moreover, Mark is Andy's oldest and practically his only friend. My husband shuts himself off from most people. He and Mark were boyhood companions. They were acquainted long before Andy's father lost his fortune. When Andy took the plunge several years ago and established his own construction business—to add to the complications, I'm sure my husband's business is doing poorly—Mark signed on as his lawyer.

"The last thing Mark and I wanted was to become overly interested in each other. For a short while it seemed we simply couldn't help ourselves. We went no farther than to exchange a few kisses, lunch together in out-of-the-way places—necessarily we arranged most of our meetings for the daytime—and talk about ourselves. Please don't think I am defending myself. I know I am largely to blame for my husband's terrible suffering and our messed-up marriage. Still and all, as I have begged Andy to believe, conversation played a larger part in my friendship with Mark than love-making. Conversation and compliments and just sheer fun. There has never been much fun in Andy.

"I used to think Andy hung the moon and pinned the stars in place. When we married I was a high-school senior and he was a college sophomore, headed toward a big career in architecture. Or so the two of us believed. In those days Andy's father was a top-flight architect. He gave us a house for a wedding present, larger than the place we live in now, and we arrived there in a new convertible. I felt like a princess. The moment we crossed the threshold I lost my regal standing, but Andy kept his. It developed I was expected to do all the fetching and carrying, all the changing and adjusting.

"To please Andy and avoid dissension—I loathe quarreling—I virtually let him think my thoughts for me. He told me how to wash the dishes and I washed his way. He told me how to mop the floor and I followed his directions. No, he didn't ever get down with the scrub brush. His role was strictly to instruct and supervise.

"I can vividly recall the first time we entertained. A week of worry and hard work preceded the important dinner. Andy bought me a French cookbook. He tested and tasted halfway through the book—I cooked him a new, elaborate dish each day—before he settled the menu. He then showed me how to set a table properly, how to arrange a centerpiece, how a meal should be served. When the big evening arrived, he hired a maid to come in and assist. He warned me not to spoil the effect by letting on to our guest that the maid was a part-time helper. In fact, Andy drilled me on every single remark I was supposed to make. The guest, one of Andy's professors, turned out to be quite nice. To me the evening was successful. Andy considered it a dismal flop. He complained I was too self-conscious!

"My husband has always been fiercely critical of me and everybody else. One of the strange and painful features of our wretched trouble now," Laura said, "is that Andy apparently can't find it in his heart to jump all over Mark. Instead he gets a bleak, stricken look on his face and says Mark is a better man than he is, which breaks my heart. Up to now, whenever I expressed a liking for somebody—male or female—Andy promptly discovered a million flaws in that person. To keep the peace I learned long ago to keep quiet about my enthusiasms and my affections. But often the process made me feel cramped and crowded, almost stifled, as though I had no life or identity of my own.

"By temperament and by training I am easy-going," Laura continued. "My father brought up both my sister Ruth and me—our mother died when we were very young—to believe women should be submissive and generous-hearted and shouldn't argue. Even during our honeymoon Andy pushed me to the limit. Possibly I might have rebelled—some of his demands have been really outrageous—but I got the habit of giving in very early in our marriage. And then before we celebrated our first anniversary Andy had a crushing blow. My father-in-law got mixed up CONTINUED ON PAGE 162

SHE: "I knew I was being disloyal. If anyone deserves to be punished, I am the one."

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

I'm still able to intimidate my wife mildly by calling a faucet washer a "gasket." But she's rapidly learning that though I may be able to name it, that's no proof I know how to fix it.

I look at the inscrutable faces of 1955's eighth-grade grads and wonder if any of 'em are scheming, as I was at that same tender age, to build a raft and float via our creek and two rivers to the Gulf of Mexico and become a shrimp fisherman. I never made it; became a failure instead.

When we're on the verge of a vacation trip I make lists of things that must be done ere departure. I'm baffled how, when I find 'em undone after the trip, I remain virtually unscathed.

We applauded, at the state university's graduation ceremony, extra loud for the 1955 grads who're embarking on a delayed honeymoon with a diploma and baby and new job.

On a crowded elevator in a big department store I'm elbowed into the opinion that it needs a hostess worse than any passenger plane.

I've tried stubbornly in my year-round Santa role to make a sort of minor Christmas of the twenty-fifth of each month, by giving my Dream Girl a small bizarre gift. She insists mistakenly it's only because I've some skulduggery on my conscience.

So far this spring we've eaten eight or nine meals outdoors. We'd eat outdoors oftener if our town's government weren't top-heavy with indoor men (antispray types) who like to make pets of the mosquitoes.

When we visited Nassau this spring we noticed (even more than the pictures of Princess Margaret in every shopwindow) how dignified and charming is the native colored population. Their blend of independence and courtesy reminds me of the polite Hawaiians.

"My advice to the school execs," says Betty Comfort, counting thirteen kids with fourteen bikes screaming in her driveway, "is to ask for new school buildings and higher wages for teachers in the summertime, when we parents have the brats on our hands."

After a long automobile honeymoon at the mercy of the random cooking typical along American highways, even an inexperienced bride's early attempts may taste delicious to her zany newlywed.

I've challenged my beauteous executive V.P. to draw up any list of "things to take" on our vacation which will save me from forgetting at least five items which are utterly indispensable.

Isn't it disgraceful how we parents still try to tyrannize over our brave-new-world young? Some of us even dare to ask 'em what time they got in last night!

My crusade among our alumni to buy a Cadillac for a professor ("Cads for Profs") was a mixed success. The medic grads bought a car for a medical-school prof, just as if he were a football coach; but the l.a., engineering and law grads said they couldn't afford it.

When we're traveling I'm jockeyed into buying too many fancy expensive meals at "the cutest places." This stirs up my poor-boy complex, and I long to buy five cents' worth of cheese and a nickel's worth of crackers and eat 'em under a tree as I did when I was on a surveying crew.

"It's sickening, the way he puts on that devoted-father act the minute some bird watchers show up!"

Our oracle at the big round luncheon table argues that we husbands shouldn't pay too much attention when our wives interrupt us as we try to tell a story. "Just go right on," he advises, "and tell it just as if they were listening."

I got back some shirts from a laundry wrapped inside the pertinent question, "Have you kissed your wife today?" Not bad; but they ought to ask, "Have you kissed her tenderly?"

Our youngest (suddenly aware of girls) took off thirty-five pounds in about two months while our doctor cheered. But he made a brilliant study of diets and managed to eat more delicacies and tasty dishes than I do when I'm gaining.

"What we've got to decide," said the oracle of the bridge table, "is whether to spend our money on more schools for kids or to build more old people's homes for ourselves."

My wife accuses me of ordering ham and eggs for dinner in a restaurant occasionally "just to be stubborn." Shucks, I only do it because often I prefer it to anything else on the menu. Besides, it often saves me $2 or $3 on a dinner check.

We plan our vacation trips right up to the hilt; I'm a great planner and my Dream Lady is a superplanner. Luckily, we usually come home with fully 60 per cent of our planned activity unaccomplished, including visits to kinfolk only 400 miles off our route.

Our neighborhood skeptic (the man next door) has trimmed his seven-word philosophy of life down to only five words: "No solution. Seek it lovingly." He claims it cheers him no end.

I suspect half the bachelors and spinsters and bachelor girls in town'd like to get married if somebody matched 'em up and gave 'em a push. I marvel that in our overorganized life there's no subcommittee for matchmaking.

When our fifteen-year-old was dieting so scientifically I calculate we spent more money for his daily mushrooms (low calorie) than I did each day to eat on when I left home on my first faraway job.

My Princess of Sheer Delight clings to a few rules of fairness. . . . Since I let her keep her exotic new sea shells on the mantel four months she hasn't complained if I occasionally exhibit there some of the new 6″ x 6″ ceramic tiles from my collection.

MEDITATIONS IN THE DOGHOUSE:

. . . When Junior begins to accept good-humoredly some of my foibles against which he once rebelled;

. . . Or our daughter confides tardily to her mother that the Old Man isn't as intolerably strict as she once suspected;

. . . And our youngest mutters something scathing about people who drink too much;

. . . If my wife tells me sternly that I've worked hard enough today and must relax now . . .

Then I wink my farther eye and congratulate myself on fooling half the world half the time.

"The millions of readers of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL are directly responsible." In 1906 Washington gave credit to this magazine and its readers for passage of two important Federal bills—the pure-food bill and the bill for preservation of Niagara Falls. . . . Said the editor, "A more popular bridal pair than Mr. Henry Hutt has pictured is likely to be hard to find." Mr. Hutt was a successful illustrator at age 14.

LINE A DAY

By Ann Batchelder

1 There'll be days this summer when you'll be convinced it's too hot to cook. There always are. So when one comes along, try this: Drain off all the oil from 2 cans tuna, and turn out into a skillet. Sauté tuna for 3–4 minutes, sprinkle with ¾ teaspoon garlic salt and 1½ teaspoons paprika, then add 1½ cups thick commercial sour cream. Heat gently just till it is warmed through. Serve over rice, with a salad.

2 Remember those ready-to-bake packaged cinnamon rolls I told you about—or didn't I? Anyway, you're missing a breakfast treat if you haven't met up with them. Put a spoonful of apricot jam on each one before baking and you've really got a triumph.

3 Better be prepared for some parties when your beauty queen gets home from college. A different punch will be needed. Dissolve 1 package cherry-flavored soft-drink powder in 3¼ quarts water. Stir in 1 cup sugar, one 6-ounce can frozen lemonade concentrate, thawed, one 6-ounce can frozen orange juice, thawed, and one 20-ounce can pineapple juice. Chill. Read on.

4 Just before serving, whip or mash 4 bananas and beat into the mixture. Add 1 large bottle (28 ounces) ginger ale. Serve with slices of banana, orange or strawberries. Makes 1½ gallons.

5 When the children troop in for sandwiches at noon, try this one sometime. Spread toast slices with canned applesauce. Top with slices of American cheese. Cut strips of bacon in half and arrange over cheese. Grill.

6 Orange sticks are easy-to-produce teatime bites. Better make plenty. They go like crazy. Make rich biscuit dough, using orange juice for liquid. Add a few drops of orange extract. Roll thin, cut into narrow strips, sprinkle with a good liberal sprinkle of grated orange peel and sugar. Bake.

7 Pretty as a June day is this garnish for a fruit cocktail, fruit salad or a dish of ice cream. Dip dark sweet cherries into lightly beaten egg white, then roll in sugar. Allow to chill and dry for half an hour. I almost forgot—leave the stems on the cherries.

8 Mashed potatoes, once known as mashed and wearing no glamour, are now called "whipped" and wearing as many trimmings as a country belle in an Easter parade. It is well, whatever you do, to add, with the other seasonings, a little basil and a very small pinch of rosemary. These two are especially effective in stuffed baked potatoes. Or you might try this: add a light seasoning of one teaspoon of tarragon wine vinegar, beaten in when the hot milk has all been used.

9 Shall I remind you that pickles go in—as well as with—many foods? In a meat loaf, for instance, diced pickles add a nice zest. And in place of the customary slice of lemon, try floating a paper-thin slice of dill pickle on black-bean soup. You'll like.

10 One more way with condensed tomato soup. Add milk instead of water and enough grated sharp cheese to flavor.

11 A short while ago at a party, I ate some lovely things I hadn't seen before. Such as minced lobster with mushrooms in Russian dressing for stuffing inside celery stalks and Belgian endive.

12 And here's another thought for celery, as found on an hors-d'oeuvre tray: cut stalks into short, bite-size pieces, and fill with avocado, which has been mashed, seasoned to taste with salt, and tiny pickled onions which have been chopped fine.

13 If you haven't eaten baked ham spread with a certain wonderful mustard, over which a generous layer of orange marmalade is imposed before baking, I'll guarantee you will, many times, once you have tried it.

14 Buy a two-roe can of shad roe. Cut it into little squares. Season with salt, pepper and lemon juice. Dip in crumbs, egg beaten with a tablespoon of milk, then again in cracker crumbs, and fry in deep hot fat. Drain. Serve hot as an hors d'oeuvre, stuck on fancy toothpicks.

15 Here is a baked rice favorite of mine for buffet suppers when I'm serving a ham—and I often am these summer weekends. Cook 1½ cups raw rice. Sauté 1 green pepper and 1 onion (both chopped) in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add to rice with 1 cup chopped parsley, 2 cups milk, 3 beaten eggs, 2 cups grated sharp American cheese, 1½ teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Mix and bake in a casserole in moderate oven, 350° F., 1 hour. You can get it ready for the oven in the A.M.—bake it at night.

16 Chapter 1: A delicate and desirable main dish for the luncheon planned for the Wednesday bridge foursome, or for your mother-in-law and her best friend, is prepared this way: Blanch and take off the skin from ¼ cup almonds and chop them. Brown in butter—about ¼ cup—using first just enough for browning, adding the rest last. When almonds are golden brown, take the frying pan from the heat. Add ¼ cup lemon juice, then the rest of the butter. Keep it hot over hot water.

17 Chapter 2: Having made the sauce, poach 4 large fillets of sole in milk. Drain well and arrange on a hot platter. Pour the sauce over the fillets. Serve with a tossed green salad and little orange baking-powder biscuits.

18 Zucchini fans, come closer. Shred, on your coarse grater, 2 pounds zucchini and cook in a little salted water 5 minutes. Drain very thoroughly. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine and 1 cup thick commercial sour cream. Warm gently. Season it with salt and paprika.

19 Of course you know that this is his day—Father's Day. I'd give him a steak, thick and beautiful, broiled as rare as he likes, and spread with parsley butter and a squeeze of lemon juice. It does something for a steak. Apple pie or chocolate layer cake for dessert. With cake and pastry mixes, what could be easier? Dad will cheer, and so will you.

20 From the "Share a News Story" file: For those whose taste goes to carrots, maybe you haven't run across those baby carrots "unbelievably tiny and of an indescribably wonderful flavor." This is the description of an indisputably experienced chef and gourmet.

21 Believe it or not, in a can not noticeably large you may find from 110 to 125 perfect, perfectly packed little carrots. For the hors-d'oeuvre tray, marinated in French dressing, glazed as a garnish, or added to a salad, can you imagine a more exotic choice? When you find them, put a few cans on that emergency shelf and spring some surprises. I wanted you to know. If your market does not stock, we'll tell you where to order.

22 Canto I: Came across a best-yet filling for little tart shells. Place ¼ pound butter or margarine in top of double boiler and let melt. Add ⅔ cup sugar and mix well. Then add 6 well-beaten eggs and mix well.

23 Canto II: Stir in one 6-ounce can frozen concentrate for lemonade and cook the mixture over hot water, stirring constantly, until it thickens and is smooth and glossy. Good cake filling too. Keeps for weeks in the refrigerator.

24 What better way to start a dinner in June than with a chilled soup? This one is perfection, but has no name. You name it. Cook slowly about 10 minutes ⅓ cup sliced green onions or scallions in ¼ cup butter or margarine. Add 2¾ cups condensed chicken consommé and 2 cups drained cooked large dry Limas. Boil 10 minutes. Cool slightly. Force through a strainer or blend in an electric blender. Stir in 1 cup light cream and ¼ teaspoon salt. Chill. Sprinkle each serving with chopped chives.

25 Fresh pears will be along soon. Peel, halve and core as many as you need and poach till tender in a sirup of sugar and water, flavored with vanilla. Chill. Serve topped with ice cream and, if you like, caramel sauce.

26 If you've been reading along on a hunt for something different for the appetizer tray, stop right here. Cream two 3-ounce packages cream cheese until light. Add 1 tablespoon cream, 1 tablespoon anchovy paste, ½ teaspoon paprika and 1 teaspoon grated onion and continue creaming until blended. Stir in one 3-ounce can chopped mushrooms, drained. Chill. A dip for chips.

27 From an old cookbook: "When pickling time is here, better keep the children out of the kitchen. They will filch cucumbers and green tomatoes, not remembering that that way stomach-ache and even colic lie." Let's all keep out and play safe.

28 New version—water chestnuts wrapped with bacon and broiled are fine party starters, but a Minneapolis friend said to marinate the water chestnuts first in a half-and-half mixture of soy sauce and maple sirup. I couldn't believe my ears until I tried them. Superb!

29 Another tempting titbit: Poppy-seed snacks. Cut slices of bread into 2″ rounds. Brush evenly with melted butter or margarine and sprinkle with poppy seeds (about ¼ teaspoon on each round). Broil for 2 or 3 minutes until lightly toasted. Serve hot.

30 Well, the month of brides and roses dawns soft and sunny. June has much to answer for, but we'll hope for the best. Ever your ANNIE.

Everybody's making exciting new soups from two soups—it's the newest in soup cookery! Here's one great favorite: 1 can of Green Pea plus 1 can of Vegetable Soup, combined with 1½ cans of water . . . sparked with a dash of curry. It's a satisfying, full-bodied soup—15 delicious garden vegetables teamed a new way with a smooth purée of green pea.

Surprise and delight your family—

new soups from two soups

Campbell's Soup Mates

Lots of folks are talking about this one: 1 can of Tomato plus one can of Cream of Mushroom blended with 1½ cans of milk. It's the famous Campbell Tomato flavor, accented with just-right seasoning and creamery butter . . . complemented by the sweet goodness of tender mushrooms in cream! Mmmm, good!

Good cooks are passing this recipe along: 1 can of Scotch Broth plus one can of Vegetable Soup—made with 1½ cans of water. It's a hearty soup, a thick soup. It's a meal in a bowl—tender bites of mutton, 15 kinds of vegetables in a savory mutton broth. Serve it when the family's worked up a special appetite! They'll enjoy every spoonful.

For everybody who likes chicken, here is a super Soup Mate: 1 can of Cream of Chicken plus 1 can of Cream of Mushroom, combined with 1½ cans of water. Mmmm . . . the wonderful flavor of these two fine soups combined — tender pieces of mushroom and chicken, in a double creamy soup. It's a delicious blending you'll like!

a NEW KIND of deodorant!

ban lotion deodorant rolls on

More effective than creams!
Easier to apply than sprays!*

This is BAN—the new lotion deodorant that rolls on with a revolving marble built into the bottle top. BAN automatically applies just the right amount of pleasing lotion to check perspiration moisture . . . stop odor for a full 24 hours. Get new BAN today —98¢ wherever fine toiletries are sold.

- no drip—no waste—no messy fingers
- safe for normal skin
- protects round the clock
- keeps underarms dry for hours
- can be applied even after shaving
- won't stain clothes

Deodorant
Anti-perspirant
Pleasing lotion
—all rolled into one —that's ban

A Product of Bristol-Myers

*In a recent survey against the leading cream and spray deodorants, 7 out of 10 prefer BAN.

UP HOME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 65

soap melted, and set that down on the floor too. Then she pumped a big tin pail full of cold water and added that to the assortment on the floor. Lastly, she brought out a pair of clean and neatly folded but very thin and worn towels, and took a tin saucepan with a long handle down off a nail behind the pantry door.

Gertrude watched her with bright eyes.

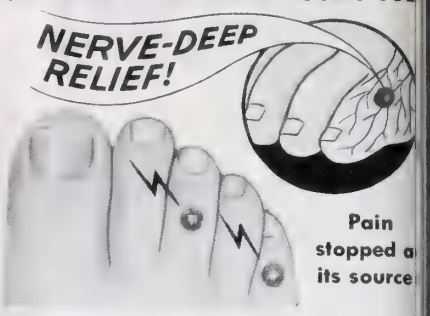
"You could maybe pour over," Mrs. Lilygren said in her timid way. "Dip the hot water up in the pan and pour it over when it comes time for rensing."

"Oh, my," Gertrude said happily. "I'd love to. I won't get it down your neck or nothing." She hardly knew whether to look or look away, for at this moment Mrs. Lilygren began to take the big bone hairpins out of her hair and it seemed the most private and intimate business in the world.

First it began to come undone from the top, shook and sprung loose, while the hairpins were placed neatly one by one on the drainboard, then it began to come undone and spring and shake loose from the right side, and then spring and shake loose from the left side and then from the back—the thick stream of hair flowing and rippling down endlessly.

"I—never—knew—it—would—be—like—that," Gertrude breathed softly. Like a sightseer viewing Niagara for the first time, she stood spellbound watching this lady's cataracts and falls. "Why—it—hangs—nearly—to—your—shoetops."

Mrs. Lilygren arched an arm over her head and gathered all her rick of hair from the shoulder and neck and dragged it over one side where it hung like a matador's cape. Her small plain face was lit up brightly with what was a stranger to it—pride. She did not look pale now, but pink as a girl, and her eyes glistened. Like a girl, she dropped to her knees before the empty washtub, bent her head and lifted and arranged her hair within it, filling it, and reached for the tin saucepan. Deftly she filled it with water from the boiler at her side, poured it over, while Gertrude stared with awe-struck eyes.



THE sun came throu'h the peach trees just here and here Mrs. Lilygren, with Gertrude beside her, sat on the back steps, with her lap full of drying hair, while Gertrude waved a strand of it like a fan.

"—— so they are going to be here for supper Monday night," Mrs. Lilygren was saying, "and Monday night will be the first meal I cook for them."

She was talking of her boarders-to-be, the two young men who sang in the Swedish Choir, Mr. Dahlquist and Mr. Ankerstrand. It is natural to mention frequently what we anticipate with fear and dread—as a visit to the dentist for the removal of an abscessed tooth or a call to borrow money from an old skinflint or a first appearance as secretary and treasurer—and Mrs. Lilygren, who feared these boarders and the first meal she would put before them more than all these put together, had scarcely had them out of her mind the past week. Over and over she saw herself greeting them, her heart pounding like a trip hammer. Over and over she respectfully showed them the room they were to share (Ivy's, for now Ivy would sleep with her and the baby), hoping they would not mind that such a little strip of carpet adorned the scrubbed floor or see how the mattress sagged under her only bedspread or note the many mendings in the spotless curtains. Her best things she had placed in this room, conscientiously, as she pointed out to Gertrude, who was allowed to take a peek at it, to "make it worth the money," about which she seemed to feel very guilty though it was but a small sum. When her boarders had been in and out of their room, she would respectfully beg them to sit in the parlor. Then she would rush to the kitchen to stir, taste and begin to dish up. Over and over she saw this scene happen from beginning to end, felt how her heart would stop dead if she or Ivy forgot something on the table—perhaps the water, or the salt shaker, or the dish of jam, or the bread-and-butter pickles.

"Are they old?" Gertrude inquired.

Corns
CALLOUSES—BUNIONS—SORE TOE

Pain stopped a its source

1. Ends pain in SECONDS . . .
2. Removes Corns, Callouses one of the FASTEST ways known to medical science . . .
3. Stops Corns, Callouses BEFORE they can develop . . .
4. Prevents Sore Toes, Blisters . . .
5. Eases New or Tight Shoes

No wonder soothing, cushioning, protective Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are the world's largest-selling foot reliefs—for no other method does all these things for you! Get a box today. At Drug, Shoe, Dept., 5-10¢ Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops. For FREE sample (mention size wanted), write Dr. Scholl's Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

FEET HURT, BURN?
Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm quickly relieves foo discomfort caused by exertion. Very soothing and refreshing. Costs but a trifle. Try it!
Dr Scholl's FOOT BALM

SALAD BOWL SE

THIS versatile, attractive set of durable melam bowls is a graceful companion to your loveliest din ware. Large bowl 11 inches in diameter. 3½ inches de perfect for all salads, food, and punch servings. In mi colors each set is attractively packed, and guaranteed one year against breaking, cracking, or chipping in mal use.

This wonderful set can be yours for only three 2-y Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions at $6 each, or 2-year Saturday Evening Post subscriptions at $10 e or four 1-year Holiday subscriptions at $5 each.

All subscriptions must be sold outside your own h at the full advertised prices. Both new and renew count, but not your personal or personal gift subscripti

Write subscribers' names and addresses on plain pa and mail with your own name and address and full re tance. Offer good in Continental U. S. only, until Sept ber 30, 1955. Sorry, no salad bowl sets may be sold for c

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
922 Independence Square Phila. 5, Pen

KILLS ROACHES!
SILVERFISH · WATERBUGS · CRICKETS
Kill them the clean, easy way. No mess or odor. Place Hives where insects can find them. They eat bait in protective tube and die. Money back guarantee. Thrifty. Ask for Gator. If store has none, send $1 for Hives. DeSoto Chemical Co., Dept. L-6, Arcadia, Florida.

Gator ROACH HIVES

"Oh, my, no," Mrs. Lilygren said. "They're not old. They're only boys about twenty-one or twenty-two."

Gertrude took another strand of hair and swung it like a tassel round and round. "Brigham Young," she said. "I wonder which one of his wives had the prettiest hair? Did any of them have hair as long as yours?" She had long been interested in the domestic life of this most famous man.

Mrs. Lilygren moved a little forward into the sun. "I don't think so," she said, "but then of course I never seen any of them with their hair down."

"You seen them, though, didn't you?"

"Everybody did," Mrs. Lilygren said, "but I had a better chance than most. When I was about fifteen mamma used to help out with the sewing in the Bee Hive House and the Lion House, and she'd take me along to run in pastings and one thing and another."

"What did they look like?" Gertrude asked.

"Well, by that time it seemed like several was getting to be quite old ladies, with their hair white or turning white. But mamma and my aunt remembered them from earlier days. I remember once her and my aunt got talking about whether Brigham had more of a inclination for blondes or for brunettes."

Gertrude clasped her hands around her knees and asked with great interest, "Which did he have?"

"They started counting up," Mrs. Lilygren said. "There was Lucy Decker—she was a brunette, with brown eyes; and Clara Decker, that looked just about like her; and Lucy Bigelow—she was a brunette, only she had blue eyes, which I always think looks very pretty, dark hair and blue eyes. And Martha Bowker. Then Eliza Burgess and Susan Snively—she was the homeliest of all—which made six ——"

"Brunettes," Gertrude said, counting on her fingers.

"On the other hand, Harriet Cook had blond hair," Mrs. Lilygren went on, "and so did Twiss ——"

"That makes two," Gertrude said, beginning to count again. "Twiss is a funny name."

"Ain't it?" Mrs. Lilygren said. "Then there was Ellen Rockwood—she was a blonde—and Margaret Alley, and Margaret Pierce, and so was Emmeline Free. She was the prettiest of all."

"—— six ——"

"And Zina Huntington, and Amelia Folsom."

"—— seven—eight." Gertrude hung onto the middle finger of her right hand where she had stopped short.

Mrs. Lilygren wrinkled her forehead. "That was all the blondes," she said, "that I know of." She considered. "Now, Mary Ann Angell and Harriet Barney—I'm sure mamma said they had brown hair. Let's see, how many brunettes did we count up?"

"Six."

"There was several more," she said. "Jemima Angell, for one."

"Seven," Gertrude said, touching the index finger of her right hand.

"Mrs. Hamptom—I can't for the life of me think of her first name—and Eliza R. Snow. She was the one that wrote so pretty—hymns, O Ye Mountains High, and different verses and like that ——"

"Nine."

"—— and the one that always set on Brigham Young's right hand at mealtimes, with Twiss always on the left. Then, let me see. There was Amelia Partridge—she had beautiful black hair. I forgot Mrs. August Cobb ——"

"Eleven."

"—— and Clara Chase. She was a nice woman."

"Black hair?"

Mrs. Lilygren nodded.

"Well, that makes twelve, then."

Mrs. Lilygren stood up and let her hair ripple down while Gertrude admired it. "I may of forgot some—or added on one or two—but I'm just going according to mamma, and my aunt," she said.

"Eight blondes," Gertrude recited. "Two with brown hair. And twelve brunettes."

"That's all I can think of. . . . My, there used to seem like an awful lot, going in and out through the rooms. A good many of them was turning by that time—their hair, I mean, gray—but of course Amelia wasn't. She was young—she was only thirty-nine when Brigham died, which would only make her fifty-six now—and Emmeline Free was supposed to be still quite beautiful, though nobody ever seemed to catch more than a glimpse of her after ——" Mrs. Lilygren paused in something like embarrassment.

"After what?"

"Well, she used to be the favorite, you know."

"Whose favorite?" Gertrude asked.

"Why, Brother Brigham's, you know. Before Amelia Folsom came into the picture. My, she did dress, Amelia. Lace and velvet and those hats of hers, and sprinkled on scent. And dressy shoes," Mrs. Lilygren remembered. "Emmeline Free hardly ever stuck her head out the door after that. Of course he bought her that nice house on upper Main Street, and she moved there with her kids—but he built the Gardo House for Amelia, although she never lived in it. Emmeline died of a broken heart," she added, "or so the story went."

"She was one of the blondes?"

"They both was, her and Amelia."

"Let's see," Gertrude said, tallying up again. "There was eight blondes, and twelve brunettes, but we might just as well put the two that had brown hair in with them, so that makes eight to fourteen. Brigham Young liked brunettes the best, it looks like." Giving her own light locks a toss, she felt a twinge of jealousy.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 75

"No, it isn't CANCER . . ."

PEOPLE are beginning to realize that most fear of cancer is needless worry. For example, the American Cancer Society reports that at a typical cancer clinic, where large numbers of people are examined, only about one out of every 125 is found to have cancer.

Because of medical advances, the spirit of hopelessness that once surrounded cancer has been replaced by rising optimism. This is based in part on the increased number of lives now being saved.

In several types of cancer, cure rates are encouraging. Especially striking has been recent progress against certain cancers in women. A high proportion of cases is now successfully treated and the death rate from these cancers has been reduced nearly 30 percent since 1940.

What are the developments that hold great promise for the future? For one thing, there are the advances achieved in both diagnosis and treatment. Cancer of certain internal organs, for example, can now be detected by searching under the microscope for cancerous cells that have been cast off into body fluids. This yields clues to so-called "silent cancers," or those which have not caused noticeable symptoms. It is in this stage that the disease is often curable.

The great hope of cancer research today is that drugs will be found to cure both localized and widely spread cancer. Already there are chemicals which can slow down . . . and even stop for awhile . . . the growth of some types of cancer cells.

While the sweeping search of science goes on against cancer, everyone . . . especially those who are middle-aged and older

Cancer's Seven Warning Signals

1. Any sore that does not heal.
2. A lump or thickening in the breast or elsewhere.
3. Unusual bleeding or discharge.
4. Any change in a wart or mole.
5. Persistent indigestion or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Persistent hoarseness or cough.
7. Any change in normal bowel habits.

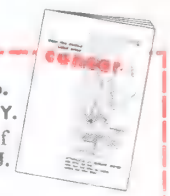
. . . should take these two wise safeguards against this disease:

1. Learn the seven danger signals listed here that give early warning of the possibility of cancer. Remember, however, that these signals are not sure signs of the disease.



2. Have periodic medical examinations. These are especially important because nearly 50 percent of all cancers occur in body sites that can be readily examined by the doctor. Should any condition be discovered that is either cancerous or suspected to be pre-cancerous, do not waste time trying methods of treatment not recommended by your physician. Only surgery and radiation offer hope of cure or control.

Cancer still ranks second to heart disease as a cause of death—but cancer is not hopeless. Even with today's weapons, we are . . . according to the American Cancer Society . . . saving the lives of 70,000 people each year from cancer.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

1 Madison Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.
Please mail me a free copy of your booklet on Cancer, 655J.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____

Pepsi-Cola refreshes without filling

WON'T she look wonderful coming down the aisle? For the old saying that all brides are beautiful is truer than ever today.

That's because the modern girl knows the importance of taking good care of her figure. Her sensible modern taste in diet is for the lighter, less filling foods and beverages.

And that is the modern taste with which Pepsi-Cola has steadily kept pace. Today's Pepsi, never heavy, never too sweet, reduced in calories, refreshes without filling.

No wonder Pepsi-Cola is more popular than ever. It is the modern, the light refreshment. Have a Pepsi.

PEPSI-COLA

The Light refreshment

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 73

"It looks like he did," Mrs. Lilygren said. "That was the conclusion mamma and my aunt come to that time, I remember."

"But his two favorites had blond hair."

"Yes, they did, come to think of it."

"That seems funny." The faint twinge turned to faint satisfaction.

"I remember one time ——" Mrs. Lilygren said. "You're welcome to pick yourself a handful of gooseberries if you want. They're not so sour now."

"No, thanks," Gertrude declined politely. "What was you starting to tell?"

"Well, it seems silly to repeat it, but while we're on the subject, and you don't need to mention it to anybody particularly ——"

"Oh, I won't."

"Well, one time mamma was sewing in the Lion House, in a big room down in the basement, and she had me with her. It was along in September. I guess it was for conference they was getting ready, or they had some big visitors coming or something. Anyway, the argument started over these buttons—there was ten of them, I remember, brown, silver rim around the edge with kind of like a cameo effect in the middle. It was Susan Snively that started sewing them on her dress. She didn't even have the buttonholes made—I remember noticing and thinking how funny that was. Well, sir, in comes Lucy Bigelow, smiling and pleasant, and goes over and looks at the skirt mamma is seaming up. All of a sudden she looks up and sees these buttons Susan Snively is sewing on as fast as she can sew. She steps across to her and says, 'Sister Susan! What do you think you're doing anyway?' She says it soft but she's very mad and everybody stops whatever they're saying or listening to.

"I see Susan Snively's face get red and she's glaring at Lucy Bigelow. 'I am sewing on my buttons,' she says.

"'My buttons, you mean!' Lucy Bigelow says. 'You snip them right off and give them back to me!' Lucy says. She begins digging in the workbasket beside Susan and gets four or five of them in her hand.

"'You put them buttons back in that basket!' says Susan, and she makes a grab at Lucy's hand.

"The first thing you know the buttons is rolling all over the floor, and down goes Susan on all fours after the buttons while Lucy picks up the dress and a scissors and snip, snip, snip, off comes the buttons.

"Right that minute Zina come in—I think it was Zina, anyway one of the older ones, that acted like she had authority—and 'Sisters!' she says. 'What in the world is this?' Well, sir, they both started to tell her at once. Mamma and me sewed right along for all we was worth, like nothing had happened ——"

"And who got the buttons?" Gertrude asked.

"You know what Zina did?"

"No, what?"

SHE held her hand out, and first Lucy dropped her buttons in it and then Susan dropped her buttons in, and down the buttons went into Zina's apron pocket, and then she took Susan's left arm and Lucy's right arm and she marched them right out of there. Not mean, but firm."

"Where to?"

"I think—and mamma always thought—to Brigham's office! And he decided who was to have the buttons."

"Lucy, I bet!"

"No, Susan. Susan Snively."

"But maybe they wasn't hers!"

"They wasn't. I would bet my life on it. She was sewing 'em on too fast—without her buttonholes made, remember."

"Then why did Brother Brigham give 'em to her?"

Mrs. Lilygren considered. "Well, Susan Snively was the homeliest one of all the wives. Brigham was said never to pay her a particle of attention from one year's end to the other—and most of the time she was out on that farm of his cooking and working—so maybe he felt kind of guilty, and thought that by giving her her way with the buttons, he could kind of make up for other things—at least, that was how mamma figured it out, considering what happened then."

"What happened then?"

"WHY, they'd been gone maybe fifteen or twenty minutes and all of a sudden the door flies open and who should come in but Susan Snively just as mad-looking as a wet hen, and she comes over to her chair and she slams these buttons into her sewing basket. She's got 'em, you see! Then she folds up the dress she's been working on and she slams that in the basket, too, and out she goes, and to her own room, to bawl in, I guess, for she looked mightily like it."

"But she got the buttons!" Gertrude said, puzzled. "Wasn't that what she wanted?"

"I don't know," Mrs. Lilygren said. "She was the loser someway in the proposition even though she got the buttons, I never exactly understood how. A little while later, Lucy Bigelow come in looking as pleased as Punch—and she went right past Susan Snively's workbasket without taking no interest in it whatsoever. She was humming Return to Me, O Prophet Dear, and you never would of knew nothing happened."

"But wasn't they Lucy's buttons to start with?"

"Mamma was always convinced of it."

"And Lucy wasn't mad?"

"She certainly didn't seem to be. Not after she had seen Brigham and come back."

Gertrude caught her lower lip between her teeth and fingered her ear lobe. "She must of got something else," she decided, "to make up for it. So that she didn't care one way or the other. Better buttons or something."

"She must of," Mrs. Lilygren agreed, "but what it was, I don't know. A funny thing," she said, "Susan never did sew those brown buttons to her dress, she used some others ——"

"Are you Mrs. Lilygren?" said a soft but manly voice and a young man stepped around the corner of the house, his hat in his hand. "I knocked at the front door but couldn't seem to raise anybody."

Mrs. Lilygren stood stock-still, her face going as white as paper. "Excuse me," she said, and Gertrude knew she was ready to drop dead with embarrassment. She could not even lift a weak hand to cover the inch or two of her collarbone that showed.

"She just washed it," Gertrude said, making the explanation for the poor lady's sake. Now Mrs. Lilygren had her two hands caught in her hair where they rustled like a couple of birds in a porch vine, and she grew still whiter.

"My, you have beautiful hair," the young man blurted out, his face oddly red. He was staring at Mrs. Lilygren and so Gertrude, sitting on the bottom step, stared for an instant, too, at Mrs. Lilygren's girlish form, her little shoes, her dainty neck spotted now with pink like a dragon lily, her white face beginning to spot with pink, her innocent light-hued terrified eyes.

"Don't . . . mind," the young man said, coming a step closer. "Are you Mrs. Lilygren?" he asked. There was a Swedish flavor to his words, something Swedish about the pauses between them.

She nodded and pressed her trembling lips together

FROM THE GARDEN

By CHRISTIE LUND COLES

I shall go in and eat now,
  Sun still warm upon my head,
And I shall have me white milk,
  And whiter-than-clouds white bread;

And I shall have a golden peach,
  Picked from the bough where it has hung,
Its fuzz upon my lip, its juice
  Wine of summer upon my tongue.

BORG'S Flight for her bath

Now there's a fabulous new gift for a bride, to glorify her bath while it guards her trim figure . . . the "Flight" scale, by Borg. Its beauty makes it a conversation piece—its precise mechanism makes weight-watching sure. So exact that even ounces are important—so watch-like, it hardly whispers in use. Comes with Lifetime Service Warranty. In Blue, Pink, White, Green, Yellow, or Black—$15. Other accurate Borgs, $7.95 up.

You can always believe your BORG® SCALE

West slightly higher • Available in Canada • © 1955 Borg-Erickson Corp., Chicago • Gown by Murray Hamburger

New! DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY

Now safely stops odor 24 hours a day!

Proved in comparison tests made by a doctor. A deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped odor only a few hours. Yet New MUM with M-3, under other arm, stopped odor 24 hours! M-3 clings to skin, destroys odor bacteria all day long.

New MUM with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics. Originally a doctor's formula, New MUM contains no harsh astringents, will not block pores or rot fabrics. Creamier, won't dry out in jar. Use New MUM daily.

New MUM® cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3
(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REFUNDMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

Another fine Product of Bristol-Myers

In all the world...no cream like

LUXURIA

Not only is it a magnificent cleanser, reaching deep, lifting out every vestige of dirt and old make-up, and doing it with a delicate touch... but Luxuria is so much more...a cream so lusciously rich it feels like melted velvet... beautifies as it cleanses...works wonders on the throat and about the eyes. If you could have only one preparation to guard your beauty, Luxuria Cream should be your choice. So discover Luxuria...and its surprisingly modest price...for yourself.

At better cosmetic counters everywhere. $1.25 plus tax.

HARRIET HUBBARD AYER · NEW YORK · PARIS · LONDON · TORONTO

Looking at his face and the expression in his eyes, Gertrude had the strange feeling that the young man wanted to put his arms around Mrs. Lilygren, right where she stood, all dressed in her hair so that you could hardly see anything else. But could that be?

"You have beautiful hair," he said. "My."

"Sit—down," Mrs. Lilygren whispered. "I'll go in—for just a minute—if you'll excuse me." But she could not seem to move away and only stood there miserably, swallowing, while he stood stock-still and kept having that expression. "Who—are you?" Mrs. Lilygren begged.

"I'm Gustave Dahlquist." He was a tall, slender man with golden hair and rich bright cheeks like a girl's. He had a shabby suit on, but his shirt was very white and his shoes were blacked. "I'm your new boarder."

"You were supposed to come on Monday," Gertrude accused him, while Mrs. Lilygren slowly collapsed within her hair upon the step and sat there.

"I know," he said. "But I came to inquire about the washing—if I can expect to get my washing done."

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Lilygren whispered.

"You scared the life out of her," Gertrude scolded. "And she was scared enough already, thinking of you and the other one coming on Monday."

At her words he looked so stricken that she had to smile a little, to soften them. "Why, say," he said, "Mrs. Lilygren! You're not scared of me, are you?" He squatted down in front of the steps.

"Of course she is," Gertrude said. "And of the other one too."

Mrs. Lilygren nodded, her eyes filling with tears.

"Of old Ankerstrand?" He threw back his head and laughed. "Why, you met Ankerstrand, Mrs. Lilygren! He's the one that came and made the arrangements. Why, didn't you notice how bashful he is?"

She shook her head and the tears spilled out and down her cheeks.

The young man got his handkerchief out to wipe them, but he had too far to reach, so he got up and sat down beside paralyzed Mrs. Lilygren and put his arm around her and dried them there. "What's she scared of us for?" he asked Gertrude. "Me and old Ankerstrand?"

"Well," Gertrude said, "she's never had boarders before, and she's scared maybe you won't think the bed's good enough and she's afraid maybe she won't cook good enough—and she worries about the money, if it's too much, and all like that."

"Why, Mrs. Lilygren," the young man said, drying her eyes and patting her shoulder with a gentle hand, "why, you've got nothing to worry about!"

"My hair," she wept. "The way I look—hanging down ——"

"I tell you what," he said. "Me and this little girl here, we'll shut our eyes and sit here, and you go in and pin it up, and then you tell us when you're ready, and we'll look ——" He shut his eyes tight and Gertrude did likewise.

MRS. LILYGREN, reprieved, was gone in an instant.

They did not speak while the bees buzzed and the wind walked through the rosebushes, and in a very little while Mrs. Lilygren stood at the back door and called them to open their eyes and come in.

Gertrude and Mr. Dahlquist climbed the steps to the back door that Mrs. Lilygren held open—the same Mrs. Lilygren as always, with her hair wound, piled, mounded and twisted up, but not the same Mrs. Lilygren, either, for somehow, someway, beauty that came so seldom and stayed so short a while had decided to pay a little longer visit. Its place of honor was her face.

"Sit down," she said, and they each took a chair.

"Thank you," said Mr. Dahlquist. He gazed at her as though she had not done up her hair at all, and he seemed not a bit like a stranger.

"I won't stay long," Ingeborg said, sitting down to the table, "if it's Olaf's night home."

There isn't a parallel of latitude but thinks it would have been the equator if it had had its rights.

—MARK TWAIN

She had come from her regular Friday cleanin at Mrs. Ryding's and stopped at Linnea's. I was dark and cool in the kitchen, with th blinds pulled down tight, the back door ope against the screen and only enough fire in th Home Comfort range to keep the teakettl humming.

"Every night's his night now," Linnea sai soberly, taking a seat across from her. "Eve since the middle of June."

"That's right, I forgot," Ingeborg said "Ain't that surprising of Sigrid? Not to let hi go down home no more? I thought sure she' get over it by now."

"I CAN'T understand it," Linnea said. "He went down four or five times, and tried to e plain, and he's wrote her a letter."

"Oh, well, it ain't no skin off Olaf's nose. H always loved you better anyway," Ingebor said. "He always was tickled to death to com up home here to you."

"You're right," Mrs. Troon put in wise from her rocking chair.

"It was too bad all around," Linnea said, little frown on her forehead. "I wouldn't had it happen for the world." She glanced the gold baby buggy in the corner. "And he Myra has pretty near outgrew it already. I ca imagine how silly it looks to Sigrid. I can p myself in her place."

"It's no skin off your nose," Ingeborg sai "If she wants to turn Olaf over to you, wh what do you care?"

"But she don't want to Linnea said. "Not reall She's awful fond of Olaf you can't help yourse when you're around hi you just can't help yourse Why, Hattie was sayi her mother hadn't stepp her foot out the door all these weeks—pretty ne three months—and do have no callers; and every time Hattie loo at her mother, tears is rolling down h cheeks. That ain't right. It worries Olaf and worries me."

"Well, why is she so stubborn then? Y didn't work on him to buy the baby bugg Why don't she just let bygones be bygone Some fine morning she's going to wake up a find out that Olaf ain't going to try to make with her no more!"

"He's very well contented here," Mrs. Tro said. "That, I can see. Why, half the time h all out of breath when he comes in that do there, like he couldn't get home fast enoug And at supper, the laughing and talking—a whatever Linnea dishes up is tasty, althoug myself haven't got much appetite ——"

"First thing you know Olaf ain't going to to make up no more," Ingeborg repeated, "a then where'll she be? Cutting off her nose spite her face."

"She can't seem to help herself," Linn said. "She's got started and she can't sto

"Let her stew in her own juice, I say," In borg said. "She must be turned in the head something, to act like that. Speaking of turn in the head, I don't know what has got i Mrs. Ryding lately. I told you how upset was after the news come out about Cle Showacy."

"Cleora Showacy?" Mrs. Troon asked. kind of lose track once in a while. Who's sh

"You know, Mrs. Troon," Linnea sa "Ingeborg was telling us a couple of weeks a Cleora Showacy was Mrs. Ryding's hired g That is, she come in Tuesdays and Fridays j to do nothing but Mrs. Ryding's washing a ironing that she used enough clean things fo family of six, remember. Nice little girl about sixteen, light brown hair, widow mother. Lives down in the Third Ward."

"She's going to have a baby," Ingeborg in disdainfully. "Instead of behaving herse

"When you get as old as I am," Mrs. Tro said, "them things don't seem like a drop in bucket no more, someway—a poor little away in over her head. Except to feel sorry her and wish she wasn't, for her own sake. A even then—I've knowed such a baby grow and get to be somebody, and buy his moth house and give her money, and she didn't n to work no more, and everything was rosy, you see, you can't tell. Now I remember," id, "you mentioning her. What was you arting to say?"

"I was just saying how upset Mrs. Ryding as after the news come out—and after Cleora howacy didn't come back to wash and iron. hat was three weeks ago and she was already arting to show, although I never thought thing about it till after. Anyway, you'd of ought the whole burden of the world had fell n Mrs. Ryding with that washing and ironing hers. I offered to do it but she had in mind couldn't suit her—you never seen such a par-cular woman—and I guess she thought I ouldn't work as cheap as Cleora, which I ouldn't. Anyway, she got one poor woman d tried her out, and then another, but they ouldn't do. So today she had somebody else, d she may turn out all right, although I don't ow. Mrs. Ryding had her bawling a time or o on account of a little scorch. That Mrs. yding! You know what she done today?"

"No, what?" Linnea asked.

"I declare I think she's practically bug-ouse," Ingeborg said. "The first thing—you ow how particular she is about her hair? ell, when I come to work this morning, here e was with it flowing down her back—and e kept it that way all day. It was still flow-g when I left! And half dressed ——"

"Half dressed?" Linnea asked in amaze-ent.

"Half dressed!" Ingeborg repeated. "Her orning sack open all the way down the ont, and running around in her stocking et, right over the bare floor of the kitchen d everywhere."

"Did she act peculiar otherwise?" Linnea quired. "That sure don't sound like Mrs. yding, that's always so particular."

"I've mentioned several times she's been ting funny," Ingeborg said. "Like putting r silver tea set under her bed when she takes nap, and hiding her kitchen knives till she n't even find 'em herself, and borrowing gar from the neighbors when she's got a hole sackful. And then, she's so nervous—nest, I'm beginning to feel sorry for poor r. Ryding."

"Beginning to!" Linnea said, laughing.

"No, but really. She's worse now, for some ason. This trouble about Cleora Showacy aving and having to get somebody new for e washing and ironing—I don't know why, t it has seemed to upset her something rrible."

"The poor Birdseys," Linnea said in an ide to Mrs. Troon, "him being the bishop of e ward and all, and Vaude being their only n. I guess it just about broke them up, to find t he's been sparking Cleora and they didn't ow a thing about it, let alone the pass it all d come to, until Cleora's mother, Mrs. owacy, showed up at their house crying like r heart would break and saying Vaude's got marry the poor child. Which you remember y Lilygren come over and told us," she said.

"Why don't he, then? If he's responsible?" rs. Troon asked.

WELL, for one thing," Ingeborg explained, e's supposed to expect a call to go on a mis-n; and besides, he's sweet on one of the nnon girls down in the Tenth Ward and has en for a long time, and her father has that gh-up job at the bank, and the Birdseys don't ure Cleora Showacy's such a catch, with at widowed mother, and especially now," e said. "And then, men don't marry that nd."

"Pooh," said Linnea. "If they're in love, ey do. It's just when they're stringing them ong."

"Anyway, Bishop Birdsey flatly refused to Vaude marry Cleora," Ingeborg went on. t's true, I guess—different ones seen 'em to-ther at the park and one place and another, Vaude couldn't deny he sparked Cleora all ght, but Bishop Birdsey's stubborn, and once makes up his mind he'll never give in, from hat I hear."

"Maybe Vaude will marry her anyway," nnea said, "father or no father."

"He won't," Ingeborg said. "From what I ar, he's dropped Cleora like a hot potato and n't been near. He don't care what happens her!"

"Ingeborg," Linnea said, "in some ways u're just as mean as you can be, for some-body that's always so good otherwise. I don't understand it."

"You know how I feel about men, Linnea," Ingeborg said. "I wouldn't give you two cents for a royal king on a golden throne. And there ain't nothing that I look down on more than dumbheaded women that makes fools of theirselves. Anybody that would make a fool of theirself over a man ought to suffer, I always say."

"Ingeborg, Ingeborg," Linnea said sadly. "A good, kind, broad-minded woman like you, that works so hard and does so much and there ain't no better friend anywhere. And here you act like you got a mind about half a inch wide, and talk so mean. Why, that can't be Ingeborg. No, it can't, and I won't believe it."

The bitter look on Ingeborg's homely face began to wane into contrition. "Cleora's all right," she said grudgingly. "Mrs. Ryding worked her like a horse and I guess the other ladies she worked for did too—and she ain't very big—never impudent, not to me and never to no one, always a nice word and always smiling. That Vaude Birdsey ought to be took out somewhere and stood up against a wall and shot. And horsewhipped to boot." She paused and cleared her throat. "Anyway, to get back to Mrs. Ryding. I never thought she could get worse, but she's even jealouser than ever of that poor man of hers. He leaves in the morning, and what does Mrs. Ryding do? Why, she hides behind the dining-room curtains and peeks out through a crack—not so's he can see her, mind you—and watches him while he hitches up and drives away. And she watches for him the same way at noon, when he comes home and when he leaves, and the same way at night. It gives me the creeps when I happen to see her. She's always got to be watching him ——"

"It's a mystery to me how she lets him go down to the store by himself, if she acts like that," Linnea said.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 79

Nowadays discriminating women choose soft, gentle Soft-Weve.

In today's Nicest Homes
you find this new kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. You can take pride in providing this newer, nicer kind of tissue in your own home. Soft-Weve has special softness because it's made a special way . . . made like your fine facial tissue.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong give Soft-Weve its wonderful softness—give it practical strength as well. No other kind of tissue is so luxurious, so right for every nice home. Yet Soft-Weve is a luxury everyone can afford to enjoy, another great Scott value.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

new,
new Flair

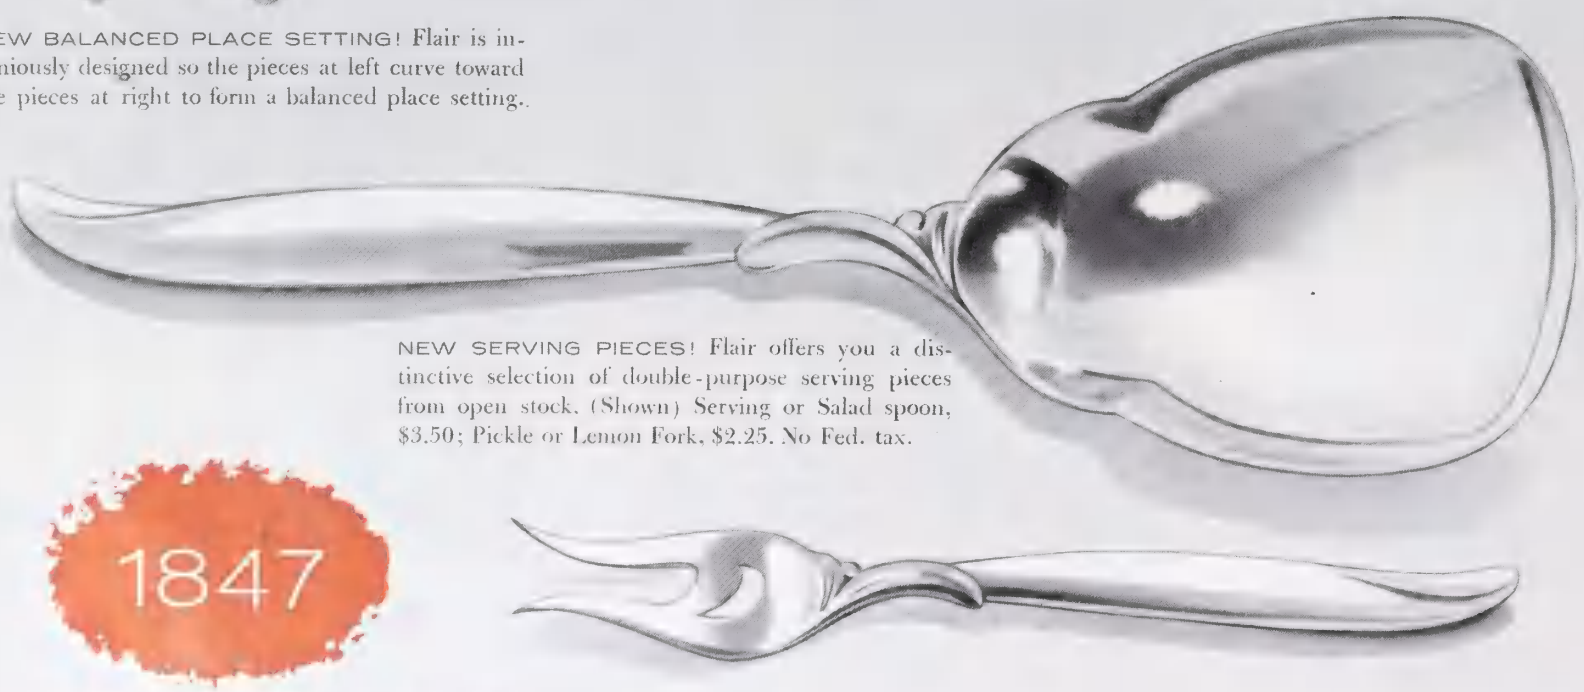
so modern it sets a tradition



Flair is the first truly modern silverware pattern. Refreshingly new in design, its great beauty of form is inspired by the gleaming silver itself.

This page will give you an idea of the exciting new beauty and versatility of every piece of Flair. 52-pc. service for eight, in tarnish-resistant chest only $89.75. No Fed. tax.

NEW FLAIR HOLLOWARE is as functional as it is beautiful. This Hot Beverage Set is ideal for coffee, tea or cocoa. 3-pc. set, $65.00. The tray doubles as meat platter, $17.50. Fed. tax extra.

NEW BALANCED PLACE SETTING! Flair is ingeniously designed so the pieces at left curve toward the pieces at right to form a balanced place setting..

NEW SERVING PIECES! Flair offers you a distinctive selection of double-purpose serving pieces from open stock. (Shown) Serving or Salad spoon, $3.50; Pickle or Lemon Fork, $2.25. No Fed. tax.

1847

1847 ROGERS BROS.

AMERICA'S FINEST SILVERPLATE

A PRODUCT OF THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 77

"He took a nap on the sofa," Ingeborg said, and I declare if she didn't just stand there and ook down at him the whole time. I seen her hen I come down the hall with my bucket to ash the front windows and I seen her when I me back. When he woke up, I guess she beat so he didn't know. I wonder if she does that ay at night. It's bad enough in the daytime, pecially if she's going to take a notion to run ound in her stocking feet and leave her hair and her morning sack unbuttoned ——"

"That is a new development," Linnea said ith concern. "When you consider Mrs. Ryd- g. So particular with her clothes and the use ——"

"Oh, she's still particular," Ingeborg said. Made me scrub down the back steps three nes, and out the walk, and I was so riled up I uld of soused the soapsuds all over her. If she eps on the way she's heading ——" She oke off. "How's Mrs. Lilygren?" she asked ddenly. "Still tickled to death with her arders? How long's it been now?"

"Going on three months," Linnea said, a eased look on her face. "And if that didn't rn out to be wonderful. From what she says d Ivy says, them boarders is just a pleasure. hy, the house ain't the same," she said de- htedly. "It's so full of life and they're always ughing and having a good time. Both of the ys play mandolins—they've only got the e, though, between n—and they're ching Nephi, and nkerstrand's a inter and he's done rs. Lilygren's kitchen odwork, and pa- red her parlor ——"

"Loafers?" Inge- rg asked.

"Loafers! Of course t!" Linnea said. ahlquist works for lassmaker and An- rstrand's always got b. They work every . I tell you," she d, "Mrs. Lilygren er did herself more a favor in all her rn days than to ve that baby in the temple, so that her sband got mad and run off and she divorced n."

"Is he still living in back of the carpenter op?" Ingeborg asked.

"Lilygren? The last I heard. Getting meaner d onrier and more miserly by the day, I ss."

"I suppose the next thing Mrs. Lilygren will e a notion to fall in love with one of them ng birds," Ingeborg said sourly.

"Oh, no!" Linnea laughed. "Why, she's ty years old, and Ankerstrand ain't but nty-one and Dahlquist twenty-two. But I uldn't be surprised but what Ivy might set cap for one of 'em. She seems to be quite en with Dahlquist. She don't skin her hair k so tight now, and she's cut some bangs, d her mother made her a very pretty tan ss, piped in white."

"You don't say."

"MRS. LILYGREN looks different, too," Mrs. on said unexpectedly. "It turns out she's a y pretty woman." She began to rock again, y slowly.

"That's true," Linnea said. "Now that I ne to think of it, that's true. She'll come ning over of a morning, maybe to get a ipt or something—she don't always want cook the same things, so's Mr. Dahlquist d Mr. Ankerstrand'll get tired—or she'll ne just to visit a minute, though she don't much chance since she's so busy. And 's really turned out pretty. I never thought t, but she really has, like you say," she said, ning to Mrs. Troon.

"I suppose she's gone to work and cut bangs . Wears her best clothes ——" Ingeborg l.

"No, she didn't cut bangs," Linnea said, d she's hardly got enough best clothes to in your eye. She dresses just the same as al- s, in them old skirts and waists that I k she's wore for years, but always a clean apron on, starched so it would stand alone. I don't know what it is ——"

"Her color," Mrs. Troon volunteered.

"Yes, her color, and then she's filled out, and then her eyes look so bright now." Linnea did not mention that Mrs. Lilygren had appeared with a rose off the bush by the steps, thrust girlishly into a coil of her hair.

"I suppose she'll take a notion to fall in love with one of them young whippersnappers, next," Ingeborg repeated. "That will take her down a notch."

"Oh, no, she won't," Linnea said, "but Ivy might. I've got a notion that Ivy ain't got far to go to be very soft on Mr. Dahlquist, and no wonder. He's one of the nicest young fellows you ever seen."

WHEN Ingeborg had gone, Linnea hastened to peel the onions and dice the potatoes for salad. They were going to have that rare treat, a Dutch lunch, tonight—salad, wilted lettuce and sliced boloney—because of the very hot weather. "I guess the kids will be along home pretty soon now," she said, "Stellie and Rudie from playing at the Parmalees'; and Gertrude from taking care of the Walkers' baby over on Almond Street. My, it's been quiet all afternoon."

Myra, down for a late nap in the bedroom and only now waking, set up a cheerful hubbub to announce her waking. Linnea ran to get her and came out with the husky baby, clad only in a diaper, in her arms.

"I'll change her," she said, "and then I'll nurse her. That way, she'll be good while we eat supper."

Mrs. Troon said, "You know something? It would be nice for you if Olaf always come home every night like he's been doing the last two months. I never seen a happier bunch than you and the kids, and him, too, when he's up here."

"I got to try to do something about . . . her. About Sigrid," Linnea said. "But what, I don't know." She glanced at the golden buggy in the corner. "I wouldn't of had it happen for the world."

"I wonder how polygamy would be," Mrs. Troon said, "the other way around. One wife and two husbands."

Linnea broke out with a laugh, and Myra laughed, too, and all three of them laughed together.

"I'm getting spoiled," Linnea said, "having Olaf home every night. Him going to the Swedish Choir tonight for the practice, seems just awful. I miss him already." She smiled to show she was joking.

"Give 'em a inch and they'll take a mile," Mrs. Troon said. "Women will, won't they?"

"Ain't that the truth?" Linnea looked serious. She leaned over and turned the lamp in the center of the clean plaid tablecloth down a little so that the circle of its light did not reach her and she could sit in shadow.

"Human nature," Mrs. Troon said. "Something better comes along, and what was good enough before ain't good enough no more. So there's very little rest in life for anybody. That reminds me," she said, "I got as far as making my hope chest and getting ready to marry Ed Troon, didn't I?"

"With your story, you mean," Linnea said. "That's right. You was always going to tell me the rest of it."

"I told you how I was working for the widow woman Mrs. Dotterer that had the one son Leonard? And how at the time my Cousin Cora and me busted up over Ed Troon?"

Linnea nodded. "You got as far as getting ready for your wedding."

"I married him all right," Mrs. Troon said. "And my folks come up from Fairbury, Jefferson County, and I was wearing the India muslin and the lace veil, just like I wanted. I was sixteen years old and he was twenty and

The founding of a Library is one of the greatest things we can do. . . . It is one of the quietest things; but there is nothing that I know of at bottom more important. Every one abie to read a good book becomes a wiser man. He becomes a similar center of light and order, and just insight into the things around him. A collection of good books contains all of the nobleness and wisdom of the world before us. . . . A collection of books is the best of all universities.

—THOMAS CARLYLE

CELESTE 5-piece place setting 10.75

Almost everyone recognizes at first sight Syracuse' special beauty and quality. It's so obvious — from warm, glowing design and color to superb smoothness and lustre.

But it's the hidden quality — remarkable hardness and strength — that makes Syracuse yours to enjoy every meal, every day. And it all costs so little!

Experience and research over the years have shown Syracuse how to make finer china — less expensive.

FREE Portfolio of Syracuse patterns in full color . . . hints on choosing, using and caring for your china. Send for your copy today. Syracuse China, Dept. J-6, Syracuse 4, N. Y.

Prices slightly higher west of the Rockies

CORONET
5-piece place setting 15.75

DORIAN
5-piece place setting 15.75

PATRICIA
5-piece place setting 11.75

SYRACUSE China

Beauty that works for a living!

Give sizzling 'burgers a dash of French's for added zest

FRENCH'S Worcestershire
does something wonderful for Barbecue Sauce!

FREE! BARBECUE RECIPE BOOKLET with Plans for Outdoor Grills!

The R. T. French Co.
4031 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

- ✓ French's Worcestershire Sauce is a blend of rare spices, soy, anchovies, tamarinds.
- ✓ Aged and mellowed for richer, more distinctive flavor.
- ✓ Now in an exclusive non-drip bottle. Costs less, yet no finer Worcestershire at any price!

they said we made a very nice-looking couple ——"

"Which I'll bet you did too," Linnea said.

"—— and then we went home to the little house he built. There was only two rooms, but I tell you that was the best little house you ever seen, with plenty of kitchen shelves and oh, I don't know what all. 'In my Father's house,'" she quoted softly, "'are many mansions' . . . but when I get there, Linnea, and I got my choice, I don't want no mansion, I want just such a little house as Ed built, with the same things I had then in it. In fact," she said, "I want two such little houses, one on one street and one a couple of blocks away."

"In heaven?" Linnea asked in surprise. "Two houses?"

"Yes, sir, I got good use for two such little houses, and what will God care, whether I choose to have them or a big expensive mansion? What difference will it make to Him?"

"None, I guess," Linnea said.

"Where was I?" Mrs. Troon said. "Oh, yes. Well, sir, Ed Troon was a man such as women dream of—big, and broad-shouldered, and husky and handsome, good-natured, a hard worker, didn't drink a drop except maybe a schooner of beer in summer—the kind of man a woman can twine around and cling to like mistletoe to the oak and be as helpless as she wants, for he can stand up against anything. Even I, little kid that I was, understood what I had in him, and every day that went by I loved him better, till it seemed there wasn't no room to love him more. Well, sir, I told you how he was a blacksmith and done a little rassling on the side and how he took such pride in hefting things. I don't know why, but anything big and heavy he'd come across, nothing would do but he had to give it a lift and never was satisfied till he got it up off the ground, a big bale of hay or a half-grown calf or anything, up it would have to go—and then he'd be satisfied and walk away smiling, mopping the sweat off his face.

"Well, we'd been married a year—the happiest year a woman ever spent—and it was June, June tenth, and Aunt Ebba's family, and us—except Cora, who never forgive us—all went on a picnic, and where we went to was a big old churchyard out toward the edge of town, where nobody used the church no more and it was half fell down. We spread out our dinner in among the trees, and right off to the left was the graveyard with the tombstones showing here and there through the wild rosebushes and the blackberry vines. I can still remember how pretty it was, how we tore right into the dinner till we was all as full as ticks.

"After a while Ed come over and got hold of my hand and give it a tug and we went for a little stroll in among the headstones, reading what they said on 'em, and Stacey was with us—my Cousin Stacey. Pretty soon Stacey stops still before a great big enormous gravestone and says, 'Look here! It's loose!'

"'What's loose?' we say, coming up to him.

"'Why, this here stone,' he says. 'It's clear off its base and kind of twisted around. Maybe a earthquake done it or something.'

"'I'll straighten it,' says Ed. He gets up against it and gives it a heave and it don't hardly budge. 'Say, this is heavy,' he says, and he gets that look in his eyes that he gets when he's going to heft something.

"'You leave that alone,' I says, 'it's too heavy, don't start fooling with that gravestone,' but he turns his head and smiles at me, while he's rolling up his sleeves, and he says, 'You wouldn't want no weakling, would you?' And before I can say boo he's crouched down and dug his hands in under the edges and up the thing comes inch by inch, and I holler, 'Put it down, Ed! Put it down!' while the veins stand out on his forehead and his face gets purple and I think he's going to split the clothes off his back, and all of a sudden down it rolls—I don't see how he kept from under it—and Ed is lying on the ground, right flat on the ground, and his face is whiter than any blued linen.

"It takes me a minute to realize something terrible has happened, and I scream to Stacey to go for Aunt Ebba, and I get down on my knees beside him. He looks at me the most surprised in the world and he says, 'I busted something. I can't move my legs.' I start in to bawl, but then I stop because it won't do no good, and I say, 'Oh, Ed, Ed, does it hurt you?' and he says, 'I can't feel nothing. I can't feel nothing at all.'"

Mrs. Troon let out her breath and drew a deeper one. "Well, we got him home," she said, "and that was the worst night a body ever spent. The doctor come and said Ed had broke his back and would never walk around again. All he could do was lay in his bed, all the rest of his life. Ed," she said, to make it clear, "Ed Troon. And a week later, while I was out buying the supper, he got out of bed someway and dragged himself, and got his gun—and when I come home—I found him—and here was this note—saying 'You got to understand.'" She did not weep but she put her hand up to her mouth, and down again, and took a corner of her apron and began to twist it.

"WHAT people has got to go through," Linnea whispered, and she looked down at her own hands folded on the table. "And nobody knows who's been through what. How easy we'd ought to step everywhere—not knowing."

"And that's how I come to go back to the Dotterers," Mrs. Troon said. "I rented out the house for five dollars a month and stored the wedding presents at Aunt Ebba's—and back I went to the Dotterers. Mrs. Dotterer was just the same as ever, or maybe a little bit worse, and the same work was to be done—'Rhoda, do this,' and 'Rhoda, do that'—and I got tireder than I ever had before. But the tireder I was, the better I liked it, for then I couldn't think or remember, but I must of remembered anyway, when I didn't know it, for I'd wake up and my pillow'd be wet, and if my heart wasn't broke in two it was so badly bent it ached like toothache so I thought I had heart failure and was going to die."

She paused. "Well, sir, the son, Leonard Dotterer, was still less able to call his soul his own. From the time he got up till he went to bed, that mother of his was on his trail. When he'd want to get off by himself, she'd always say how the time was coming when he wouldn't have no mother and then think how he was going to regret the hours he didn't spend with her. 'Your mother is your best friend,' she'd say. 'When your mother's dead, your best friend in life will be gone,' she'd say, 'and you'll find it out.'

"He was twenty-one then, and still pale and skinnier—and I thought to myself, 'She's just smothering him to death. God help him,' thought. And what do you know? God did! All of a sudden, one morning—that was about a year after I come back to work there—the whole thing fell down around their ears. They lost everything and was as poor as crows. Mrs. Dotterer got a letter and she give a scream and fainted dead away, and when I run into the dining room, here was Leonard standing over her with a glass of water but afraid to throw it on her. I gets down and starts rubbing her hands while I asks what happened.

"Leonard says, 'We've lost our money and have got to give up the house and everything.' He set the water down on the table and knelt across from me. I looked right at him and for the first time he looked right at me and he kind of colored up, for some reason. 'I don't know what we'll do,' he says.

"'Now's your chance to be a man,' I says 'and show what you're made of, and get out in the world, and get a job.' I talks fast for I know Mrs. Dotterer won't lay in a faint long if she can help it. 'And get acquainted with folks and get you a girl, too, and get married and—be a man.'

"'I'm not strong,' he says.

"'Strong!' I says. 'You'd be strong enough you'd get a little gumption for once in your life, and get out from under your mother where you're squashed flatter than a pancake and never get a breath of air or a ray of light from one year's end to the other.'

"'I'm not such a no-account as you think,' he says. 'I can take ahold if I have to.'

"'Now's your chance to prove it,' I says. I had a few more things to get off my chest to him, but right that minute his mother started batting her eyelids and moans and sits bolt up right.

"'What happened?' she says.

"Well," Mrs. Troon went on, "there was no fooling about that letter. They really had lost everything and they rented some rooms in a rooming house. I got me a job with a German family that had three kids that was meaner than Satan, and worked hard, and saved my money, and four years later I moved back in my own little house and after that I got a job at a corset maker's. Things went along and one day—it was January and the snow was shoveled on either side of the sidewalks as high as the top of your head—I was walking down the street towards home and I heard somebody calling me.

"'Rhoda,' somebody was calling so I looks around and here comes a man running up to me. 'Rhoda,' he says, 'how are you?'

"'It's Leonard Dotterer!' I says, not able to believe my eyes, for he's the poorest excuse of a man you ever want to see. His clothes is in rags and he's dirty and he's holding an old battered hat in his hands and he ain't shaved or combed his hair in I don't know how long. 'What happened to you?' I says, and I back into a doorway and he backs in too. 'Did your mother die?' She must of died, I thought, and he didn't have the backbone to stand on his own two feet without her.

"'No,' he says, 'mother is still alive.'

"'She is?' I say. I'm so surprised, I'm flabbergasted. We're pretty close to home, so I ask him to come along with me, not wanting to be mean, and ask him in. Well, I make tea and toast and he thaws out by the fire, for he's half froze, and while we're eating he tells me what happened."

"What did?" Linnea asked.

Mrs. Troon considered while she rocked back and forth, and then she stopped rocking. "Mrs. Dotterer raised her boy to be a certain way for a certain kind of life," she said. "She hand-raised him for herself—a pet lamb tied to a rope, to keep her company and keep her entertained. But," she went on, "when her life was a different proposition all of a sudden, then she wanted this same pet lamb of hers to stand up on his hind legs and take a man's job and support her.

"But it was too late. . . . The way the twig is bent, that's the way the tree grows, as the saying is. She sent him out to work, but what could he do? He hadn't no trade and he couldn't hold no job, for he figured he was sickly the way she taught him—no job at all, even the lowest. Well, the poorer and hungrier she got, the madder she got at him, like it was all his fault, and never considered that twenty-four hours a day for all those long years she had drummed and drilled and drilled and drummed, to make him just what he was, nothing but a pet with a rope around his neck. Finally it come to it that the old lady herself had to go out and work, or she'd of starved to death; and she put up with Leonard for a year or two, but to have to come home and cook for him and wash his clothes and iron his shirts was too much for her after a long day's work—so—what happened? Out went Leonard on his ear!"

"Leonard went out on his ear?" Linnea asked in amazement.

"YES, for she was a selfish woman from beginning to end or she wouldn't of done like she done with him. Out went Leonard to sink or swim as best he could. Where could he go? He took his violin and pawned it and then he started wandering around, working here and there when he could and finally asking people for stuff to eat at their back doors. He was a regular tramp," Mrs. Troon said. She paused and considered.

"Two months later I married him," she said. "Aunt Ebba and her family thought I was clear out of my mind. It was nearly six years after Ed died, and then I up and married Leonard Dotterer, that was as different from Ed Troon as night from day! They couldn't understand it. They never did understand it, and I lived with Leonard Dotterer for fourteen years."

"I don't understand it either," Linnea said softly.

"YOU know a woman's got two sides, don't you?" Mrs. Troon asked. "Most women, that is? Either they want to be as weak as a cat and cling to a man and let him bear the brunt and be the boss, or they want to be as strong as a ox and have the complete say-so and boss the job theirselves. At least, I had them two sides, I found out. If I couldn't cling, why, then I wanted to be clung to, and if I couldn't have the strongest and best, why, then I'd have the weakest and worst. But he wasn't the worst, I shouldn't ought to say that. I got him cleaned up, and got a suit of clothes for him, and he looked nice, only always delicate and pale. I got him a violin and he started to give a few lessons. He never made enough to keep us and I always had to work, but it was nice to have him around the house and I never got lonesome no more and didn't dread to eat my supper with Ed's chair empty opposite me. Time went by, and I got used to Leonard and he got to be a great comfort to me."

"How about his mother?" Linnea asked interestedly.

"His mother," Mrs. Troon said. "We went to see her, of course. But when she saw that he had married me, that used to work for her and take her orders, why, she was mad enough to bite a nail in two. So she let it be known that the less she would have to do with us, the better. And three or four years later she died, and we went to her funeral, and in fact we paid for it, or rather I did. But as I was saying, I got used to him. He had lots of nice little ways and he'd always bend over backwards to try to please me—brought the wood in and kept the fire going—and saw I had the best chair and the warmest place, and he could talk very entertaining. We lived together fourteen years, and then one night he started with this chill—though it was hot summer—and I got him to bed, and then he started with this fever, and four days later he looked up at me and says, 'Don't turn me away,' he says and his eyes looked like they're begging for something but I don't know what, and in a little while he's dead."

"Poor man," Linnea said.

"You can't imagine how I missed him," Mrs. Troon said. "It surprised me. When he was alive and sitting across from me, many and many a time I'd wish he was gone and Ed was back, but when he died I shed so many tears, and I'd wish him back, and wouldn't think of Ed at all. But then I'd think of Ed again, and wish for him. So that's the way it's been," she said, "for going on forty years. First I've wished for the one, and then for the other. I do it yet." She began to rock and then stopped. "I had this broach made," she said, fingering it, "out of a lock of each of their hair. Ten years went by. And then Aunt Ebba was alone and I went to live with her. And what do you think? Aunt Ebba had got in with some Mormon missionaries from Salt Lake City, preaching the Gospel of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and had give up going to the Baptist church and here she was head over heels in Mormonism. Well, I started to read some of the books and tracts the missionaries had left, so's I'd know how to argue with her, and I went to some of the meetings. There was some powerful good speaking among them missionaries, and the singing was fine."

Linnea smiled across at her.

HOW FAIR

By ELIZABETH McFARLAND

I heard your little song
Rise from that childish throat;
For necklace, you put on Warm pearl beads, note by note.

O you—not mine at all
But one of the Sun's young things —
With voice so pure, so small,
How fair the fresh heart sings!

P.S. Add French's to canned beans for country-kitchen goodness

FRENCH'S MUSTARD
does something wonderful
for a Barbecue!

✓ French's pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.

✓ French's rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.

✓ Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference French's makes!

FREE! BARBECUE RECIPE BOOKLET with Plans for Outdoor Grills!
The R. T. French Co.
1018 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

Now! Satisfy Your "COFFEE HUNGER" with NESCAFÉ®

—tastier coffee made the modern way!

Try this recipe . . .
When guests are "played out" after bridge or canasta, revive them with delicious Nescafé! For each serving, put a teaspoonful of Nescafé (more or less, according to strength desired) and a coffee cup of boiling water in your coffee server. Cover for a moment before serving. Mmm! This is truly "company" coffee!

all coffee
nothing but coffee!

© 1955 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

When you're hungry for tastier coffee, try Nescafé

"A very sad thought for me," Mrs. Troon said, smiling back, "was what it says in the Bible about marriage—that there'll be no giving or being given in marriage, in heaven. That always was a sad thought, and I wished it wasn't true, because if there was anything I wanted to do in heaven, it was to be Ed Troon's wife, just the same as always. And I got converted just for that one reason—because them missionaries pointed out that in their church I could be married to Ed for all eternity, just like here on earth. Sealing, they called it. It give me a new lease on life," Mrs. Troon said, "that promise, that I could still be married in heaven. I been working on it ever since."

"Working—how?" Linnea asked.

"Now it gets complicated," Mrs. Troon said.

"What does?"

"Why, the whole thing." The old lady looked carefully to see that the door to the bedroom was not ajar and that no one was listening. "What I'm going to tell you now is the biggest secret you ever heard in your life, and I rely on you not to tell, because if they found out what I've done, everything will be spoiled."

Linnea looked solemn. "Why, I won't mention a single word," she said, "about any of this. But what in the world could you of done that's so serious as all that?"

"I asked questions," Mrs. Troon said, "and I got the whole proposition explained to me, and one night, laying in my bed and thinking, I decided to join the church. Then the first thing I would do, I decided, would be to get myself sealed to Ed for all eternity, and in heaven we would have just such a little house as we had on earth and take up right where we left off. But then, all of a sudden, here was Leonard—I could see his blue eyes looking at me so gentle and kind. 'Don't turn me away,' he says when he was dying, and I could see that begging look for I didn't know what, and I promised. I started to get a lump in my throat, and my heart started to ache, for here I was planning to spend all eternity with Ed Troon, and what was I doing but turning poor Leonard away, to wander all alone forever, without me nowheres? I set up straight in my bed, and what popped into my mind then but polygamy—one man with more than one wife; there was a lot of talk in them days about polygamy—'What's sauce for the gander can be sauce for other people,' I says, and right then and there I laid my plans. I would go through the ceremony of marrying Ed Troon for all eternity, but I would also go through the ceremony of marrying Leonard Dotterer, too, for all eternity. I would have 'em both!"

"They don't allow that, do they?" Linnea asked curiously. "I don't blame you a bit and I'd want to do the exact same thing if I was in your shoes, but ain't it just for men? I mean, it's just men that can have more than one wife on earth, so ain't it the same thing in heaven?"

"It is," Mrs. Troon said. "I kind of hinted to one of the missionaries, and you never seen anybody so put out in your life. 'That is never done,' he says, and he goes into a long rigamarole about how it can't possibly be done, and all the while he talks I get more and more determined, and I say to myself, 'It can be done, and I'm going to be sealed both to Ed Troon and Leonard Dotterer through all eternity, or bust!'"

"Good for you," Linnea said. Her eyes were beaming. "Only how in the world could you do it?"

"EASY," Mrs. Troon said. Again she looked at the bedroom door and into the dark corners of the room where the lamplight did not reach. "First I joined the church as Mrs. Leonard Dotterer and I come out to Salt Lake—Aunt Ebba was coming with me, but the girls wouldn't let her, and later on she lost interest and took up with the Seven Day Adventists—and I followed all the rules, and got myself sealed to Leonard Dotterer for all eternity. That was half the job," she said. "Then I dropped out of the picture. I pretended I went back East—but I didn't. Instead I went up to Logan and settled down there. I took back my old name of Mrs. Ed Troon which I have kept ever since. And as Mrs. Ed Troon, I joined the church all over again and followed all the rules, and pretty soon I got myself sealed to Ed Troon for all eternity! There's no way they could catch me. I'm down on the records under the two different names, and I've got two husbands—sealed to 'em forever—and there ain't a thing can be done about it!" she finished triumphantly. "Although sometimes I get to feeling kind of guilty over it, when I think how I used the poor innocent church, that don't know what's been put over on it, and then I get this heavy feeling in my chest, which is probably why I ain't been feeling so good the last few years. But I don't care. I done what I wanted, and now I'll have Ed Troon, but at the same time I won't be going back on Leonard Dotterer. I'll have the two of 'em, God bless both their hearts, forever."

LINNEA put her hand to her forehead and rubbed it, blinking.

"You won't tell nobody?" Mrs. Troon begged. "For they might put the kibosh on it. Tear up the records or something."

"Never," Linnea promised. "Not if they cut out my tongue—but what a idea, how wonderful, when you think of it. There's just one thing, Mrs. Troon ——"

"What's that?" the old lady said. She had unpinned her brooch and was looking at it.

"Why, Ed Troon will be waiting in the—in the little house for you to come, and Leonard Dotterer—he'll be waiting, too—and when you get there how are you going to explain that you got to divide eternity between 'em?"

"Oh, I'll explain," Mrs. Troon said placidly and put the brooch in her apron pocket. "I've got it all planned out."

She did not say, the night before, to Olaf or to anyone, that this afternoon she was going down to Sigrid's, but Linnea knew that she could not put it off any longer. Something had to be done. It was September now and since the middle of June, when she cast her husband off, Sigrid had stubbornly refused to see him. If she had been happy in the meanwhile, there was nothing Linnea would have liked better, but the news of the breakdown of the beautiful and haughty woman, her grief and tears, her loneliness and isolation was too much for her. It weighed on the younger woman's conscience like a stone.

She put her best black silk on and pinned her hat on firmly. "I got to go down there," she said to Mrs. Troon, "and straighten things out, if I can. I just ain't got the heart to let her go on suffering."

"Let sleeping dogs lie," Mrs. Troon said. "After all, if she wants to act like that, whose fault is it?"

"It's mine," Linnea said sadly, "and Olaf's. Between us, we've just about killed her, it looks like. Hattie says she's been crying now for three solid months. I can't stand it no longer."

"She wouldn't come to you, you can bet, under the very same circumstances."

"Maybe she would," Linnea said. "Anyway, I got to go."

It was a long way in the warm September sun, and Linnea wished, as she walked along under the shade of her black cotton umbrella, that someone was with her to bear her company. Gunilla, maybe, and at the thought of her sister, whom she had not seen since conference, she began to feel the homesickness of her girlhood, when she left home for the first time and went to work. She sighed and walked more slowly. I'd rather be shot than be going down there. But I got to go. Maybe she won't let me in, she thought, her face brightening—and if she won't, why, then I've done all I could and I can go home and my conscience won't hurt no more. She quickened her pace. Maybe she won't let me in . . . and who can blame me? I tried.

She heard a patter of quick light footsteps behind her and Miss Deatherage passed in a cologne-scented hurry, calling back over her fur-draped shoulder, "I'm late for my music lesson!" with a flashing smile. Linnea watched her disappear around the corner. She smiled. Miss Deatherage must be a year or two older than herself (women know those things) and yet here she was hopping, skipping and jumping along like a young girl. And how awfully pretty she was. Glad to get her mind off her-f, Linnea was pleased to think about Miss eatherage as she strolled along. She sure was xious to get to that music lesson, like it was matter of life and death! She must love usic. Let's see, who was that Professor Arthur ince anyway? It seemed like somebody said came from back east. Linnea saw him rform once, on Pioneer Day out at Lagoon. at was two years ago and he wasn't only out twenty-three then—which would make him enty-five now. My, he must have started ung, mustn't he? There was something out a man playing a piano—all those trills d ripples and his hands flying up so high in air and coming down again and landing the right spot—that made a woman feel nd of weak-kneed inside around the heart. other Downsdee, with all his mining stocks d everything and his three elderly wives, d possibly better look sharp, or the first ng Brother Downsdee knew —— But ss Deatherage wouldn't go to the opposite reme (from seventy-two to twenty-five) and l in love with Professor Arthur Prince, uld she, for goodness' sake? Brother wnsdee must be pretty far gone on Miss atherage, to pay her rent and do all he was ng, long gray beard or not, and how would like it if —— My, what a life that must be. t a chick nor a child, and a man you wasn't rried to supporting you, and—music lessons. Two blocks from Sigrid's she began to ask Lord wordlessly to use His influence and it so Sigrid wouldn't let her in, but it came her what she was asking and she was amed, her face coloring up. So she changed content of the prayer quickly: Let her and get together for once in our lives—keep us n being mean and jealous—let us get to- her; but far beneath, like indelible writing can't erase, the first plea stayed valid: it so she won't let me in.

She opened the gate and went up the walk. w long had it been since she visited here? s was "down home" where Olaf had lived those years. He came out of this house and vn this walk one evening and went to choir ctice—the Swedish Choir—and met there, cape with the little stand-up collar, in a rry-red dress, herself, and fell in love. Out his very same small brick house with the en blinds and the look of rigorous Nor- ian housekeeping about it, months later, came and went up to the Endowment use and married herself, Linnea Amelia lin. Sigrid must have cried then, although gave her consent for the sake of religion because it would add to her glory in ven. This was the front door Olaf had shut ind him that hot night last June when he went (on a night that belonged to Sigrid) up to the shop and got the foolish gold baby buggy and wheeled it up to Myra. This was the walk, these were the steps, this was the porch floor that creaked as you took five steps across it. This was the door. . . . She put her hand up to knock and swallowed, the roof of her mouth suddenly dry. Fix it so she won't let me in. (Don't listen to me, God, I don't mean it. I want to do what's right.)

She knocked and in a moment the knob turned, the door swung open, Sigrid stood there.

Sigrid said, "Come in."

It was as warm outside as a pie an hour from the oven. Here in the parlor it was ice-cold, and very dark, for the blinds were pulled down nearly to the bottom of the window, greenish dark, and Linnea had the strange feeling that she was meeting Sigrid in a cave somewhere far down under the ocean. But in a moment she could see better, see what a nice parlor it was. What's she got to complain of? she thought with sudden anger. Sigrid's got a better parlor than I have. She's even got a organ! Olaf never mentioned that she had a organ, and here I've been wanting one so long so one of the kids could learn to play.

"Sit down," Sigrid said, and Linnea sat down on the chair she pointed out to her, while Sigrid sat down, too, on the very edge of her chair. "I suppose you've come for some reason. What is it?" Suddenly she put her hand to her heart and Linnea knew the thought had come to her: Maybe something has happened to him and she's come to tell me.

"It ain't . . . that," Linnea wanted to say, but didn't. Sigrid looked almost the same as always, a surprising thing. Linnea had imagined the beautiful face red-spotted, swollen and pale. But Sigrid looked much as always—well corseted, her figure as slender and elegant as ever, her frock clean and becoming, her hair neatly combed. It took the younger woman aback and for an instant she was at a loss for words. She opened her mouth and closed it.

"Nothing has happened to him?" Sigrid's hand began again to creep upward to her heart.

Linnea shook her head.

"Then what did you come for? You must of come for some reason."

"I did," Linnea said, and she was glad for the lack of light in the room. "I come—because of the baby buggy that Olaf traded a suit of clothes for, for Myra. You see, she could never of won the contest, but the kids—they had their heart set on it so—and Olaf—he wanted to surprise us all—and ——"

"I know all that," Sigrid said coldly.

"He's going to look the image of George— If something isn't done about it."

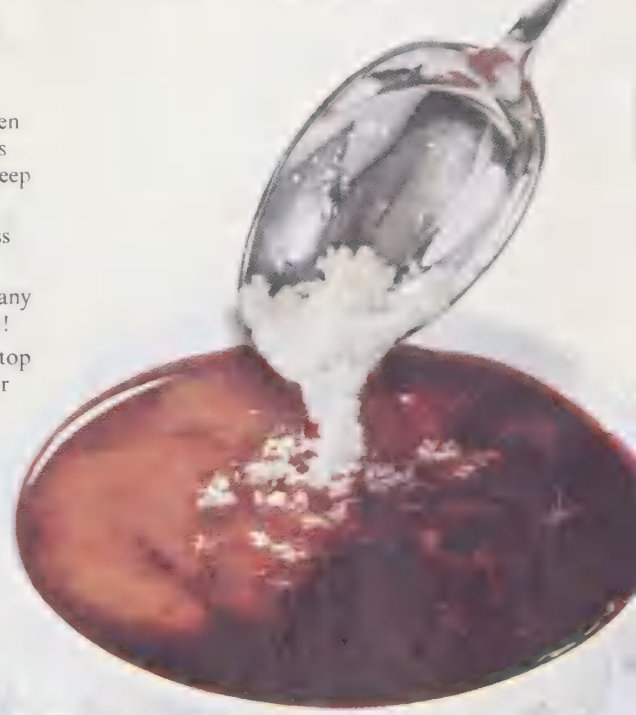
Pream is also available in glass jars in some areas.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

New easy thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN INSTANT POWDERED FORM



Rich and delicious! Made entirely from fresh sweet cream and other milk products. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful. Keep handy in cupboard or refrigerator!

So economical! Costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! Only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream!

Instant dissolving! Put Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

SALLY ROSS, Pream Home Economist, says:

CUT COOKING WORK WITH NEW PREAM RECIPES! HERE'S ONE:

New easy way to smoother cream sauce!

Mix 4 tbs. Pream, 2 tbs. flour, ½ tsp. salt in saucepan. Add 1 cup water. Cook and stir until mixture boils and thickens. Add 1 tbs. butter. Never, never lumps!

Send for FREE Recipe Folder

To: Sally Ross
Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____

State_____

Pream is available all over the Dominion of Canada, Alaska and Hawaii.

© 1955, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

Cling Peaches from California make such luscious quick desserts

EASY RECIPE

Peach Gold Sundae

Beautiful cling peaches look showy, taste particularly delightful in this unusual dessert! Simply drain canned cling peach slices. Alternate them in serving glasses with vanilla ice cream, butterscotch or caramel syrup and corn flakes or any similar crisp flake cereal.

These are golden, gorgeous, summer-sweet peaches! Lazily sun-ripened. Altogether delicious. Thrifty, too! Better keep several cans handy! Cling Peach Advisory Board Linnea began to feel extremely warm in spite of the chilly room, and only now she realized that she had never laid down her purse or umbrella but that she had them both, and was trying to dispose of the latter, which would not stand beside her chair but wanted to fall down. Suddenly she let it and the long handle grazed the table leg. She let it lie, not knowing what else to do. "And Olaf feels so . . . sorry," she said, "as you know he must, and I've been just heartsick too." She cast a beseeching look at Sigrid. "I know he wants to make up for everything, and have you forgive him ——"

"He sent that organ down," Sigrid said, pointing at it, "about three weeks ago."

Linnea looked at it and back at Sigrid. "And so I thought if I'd come down here and explain ——"

"I should think," Sigrid said, "I should think this would be just what you've wanted all these years, to have Olaf all to yourself, and have me left high and dry with no husband, no comfort, no nothing. So why don't you leave things the way they are? They're what you've worked toward and schemed for and wanted all these years. I've give up Olaf. Ain't that enough?"

"It would be," Linnea said slowly, "if you was happy about it, if this was what you wanted. But it ain't. If you was happy, you wouldn't do like Hattie says you been doing these past three months—shutting yourself up here, not seeing nobody, suffering and crying ——"

"Suffering! Crying!" Sigrid laughed, a terrible sound that stopped almost as soon as it began. "You don't know what the words mean!"

Now, for the first time, Linnea saw that you didn't have to see the damage for it to be there. Eyes didn't have to be swollen with weeping, a face didn't have to be ruined like a picture slashed. Her heart constricted with regret.

"You don't know what the words mean!" Sigrid repeated. "Neither do you know what it means to be married to a man and have him come home and tell you he wants somebody else! After you've been married seven years, and here he comes home as big as life and tells you he wants somebody eight years younger than you—maybe better-looking ——"

"But I wasn't," Linnea whispered. "I never was."

SIGRID laughed again. "No, you wasn't," she said. "But after that, you was always there, always between us, and the years went by—and we'd have had plenty—plenty to get along on—but no—you had them kids, one after the other ——"

"I've earned," Linnea said, "I've always earned. Don't think he was our entire support, because he never was. And he bought you this house. He never bought a house for me. You got to be fair about that."

"Fair!" Sigrid said. "All that coal you burn up and always feeding somebody—and a dime don't mean nothing to you ——"

"How do you know a dime don't mean nothing to me?" This came out softly, for Linnea had a sudden vision of herself and Rudie in Roylance's Royal Elite Ice Cream Parlor, eating ice cream.

"And no end to it," Sigrid said, "never no end to it. And him so crazy about them kids. It's been sixteen years—and it'll be twenty and twenty-five, and thirty—and then—last June comes along—a night comes along last June—and it's my night, mind you, it ain't yours, not by standing on your head and doing cart wheels all around the world could it be called yours—it's my night—and supper's over and the dishes done and what happens? Olaf stands up in front of me as bold as brass and he says—he says ——" She broke down then. She put her hands up to her face, gulping and howling.

"HE says he wants to take a gold baby buggy up to Myra," Linnea said resolutely, for the words had to be spoken, "that she didn't win in the contest—that he traded a suit of clothes for." She half rose and then sat down again. Sigrid wouldn't want to be touched, patted on the back, embraced like a neighbor in distress.

"In these times," Sigrid said through her wrists, her body racked with sobs, "with times so hard like they are—and no savings—and me getting older—and that cloth cost money. He paid for it! It cost money—and me going without, saving and scrimping to make ends meet. For a idiotic gold baby buggy!"

"Listen, Sigrid," Linnea said, "can't you be lenient with a man? Can't you forgive somebody when they're sorry, when they send you a orgar to try to make up when they write you a letter ——"

Sigrid looked up, her face rigid, the tears glittering in her eyes. "He told you that," she said accusingly. "He tells you everything."

"He never told me about the organ," Linnea said. "He don't tell me everything, not by any means."

"He does! He thinks the sun rises and sets—he's a fool over—and you—you know very well—all these years you been working and scheming ——"

Linnea got up from her chair. "I come here to say how sorry I am about all that's happened," she said. "I come to ask you to take Olaf back, because worries and frets when he don't know how you're making out. I come—for your own sake, for mine too. But I didn't come here to have a wrangle. I didn't invent the church," she said. "I didn't invent polygamy. You and Olaf was converts but I was born into it, just like I was born Swedish. These is the circumstances we're in. Nobody's life is just exactly what they want. Can't we just do as good as we can—and—shake hands?" She put her hand out timidly, and when it was not taken dropped it to her side.

Sigrid arose now, too, and stood facing her. "I suppose he knows you come down here," she said. "I suppose you told him how you was coming down here and talk sweet—so he'll think you was wonderful and not a selfish body in your body and always thinking of somebody else's welfare?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

The West will prove more vulnerable than any other society if it abandons the pursuit of visions and ideals, for more than any other community, it is the product, not of geographical and racial forces, but of the molding power of the human spirit. . . . Racially the United States is a melting pot of every nation under the sun. Only by force of an idea—the "proposition" that men are created equal and possess inalienable rights—has it risen to be the most powerful community in the history of man. Both European society and its extension into the New World have been sustained by a unique faith in man, in his freedom, in his responsibility, in the laws which should safeguard him, in the rights that are his, and in the duties by which he earns those rights. So accustomed are we to this view of man that we do not realize the audacity which was needed to bring it into being. At a time when humanity was subject to every physical calamity, when perpetual labor was needed to wring a livelihood from the soil, when the fatalities of tempest and sickness, and the general recalcitrance of matter lay heavily upon man's spirit, and when the world, unpenetrated by rational discovery, was a vast unknown—in such a time, the Greek and Jewish forebears of our own civilization made their tremendous acts of faith in man and his destiny. They declared him to be the crown of the universe. They saw nature as a field open to his reason and his dominion. The Greeks affirmed his power to build a rational order. The Jews proclaimed him a co-worker in the coming reign of righteousness.

—BARBARA WARD:
Faith and Freedom
(W. W. Norton and Company, Inc.)

For easy days . . .

Only Minute Rice can give you perfect rice

...with no cooking! It's prepared instantly!

Just add to boiling water.

Product of General Foods

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

"I never said a word to him," Linnea said, anger welling, while she tried to remember what Jesus said that time, whatever it was.

"All your friends—that you're supposed to have so many and everybody thinks the sun rises and sets in you—I suppose you told all them you was coming?"

"I never spread it around. It wasn't nothing to spread around." I won't get mad and pick up my umbrella and bang her one over the head, but all I wish, I wish Jesus had got acquainted with her once, that's all I wish, because I bet He'd of changed His tune, because if there's anybody onrier than her, I'd like to know who it is, that's what I'd like to know, unless it's maybe—me, she accused herself, because I could pick up my umbrella and bang her one over the head. (God, You straighten me out and help me, please.)

"Then you'd go home," Sigrid taunted, the tears drying on her cheeks, "and Olaf would come up tonight, and you'd say—maybe in front of the kids—'Well, I went down there to Sigrid,' you'd say, 'and I done all I could,'" she mocked her guest wickedly, "'but I just couldn't do a thing with her, she was so stubborn and mean.' And then he'd praise you ——"

Linnea looked at her.

"—— and think you was so good to come down here to me and try to patch things up—because he knows you're crazy about him and want him all to yourself. You've always wanted him all to yourself. But you're going to get fooled this time," Sigrid said. "Because I'm going to take him back! You coming here today proves just how much you don't want me to take him back, but I'm not going to give you the satisfaction. I'm going to fool you. He's coming here. What do you think of your fine scheme now?"

"Shall I tell him?" Linnea said, her hands and feet beginning to feel oddly numb. "I can just as well stop in at the shop."

"No," Sigrid said, "if that ain't too much to ask. I'll send Hattie up. She's coming home pretty soon and I'll send her."

Linnea stooped down and picked up her umbrella, and hung her purse on her arm. "Well, I'll be going now," she said.

She did not pause anywhere but walked straight home, and only afterward did it come to her that she had not seen anything or anybody. She was all to herself in the world, for some reason, driven within, all her doors and windows shut tight. She who was never at home but going outward always, as the light of a lamp and the heat of a fire are never at home but going outward, was home now, huddled within her walls. She did not think of Sigrid, of Olaf, of the children, of anyone. She had one big whining worry on her mind.

She kept putting her fingers to her throat, trying to feel this thing that had come as she started down Sigrid's steps and heard Sigrid shut the door behind her. One minute there was not a sign of it and the next minute there it was. A goiter. A life-endangering goiter. It must have been growing there for months—maybe years—and she never had the slightest idea until right now. It pressed against her windpipe, so that she could hardly breathe or swallow. She kept trying to feel it with her fingers, walking along, not looking to right or left. They were the most dangerous kind—the inward ones.

She walked faster, her heart thudding and a sickish feeling in the pit of her stomach. She would go to the doctor tomorrow. But doctors cost money and what would she use for that? Nevertheless, she would go—unless she died right here and now in the street, unless she died tonight in her bed, all alone, Olaf not there, Olaf down to Sigrid's.

AGAIN she attempted to feel the goiter, but it only pressed deeper and deeper inside and did not stick out at all. It came to her that it had been quite a while since she shut her eyes, so she shut them and opened them, and discovered they felt like she had been through a sandstorm, hot and dry, dry as a bone, all the moisture dried up. She would ask the doctor about that, too—"Another thing, doctor, I've always had such good eyes and now here all of a sudden here I've got these granulated eyelids!"—if she lived long enough to get home, get supper, go to bed, get up tomorrow and go to a doctor. Doctor Fondoble, that's who she would go to.

She turned onto Quince Street and came past Mrs. Ryding's and the Parmalees' and the Lilygrens'—and in front of her own house there stood an old brown horse, round as a dumpling, and an old farm wagon, not unloaded yet except of the children (their voices came from the back yard like robins lit in the trees), and there was the dear blue granite-iron kettle full of brown eggs and the clothes-basket high-piled and covered with the folded old spotless tablecloth and the bushel of red tomatoes, the last of the season, and the earliest yellow apples. . . . She opened the gate, suddenly weak, and went up the walk unsteadily.

"Gunilla," she bawled like a calf, hardly able to see where she was going, and Gunilla came running around the house. "Gunilla!" she bawled again when she saw her, a watery vision, much as one pearl diver under the waves must look to another.

YEARS after, Gunilla would mention that reunion and say how they both cried like a couple of loons although they had been apart only since last conference, not six months. Linnea crying that hard for joy at the surprise of her sister's unheralded visit got her started, she used to say. And you should have seen them after that!

Next day, Doctor Fondoble did not have a case come in, of inward goiter complicated by granulated eyelids.

A little leaning on a downy heart, a laying down of the load, some pity of self and of the species (a bigger dose of one than of the other), stanch coffee between hot tears, a laugh or two and another pair of shoes, a good and bountiful supper, and certain maladies will fly like birds.

The man came right after breakfast with the note folded six times and tied with a string, like a parcel. "Mrs. Showacy says to deliver this to Mrs. Ecklund," he said, not removing his hat, for the snow was blowing across the porch in heavy wet flakes the size of half dollars.

"Come in," Linnea said, opening the back door wider, "and warm yourself by the fire while I get ready."

"Oh, I ain't got no wagon," the man said. "I walked. And I guess you'll have to do the same. The streetcars ain't running."

Linnea had untied the note, smoothed it out and was reading it. We need you, Mrs. Showacy had written, bad. "I guess you're their neighbor," she said, looking up.

"Yes," he said. "Me and my wife. The girl was took this morning." He cleared his throat in something like embarrassment. "You'll go won't you? She's —— It's a doggone shame ain't it?"

"I'll go," Linnea said, "of course."

The house she turned back to, in spite of the disorder left in the wake of yesterday's celebration, for the day before was Christmas and Ingeborg and her family had come in time for breakfast and stayed till midnight, looked warm and inviting, the kitchen, for all the stack of dishes, too pleasant to want to leave in a hurry. She sighed, began to get herself ready and pack the small satchel she always carried.

It's a real long ways, Linnea thought as she pushed open the gate and started down Quince Street. She had left the gleam of lamplight behind her, though it was not half past eight in the morning. But no light showing anywhere in the Rydings' residence, it surprised her when, having turned the corner on her way up to Center Street, who should come behind her but Mr. Ryding in his smart buggy driving his team of horses.

"Whoa," he called out, and pulled up to a stop. "You want to take a chance on a ride Mrs. Ecklund?" he asked. "I'm on my way to the store."

"I didn't see no light in your windows as I come past, Mr. Ryding," Linnea said, climbing up into the seat beside him, "so I thought you folks was sleeping off the big day yesterday."

"It wasn't so big," Mr. Ryding said. "You'd about your business, I see." He looked down

UNTIL YOU CAME

By BARBARA SHOOK CONKLIN

Small, as vulnerable as a bird,
Is love's first voice, the first faint rumor,
The quiver of wings, the first shy murmur
Of the beautiful song: Only you heard.

Slight, so easily quenched is the flame,
Hid in the darkness the small bright burning,
The fire unfanned, the golden yearning,
The room unentered—until you came.

How to keep your pots and pans shiny bright and just like new!

Clean them with S.O.S.® after every use. It's so simple! S.O.S., with soap right in the pad, shines as it cleans . . . so daily care with S.O.S. keeps pans bright for years.

© The S. O. S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A. • S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

t the small satchel. "Somebody's going to be retty happy before this day's over, huh?"

"Not so happy, I'm afraid," Linnea said. It's the girl that worked for your wife, Mr. Ryding. Poor Cleora Showacy."

Mr. Ryding shook the reins. "So her time as come. I don't know when anything has truck me as more of a pity. But you—you robably feel like my wife does."

"I don't believe I do," Linnea said. "Unless he feels very blamed sorry."

"She—— I sometimes wonder why women ——" Mr. Ryding began, and stopped. He looked at the horses' heads bobbing in the loud of their breath. "Mrs. Ecklund," he aid, "do you know anything to cure . . . ervousness? I've been meaning to ask someody but I just don't know who to go to. 'hoebe won't go to a doctor. She don't think he's sick!"

"There's different kinds of nervousness," innea said. "A lot of different kinds wear heirselves out in time, I guess. Nervousness, mean, usually it will wear itself out."

"You know my wife," Mr. Ryding said.

"Not very well," Linnea said politely. "She on't mix so much with the neighborhood. We ll think she is very stylish and—and ——" he could not find the word she wanted, so ave up.

"She's changed," the man said, reaching round in his back pocket for his handkerhief, only to return it in a moment unused. The last year or so, I don't know what's got nto her. She's changed—every way. She used o take such pride with her house, but now ere two or three weeks ago she fired that Irs. Jensen. She used to help with the heavy eaning ——"

"I know," Linnea said. "Ingeborg Jensen a friend of mine."

"—— so she's gone—and nobody could suit er with the ironing after Cleora left. She was ery upset over Cleora's trouble, for some eason, although she doesn't sympathize, so it n't that she's upset that way—I don't know hat it is. The laundry don't get done, but iles up and piles up, and part of it's dampened own and mildewed. I tried to get it all toether in a big bundle and take it down to the undry. But do you think she'd let me? No, ree. She threw it all in the parlor and locked e door, and that's where it is this minute."

"Goodness," Linnea said, turning concerned es upon him. She had heard many tales of Irs. Ryding's aberrations in the past few onths, but it seemed more kindly to pretend norance.

BEFORE, everything had to look just so, and ow it's like a—a sty," he said. "I've sent for er mother, but she's an old lady past seventy nd she don't want to make the trip till spring. thought maybe she could straighten her out. he worst is the way she don't sleep. That is omething terrible, you can take my word on ." He headed the horses up Second South State Street. "Something terrible," he reeated. "Don't sleep a wink, not a wink. I'll ink maybe she's settled down and I'll doze f, and then maybe I'll happen to wake up, pen my eyes, and here she'll be"—he shived—"roaming around, like a damn ghost, you'll pardon my French, Mrs. Ecklund. A mn ghost, here, there and everywhere in the ark, packing something in her arms—I don't now why—a vase, or a dish, or even her pe with the fur neckpiece, all night long. say to her, 'Phoebe, what are you roaming round for? What are you ——'"

Linnea repressed a shudder, feeling very old. "That ain't normal," she said. "Your ore, Mr. Ryding. There's your store, and I'll t off here. I certainly thank you for the ride."

He did not pull on the reins, but slackened em. "I might as well take you on a little rther," he said. "Where do they live anyway? he Showacys?"

"Down in the Third Ward. On Seventh outh between Second and Third East. But my, never in the world expected ——"

"You see there's nobody on the streets," Ir. Ryding said, "or hardly anybody. There on't be much business today. I can easy are the time, and—and—you deal with omen, Mrs. Ecklund. Maybe you can think something. I'm glad we met up this morng. She won't go to a doctor."

"Bring a doctor to her, then, why don't you?"

"She'd do away with herself! You never heard anything like her when she gets started. I want a doctor, she says, so I can hire him to poison her, and if that's what I want, why, she'll save us the trouble and kill herself beforehand." He said this softly, and did not turn his shamed face Linnea's way.

"Poison her!"

"Of all, that's the worst, I guess," he said. "The terrible suspicioning. It's about got me to the end of my rope."

"The poor, tormented thing," Linnea said in horror. "She's got to be took in hand someway. I'll tell you what, Mr. Ryding. When I get done with this case ——"

"What could you do?" the man said miserably. "Nothing. What can anybody do? I don't know what's to become of us."

"That there's the number," Linnea said, pointing. She cast him a sympathetic glance. "That house there, on the right. Mr. Ryding, don't you lose heart. Don't you do it. But—how can you help it?" She got out, he handed her the satchel and she stood a moment looking up at him. "How can you help it?" she repeated.

"I can't," he said. "I'm at the end of my rope."

Linnea gathered up her skirts with one hand and made as if to start off, but paused. "There's just one thing about a bad situation," she said. "I've noticed, and you have, too, I guess. You can't do nothing, nobody can't do nothing, but the situation itself, it can do something. It don't never stand still in one place. It either gets better, or it gets worse and worse and worse, and then something busts and it's over, bingo, just like that. Nothing stands still, Mr. Ryding, nothing. Bad situations no more than anything else!"

She was to recall her words next Fast Day.

(To Be Continued)

Original Chicken Recipes from the Poultry and Egg National Board's Master File

And Accent improves the flavor of these all-time favorite chicken dishes

Make every one of America's favorite —or your prize—chicken dishes sing with flavor! How? By using Ac'cent, nature's own flavor booster, to bring out all the mouth-watering goodness!

You see, Ac'cent, pure monosodium glutamate, is the only seasoning that adds no flavor of its own but intensifies the flavors of chicken and other foods, including meats, vegetables, fish, gravies. To be a better cook, use Ac'cent to bring back and bring out natural flavors. Ac'cent is on sale in grocery stores everywhere in the United States and Canada.

Write to Ac'cent for your FREE copy of all-time favorite Chicken Recipes. Look for the Broiled Chicken Recipe on the Ac'cent shelf in your neighborhood store.

makes food flavors sing

Ac'cent®

PURE MONOSODIUM GLUTAMATE

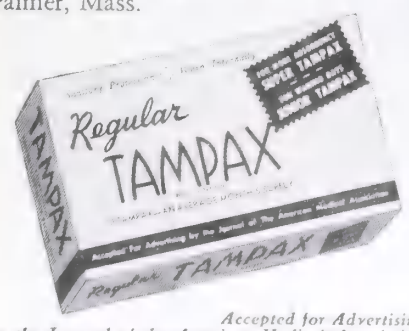
In 1-lb. Gourmet...8-oz. Economy...4-oz. Home... 1-oz. Introductory size.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

AC'CENT INTERNATIONAL, Dept. L, 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois, U.S.A.

You've a right to be pleased with yourself

This month is the "next time," isn't it, that you're going to use Tampax. You made up your own mind—and perhaps you already have that little Tampax package tucked in your purse. You're going to have a wonderful sense of freedom with internal sanitary protection. Here are some things you can look forward to:



You'll feel so poised. No belts, pins or pads—nothing to hamper you, embarrass you or make you feel uncomfortable.

You'll feel so fastidious. Fear of telltale odor vanishes. And in sharp contrast to external pads, wearer's hands need not even touch the Tampax. There are no disposal problems, either.

You'll feel so secure. Tampax really protects—you can even wear it while you're showering, tubbing or taking a swim.

You'll feel so assured. The Tampax you wear is made of pure white cotton—and nothing but cotton. A doctor invented this product, and its high standards of quality have never changed.

All three Tampax absorbencies (Regular, Super, Junior) are carried by drug and notion counters everywhere. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

THE BRIDE'S SISTER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59

to go. No wonder he was acting crazy. He was making a terrible spectacle of himself, the discarded suitor who until now had seemed above all misfortune, a lucky, brotherly fellow with a good heart. Well, Caroline had made a poor choice!

"Don't have a big wedding. It's too much," Caroline said, looking down on Jock, tossing the tennis ball. She bit her lip in delight at the very sight of him. "The main theme gets lost. The idea, I mean."

"You'd have died without this wedding," Ginger said.

"Well, I am dreadful." Caroline laughed. She studied the spot on her gray skirt. "My favorite skirt, and they didn't get the stain out."

"That's off Bolly's car," Ginger said.

Caroline looked at her sharply, surprised. Then she said, as though she saw into Ginger's heart with these sudden, new powers she had acquired lately, "But you'll go away someday, Ginger. It's just that I am going first."

Ginger said nothing. Why was she so mean to Caroline? She could not understand herself. If only someone could tell her who she was now that she was no longer the younger sister but the bride's sister. What was required of her, then? It was settled for Caroline. Her place was beside Jock, and she belonged to the wedding itself and not to her sister, her family or this house. As the bride, Caroline knew a special, marvelous, womanly secret that had removed her from all of them and the past. Who would guess this was the girl who had, not so long ago, bawled out her eyes because she considered herself a failure as a woman? "I've got no appeal. A woman without appeal has no future!" Caroline had wailed, her face beet-red. Who would think that less than a year ago Caroline had been blindly, madly and horribly in love with Bolly Jackson? She referred to him, casually, as though he were a beloved bachelor uncle or a shaggy, faithful Airedale in need of an occasional pat. Everyone in town talked about how cruel Caroline was. Was love so trivial and easy it could be thrown aside ruthlessly like an old skirt with a grease stain, no longer good enough to wear?

"But I can't help it," Caroline said gently. "It's the right thing to do."

"We promised we'd do it together. We said we'd be married at the same time," Ginger protested, saying what had been in her heart all these weeks.

"I know. But I—I'd be afraid Jock would find someone else, Ginger. Can't you forgive me? A little?"

"Oh, I'll survive," she said.

"Look." Caroline sat on the edge of the bed. "Don't be sore about Bolly. Don't spoil things. Of course I'll always love Bolly in a way because he was my first love, but it would have been wrong." She assumed a very bright, maternal manner. "Do you think you could do something for me? I mean, I'll never ask another favor. Honest."

"Yes, you will," she said miserably.

"Someone's got to talk sense to Bolly. People are saying dreadful things. Jock's the stranger in town, and you know how loyal everyone is to Bolly. They don't mean to be so cruel. But now Bolly's turned into a hermit, sitting up there in the attic and peering down on all of us through a spyglass. Yes, he does! He knows everything that goes on here."

GINGER listened, staring down at the bridegroom who, in his tennis whites, looked like a figure in an old garden scene. By her choosing of him, Caroline had made Jock seem taller, older and wiser. There was nothing Caroline could not do these days! I'll never, never learn the secret! Ginger thought, but even as she listened to Caroline's calm voice, which seemed to come from far away where Caroline was half trapped in a dream of her own making, something clicked inside herself. A part of herself seemed to swell into an enormous wave, a rising wish or tide, and then fell into place absolutely right. This place was different from the one she had occupied for years—quieter, more wonderful and somehow quite thrilling. She had a sweet-and-salty taste in her mouth. She felt light, poised as though at a given sign she would execute a perfect swan dive. She was taking command in this house from her sister, whose time was over here. Perhaps this would be the very last good talk they might have in this house. In some way Caroline was shrewdly telling her a thousand things—and good-by.

"Are you sorry about Bolly, Carol?" she asked softly.

"Heavens, no! It's just that I want everyone concerned with my wedding to be very happy too."

"Is Bolly drinking?" That was what happened in books and movies, though she could not imagine him like that. She had been so concerned about her own place at the wedding, she had forgotten him. It was not fair that Bolly should be unhappy too!

"Worse. He waits. Wherever I go, there he is. Yesterday, mother and I came out of the dressmaker's, and there he was all messy and unshaven in his old car. It spoils things—for Jock too."

"But Bolly would never, never permit anyone to destroy him!"

"Well, I feel like an ax murderess with his blood on my hands," Caroline said quite seriously.

Ginger felt like laughing. Was Caroline trying to hold on to Bolly in some way? Was she

The man who tries to work for the good, believing in its eventual victory, while he may suffer setback and even disaster, will never know defeat. The only deadly sin I know is cynicism.
—HENRY L. STIMSON

unwilling to give up her admirer? "Nobody ruins Bolly Jackson," she said sternly, surprised at herself.

"What do you know about him? He gave you a box of orange creams once, and a corsage that time we went to the club for mother's birthday. But love is terrible, Ginger. Marvelous too. You don't seem to understand how people get when they are rejected. If Jock rejected me, I should die. And what about Auntie Bliss—you know, with all the cats? And old Judge Pembroke—that's because someone threw him over."

"Oh!" Ginger was stunned. Where had she been all these years not to have known such things? It was time she absorbed some of Caroline's knowledge before it was too late.

"Go and see him," Caroline said, her eyes very narrow. She seemed to know exactly what ought to be done. "Explain things to him."

"It's your affair," she said stiffly. For some reason, she wanted to hurt Caroline the way Caroline had hurt Bolly. It was all scrambled in her head—as though she, too, had become an outcast from the wedding, along with Bolly. "Did Bolly refuse to usher?" she asked.

"No, but who knows what he may do? Set fire to the church. Jock's worried because they were school friends, and now Bolly waits around corners as though he wants to fight. Can you imagine Jock at his own wedding with a black eye or maybe a broken arm? And Bolly spies on us. I have nightmares he's reading curses over our marriage, and we'll have no luck."

"Ah, Carol, Bolly wouldn't do that!"

"Go and see him," Caroline insisted.

"But what can I say?"

"It'll come to you," Caroline said with confidence.

But whenever she had tried to entertain him in the past, while he was waiting for Caroline, she had been dull and awkward. If he looked at her, he did not see her, for he had been blind and deaf to anyone but Caroline. Besides, no one had ever required her to do anything so important, so diplomatic. That was always Caroline's work. Now it would be like facing a stranger. All her talk with him had been in the correct pattern such as college men employed to make friends and allies of kid sisters. True, he had given her the ornate box of orange creams, but only as an uncle might give to the child of the house. The corsage had been a lucky moment in which he had understood her need to be as wise, beautiful and poised as Caroline, two years older than she. She still had the dusty bits of that corsage hidden in her jewel box.

"I wouldn't know where to find him," she said.

"Sulking somewhere with everyone to see! Making a foolish spectacle of himself. Under bushes. Around corners. Or up in his attic study with a spyglass trained on us. It's too horrible for words!"

"BOLLY JACKSON never sulked a day in his whole life!" she said hotly. She turned, a tall, slender girl in faded jeans and a worn plaid shirt, going down the stairs and into the shady street in a quiet fury that Bolly would permit everyone in town to talk about him like this, that he would make such a plea for mercy and pity. Her anger was such that she had no doubts of the success of her mission. Somehow she must convince him that he was as she remembered him. Her steps did not falter until she reached Bolly's house, six blocks away, a white Victorian edifice with lots of gingerbread and a widow's walk from the sailing days when the town had been a seaport. Bolly's mother, whom everyone called Gertie, a little brown gardening woman, looked up at her as she stood uncertainly with one hand on the gate. What was she to do now that she was here?

"Ah, Caroline," Gertie Jackson said warmly. "I've been hoping you'd come."

"It's me, Ginger—not Caroline, Gertie," she explained meekly. Bolly's mother had a reputation for vagueness, though the important things were never confusing to her.

"I know, I know." She stood erect, kneading the small of her back. "How are things at your house?"

"The wedding, nothing more. I—where's Bolly, Gertie?"

"Up in his daddy's study in the attic with that spyglass. He knows when anyone sneezes over at your house. It's wicked. A disgrace to me and to his daddy's memory." Her fierce little black eyes snapped. "I'm mortally ashamed of him. As though the world wasn't full of women who can love him. A young man must not let himself go like this."

"Yes," she agreed. Was nothing going to be as it had been before the wedding? The specter of old Judge Pembroke, an eccentric who lived on the outskirts of town in a house full of ticking clocks, overwhelmed her. Someone must save Bolly from a similar fate.

The sharp, intelligent eyes met hers. "Men are soft, Ginger, unless we women do for them. There he is sulking and acting the mad fool, taking the limelight off the bride herself. Only women should go feeble over lost loves. In a man, it's a weakness." She patted Ginger's arm. "Go up and talk to him." She hesitated. "No doubt Caroline's upset?"

"Well," Ginger admitted, "she says she's got his blood on her hands."

"Killed my boy? Never, I say—never in a million years." She gave Ginger a little push, and Ginger went silently into the house that was always cool, smelling of herbs and flowers, winter or summer. There was no sound anywhere. She climbed the back stairs to the top floor where Bolly's father had made a kind of attic study to which he, a professor of natural sciences, might retreat whenever he chose. The door was open. Bolly lay on a curved horsehair sofa. He had a lean, well-disciplined body and a lean, stern kind of face, and he had never looked at anyone but Caroline. He wore a pair of torn tennis shorts and a black turtle-neck sweater, suggesting to Ginger that he was already in mortal peril of joining the town's little company of eccentrics and lost souls. He lay as still as stone, though she imagined she could see his heart beating under the sweater. He held a telescope

CONTINUED ON PAGE 90

ou look wonderful...because you feel wonderful when you use

YARDLEY LAVENDER

for the freshest, youngest feeling in the world

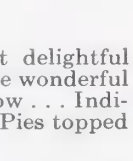
s so much more than a delightful essence. Yardley Lavender is a feeling. here's no lift like its crisp coolness, no other fragrance that makes you l so fresh so long. Enjoy Yardley Lavender in its many other forms. The sence, from $1.10; dusting powder, $1.75 (all plus tax). Created in Eng- nd, made in U.S.A. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

How to Make Six Little Deep-Dish Berry Pies, Quick!

by Marie Gifford, Armour Home Economist and famous pastry authority

Here's the easiest, most delightful way I know to serve those wonderful fresh berries in season now . . . Individual Deep-Dish Berry Pies topped with flaky tender crusts.

Yes, and the secret of a crust that puffs up light and flaky is my 5-Minute Pastry Method using Armour Star Lard.



This is the New-Type lard with new fluffy texture. It blends easier, and digests like butter. Armour Star Lard makes flakier crusts than expensive shortenings. And, it needs no refrigeration. Look for Armour Star Lard in green and white carton or tin.

My Easy 5-Minute Pastry Method. Measure 2 cups all-purpose flour, then sift with 1 tsp. salt. Blend in ⅔ cup Armour Star Lard until mixture resembles coarse meal. Add 4 Tbsp. tap water. Mix lightly, press into ball. Roll out to ⅛" thickness.

To Make the Fruit Filling: Blend ½ cup sugar with ⅛ tsp. salt and ¼ cup flour or quick-cooking granular tapioca. Mix with 4 cups blackberries or black raspberries. Place in 6 (¾ cup) baking dishes. Dot each with 1 tsp. butter.

To Make the Flaky Top Crust: Roll out pastry and cut tops 1 inch larger than dishes. Place on pies and crimp edges. Prick for steam to escape. Bake in 425° F. oven for 25 min. or until pastry is browned.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET

32 new pie recipes. How-to-do-it illustrations. Write to: Marie Gifford, Dept. 157, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. A carton top will be appreciated.

Armour Star Lard

The Modern New-Type Lard That Makes Flakier Crusts

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 88

to his right eye, his right elbow braced on a pile of lawbooks. Now and then he scratched his left foot on the edge of the window. The room was bare and orderly, and the light at this hour softened everything. She stared, fascinated. It was here in this very room that Bolly had studied for his law examinations last winter. It was here he had written sonnets to Caroline and thrown them away. Gertie had told her so. "A lot of very bad, stinking poetry has gone down the drain with Caroline, Ginger," his mother had told her. The older woman had singled her out at teas and parties, talking to her as though Bolly was their problem. "Yes, my boy has talent. He'll make a good lawyer someday, once he's learned something, and Caroline will teach him. She'll whip him into shape for another woman—a wiser one, eh?"

GINGER's heart stood still at the sight of him like this, here in this room where he had come to hide his hurt. At the same time, something of the wedding, a strain of music or a murmur of beautiful words, seemed to be just a little beyond her reach but still closer to her than any of the preparations that had been rocking the house these past weeks.

"I hear you," he said in a flat, dead voice. "Go away."

She waited.

"Women are bad for me. They bring me no luck. Ah, I see Madame Regan is now delivering the bridal gown. The shroud. The pièce de résistance."

She was silent.

"Well, then," he said wearily, flipping his hand at her, "if you must, come in. Sit down. Gloat if you like."

"Thanks." He was going to get no pity from her. She sat at his desk, leaning on her elbows. When her father had a low mood, her mother merely listened to him until he had talked himself out, and then she said, "Shall we have a nice cup of coffee now, dear?" and that worked. It was the first time she understood this scene she had observed so many times. She would do the same, now.

"And what is her message? Does she ask for a cup of my blood? My bones in a bag? My very flesh?"

Ginger bit her lip, silent and angry. Where was the Bolly she had once known, before whose splendor she had been awkward and blushing? Was nothing ever again to be as grand, as perfect as before Caroline's wedding?

"Isn't it enough she's ruined my life?" he said roughly.

What could she say? Let him spend his anger even as she wished to spend her own.

"Or does she want her love letters back?"

He swung around to face her. She saw, then, the shadow of pain across his eyes. None of his mockery could hide that. She recognized it because it was hers too. He saw it there in her eyes. She sat unmoving under his calm study like a schoolgirl with her feet together and on the floor, her elbows against the desk and her chin in her hand.

"Well?"

"She never mentioned any letters, Bolly," she said softly.

"La belle dame sans merci," he sighed. He put his hand on his stomach. "I'm getting an ulcer."

She frowned. She could not endure such talk from him. It was unworthy of Bolly Jackson.

"Maybe it's a liver condition," he mused. He studied his bare feet sadly.

"Nonsense. Your mother says everyone in your family has good stomachs."

"Is that so?" he said angrily. This anger, she knew, belonged to one who like herself had no place at the wedding. Perhaps he had imagined this wedding many times, and now that he was not the bridegroom he felt he was an outsider at the ceremony. "I'll have you know, Miss Ginger Bennett, I've endured these pains for ages. At night they gnaw at my insides—like termites!"

"Nuts," she said, scorning her own pain as well. She tried not to smile.

He studied her as though for the first time, and she suffered this, meeting his eyes with an air of poise and remoteness. He ought to be ashamed for hiding up here and spying. Caroline, the wedding, no one else had anything to do with the way she felt at this moment. It was altogether separate from the wedding. She stared at the heap of lawbooks, the chewed fountain pen and then back at the curious, puzzled young man who found her so interesting.

"What is it, kid?" he asked kindly. "You got no place to go these days either?"

She nodded, tears stinging her eyes.

"Left in the cold, hey?" He pursed his mouth thoughtfully. He rose, walking back and forth and slapping his stomach to a rumba beat, a habit he had acquired in his solitude. He started to pick up the telescope and then, flushing, he changed his mind. "Why did you come if you haven't brought a message from her?"

"Caroline asked me to talk sense to you. You're spoiling her wedding."

"I see." He rubbed the back of his neck. "That's the reason you came?"

"No." She felt brave and capable. "I came because everyone is talking. You're making a public pest of yourself."

"Let them talk!" But his voice sounded hollow and uncertain.

"And if you cared for Caroline, you'd want her to be happy. You'd accept this wedding."

"You women have no hearts."

"Oh, Bolly," she said, impatient. She passed him and went slowly down the stairs. In a moment he called to her that he would take her home, but she did not wait for him. When she reached the garden, he met her at the gate. There was no sign of his mother. They walked down the musky, darkening streets where he had walked so many times with Caroline, hand in hand, and where she, Ginger, had walked alone or with friends but never with Bolly like this beside her.

He began to talk, then, as though he knew she was on his side and that she understood too. "I keep remembering our plans and all the promises we made, Ginger. I mean, I'm ashamed for acting like this and really rather bored with it. But there's something in this situation I don't grasp—like destiny, maybe. And then I think of the wedding, and I wonder if I shall manage well. I don't want people shaking their heads over me as though I'm the corpse at the wedding. Poor old Bolly Jackson, dead and about to be buried instead of married."

"Oh, I know," she nodded. She walked a little closer to him. She found that it was easy to do.

He paused near the corner street lamp. "How old are you now, Ginger?"

"Seventeen. I'll graduate in three weeks Bolly."

He considered this news thoughtfully. The walked in step and silently until they reache her house, the edge of the garden where las year he and Caroline used to stand for hour at a time, and she had watched them from he bedroom window wondering what they sai and did together. Now they could see Carolin and Jock on the screened porch, a single bluis blur of white sitting on the glider and listenin to the summer music on the radio.

"I was thinking," he said carefully, "w could be a pair at the wedding—if you like. mean, sort of look after each other?"

"Yes," she said quickly. It was only the that she could imagine the wedding and her self in the mauve dress. Love—so long dreame of and longed for—took on an immediate fac and presence for her. Yet she was afraid, too for there was Caroline, lovelier and wiser an knowing her womanly secret, sitting withi the sound of Bolly's voice. She felt a curious sharp pain like a sword across her heart. Wa Caroline, the bride and sister, an enemy a well?"

"Hello, you two!" Caroline called.

Ginger waited. He put his hand on he shoulder. "We'll go up and see them," h said and kept his hand there. When they cam into the soft light from the living-room win dows, Caroline looked at them with a lon look, turning reluctantly away from her bride groom's loving, radiant eyes. Still, Ginger wa not sure. Would the very sight of Carolin tantalize him into acting like an eccentric boy Was Caroline going to try to keep a spell ove him, even now? She was afraid to hope.

"Know something?" Bolly said. "We'v all forgotten about Ginger's graduation Carol."

Ginger did not hear what they said then for Caroline made a secret, funny face just a both of them used to make together at a cir cus, or a play or a movie when they wer moved to particular pleasure and could no find the right words to tell each other. Caro line was telling her that she had known a along what Ginger herself had only ha known. Caroline had sent her to Bolly Caroline had betrayed no one, after all. Ho wise of her! Now, at last, she could think o Caroline's leaving, content to let her go. An now, with Bolly sitting beside her in th flowery darkness, acting like himself again it seemed she could not wait for the wedding She had what Caroline called a wedding fac and a wedding heart and had found her plac in the ceremony.

END

"I'd like to call my husband—he still thinks it was the lobster I ate."

New G-E Portable Steam Iron Weighs Only 1¾ Pounds... Does All Pressing Jobs Quickly, Easily!

ightweight, AC-DC steam and automatic dry iron folds up for easy storage...costs only $14.95.*

Never before has there been an iron that weighs so little . . . and yet does such an efficient job!

Special ironing and pressing jobs like delicate ruffles . . . shirt sleeves . . . accordion pleats . . . can be done in less time with this new G-E!

No need to "bear down" to get out wrinkles. Heat and moisture, not weight, are what smooth out the most difficult wrinkles without effort. There's plenty of steam in this new portable to do a perfect job!

Without the bulb, it becomes a fine automatic dry iron. And it works on both AC and DC!

Keeping clothes always crisp and fresh looking is easy with the new G-E Portable Steam Iron.

General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division. Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Manufacturer's recommended retail or Fair Trade price.*

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

OPEN HANDLE AND COMPACT DESIGN let you do more jobs more easily. You save time and yet do a professional-looking job.

AT HOME OR ANYWHERE this handiest of all irons steams wrinkles out of dresses. presses woolen suits, makes ironing easier.

IDEAL FOR TRAVELING because it's so compact. Iron slips into its own carrying case. Takes up no more space than a pair of slippers.

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

Traveling with children—how to do it, and stay well and happy in the process

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

Dr. Spock says: "The hardest but the most important rule of all with children on a long trip is to stop for the night by 4 P.M."

AMONG the good letters I've received from many of you is a wonderfully practical one from Helen Thomas Irwin, a distinguished musician, all about traveling with a small child. You'll enjoy reading it as she wrote it:

"My husband is a musician. I am, too, but retired from 'active duty' to work at being a mother. We have traveled with our boy since he was seven weeks old until now, when we are temporarily settled in Chicago and he is five and a half years old.

"We were nervous parents, the baby having arrived late in our lives, and we being used to quite another type of life and hours. I had a choice to make. I could remain in New York with the baby and let my husband travel alone, or I could gather up my wee son and go too. I chose the latter. Naturally, as a woman musician, I had traveled a great deal, and I knew how to do it and how to stay well and happy in the process. But, you know, traveling with a harp is one thing. It is quite another with a child. I had much to learn 'the hard way,' of course, but so far we have succeeded and are all intact, very adaptable people, and all well.

"So many people now travel with children. Any airport, any train station is full of mothers and wee ones who would not have dared risk it a few years ago. On many trips I have seen fantastic things happen which could have been prevented with a little advice. For instance, mothers making a forty-eight-hour trip with two bottles in their kit. Both get broken—and the baby has to starve. This has happened so often that I know of a dining-car steward who can't stand it any longer and now carries a nipple which will fit over a pop bottle. (He figures he can have the chef make that sterile, and he cannot stand any more babies crying with hunger and a frantic mother trying to push scrambled eggs down a child who has never had solid food.)

"No matter how hot it is when you board a train or plane, a sweater and a pair of long pants will be handy. It can get cold as ice in the air conditioning. You carry drinking water, which is bottled spring water, available at any drugstore (almost), and in each city you buy that same water. A child cannot adjust to constantly changing water. Loose bowels and illness result. (Even 'old troupers' of adults buy bottled water and don't keep changing.) You carry enough nursing bottles that if an accident happens, you have a spare or two. You also carry a small jar of prune juice, or prune mash; travel often brings constipation to the child who has never been away. Prunes will produce a normal movement. Laxatives won't.

"You also always carry food. Fruit, crackers, sandwiches or something that you could feed a child if the diner is full, or if you are on a plane that doesn't serve lunch, even though it is lunchtime for the children. (Planes don't figure the time it takes to get to the airport, and how hungry a little child can get.) A vacuum bottle of milk, hard-boiled eggs, bananas and cheese (if the child does not have a tendency to constipation) are easy to carry, and often make the difference between a good trip and a miserable one. Very often, planes do not have any milk on board, but they do not object to your carrying a bag of food.

"On a long trip, a new little toy, hidden away, can be a wonderful surprise when the child begins to get tired and restless. Or a new storybook. (Better, really, to have a picture book, since it is often hard to read to a child on a plane because of noise.) A new pencil and a tiny pad of paper will keep a little child of under five happy quite a long time.

"The most important thing to carry is a box of salted crackers. They can do wonders for a stomach that is beginning to get airsick or trainsick. It is an old remedy for pregnant women, and it certainly works for children. Ah, the salted crackers that I've passed around in these five years. Take a large box of cleansing tissues.

"One of the greatest boons to the traveling mother is the plastic tablecloth, large size, purchased at any dime store. You buy the thin, transparent kind, which takes little space. It is best to have two. One goes over the mattress of the hotel bed (or the bed of the relatives you are visiting) in the case of the child still small enough to wet the bed. This piece of plastic can also be handed to the Pullman porter to protect the mattress on the berth of the train. (He doesn't care for wet mattresses, either, and there is a man to have on 'your side' and keep on your side throughout any trip.) The thin, plastic tablecloth is much easier to carry than the old rubber pad.

"The other tablecloth is laid over the carpet whenever the child plays in the living room (or any other room, for that matter). It is especially valuable in the case of water colors or crayon work, or clay. It keeps him clean (from what may well be a filthy carpet) and keeps the carpet from spots which may anger a hotel manager. It is cheap to buy—priceless as a 'nerve-rester' for mothers.

"We always go to apartment hotels, and I suppose most people traveling with children do that too. It is better to clean a kitchen or kitchenette than have your child get sick in a strange restaurant or refuse to eat in the midst of such excitement. In these apartment hotels, for a secret reason known only to managers of hotels, the space underneath the table and chairs for eating purposes is carpeted. That's where you use the second piece of plastic tablecloth again. You put it under his chair. Thus any spilled egg is neatly disposed of by merely washing off the plastic.

"A lot of hotel managers are allergic to small children. I don't know that I can blame them. Therefore, when a mother makes a hotel reservation, she must state that she is bringing a child or children. It is better to be refused admittance beforehand than to reach your destination in the middle of the night, only to be presented with a small sign saying 'No dogs or children allowed.'

"As for the 'food sack' which simply must be carried these days on any kind of trip (I use an inexpensive bag used by many people for carrying bowling balls), I forgot to tell you that I also add a small supply of lollipops. I am not a believer in candy for children, but on trips I always have a supply of lollipops. They take a long time to eat . . . and are frequently 'just the thing' not only for your child, but for the children of fellow passengers. Naturally you ask a mother's permission. Heaven knows, it is a terrible experience to make a long trip with somebody's child crying most of the way.

"The last thing I have to suggest applies only to mothers who must do extensive traveling with children. I bought a very small suitcase for Dean to carry himself. There are round cardboard ones in the dime store which cost a dollar, and better ones, the size of a small lunch box, in drugstores. This suitcase he packed himself before every trip. The contents changed as he grew older. When we began, at the age of 2½, with the suitcase, it was full of animal crackers, a package of raisins, 'fuff-fuffs' (bits of yarn he held while sucking his thumb and going to sleep) and a lollipop. As he has grown older, he fills the case with small cars, strings of beads, old keys, small containers of pennies, small memo pads, pencils and crayons. He packs this bag (it measures about 8″x6″) himself, and he is in charge of it. It is placed under his seat, and when he gets tired of looking out the window, he can open his 'private suitcase' and play with the things. This is a good idea for mothers who have a lot of trips to make. The child, beginning at about 2½, knows better than you do what he'd like to play with on the trip. Only the suitcase has to be kept small enough that he can carry it.

"Oh—one more important thing! When you get to a new place, hotel or otherwise, even if it is late, let the child explore it completely! They are like cats in this respect! If you put them right to bed before they get a chance to look the place over, they wake up in the night and decide to see it! We learned this the hard way! Sometimes we thought Dean was too tired to be allowed to explore the new apartment hotel. He went right to sleep, and we did, too, since my husband faced the training of a whole new orchestra the following day. But those times that we did not allow Dean to explore the new place, he woke up at about 1:30 A.M. and decided to see where he was. Nothing could get him to sleep again until he had seen every inch of it. We learned to let him do the exploring before we put him to bed."

This letter covers so much of the ground about traveling with a small child that I need only to fill in with a few points about babies. The biggest problem is formula. If you'll be traveling only one day you can prepare the bottles as usual, chill them in the refrigerator, then put them in the sterilizing pail and pack it full of chunks and pieces of ice. Wrap the sides and bottom of the pail and line the inside of the cover with ten layers of newspaper, which is a good insulator. If you have a picnic icebox or ice bucket, you can pack the bottles in ice in that.

If you are going on a train that has a diner and don't want to carry a large iced pail, put the sterilized formula into a sterilized quart bottle and ask the porter to put it in the refrigerator in the diner. At each feeding pour the required amount into the nursing bottle. Afterward, wash the bottle and nipple thoroughly with hot water, soap and bottle brush and it will be reasonably clean for the next feeding.

For a trip of only a few hours, one or two nursing bottles of formula, well chilled, can be wrapped individually in ten layers of newspaper, without ice.

For a trip of more than one day I think it is easiest, for a baby on an evaporated-milk formula, to make up each bottle separately just before feeding. You carry as many small five-ounce cans of evaporated milk as there will be feedings, and as many quart- or pint-sized bottles of bottled spring water as you will need for mixing. As Mrs. Irwin says, these can be

CONTINUED ON PAGE 94

Now buy Delsey in your favorite towel colors

Fine and firm and soft like Kleenex tissues

SPECIAL OFFER!

4 Luxury Guest Towels

Regular $2.00 value only $1.00 with any 2 Delsey wrappers

NEW FINGERTIP TOWELS BY DUNDEE – 11 x 18 INCHES

These fringed guest towels in pastels and white are Dundee's quality terry. Deep looped; highly absorbent. Mercerized borders; reinforced selvages. Guaranteed fast colors. Send today for as many sets as you wish.

Order your sets of luxury guest towels NOW!

Address: Delsey, Box 7739, Chicago 77, Illinois.

Please send me ____ sets of 4 guest towels. I enclose $1.00 and 2 Delsey wrappers for each set ordered.

NOTE: Indicate sets desired: ____ sets of 4 pink towels; ____ sets of 4 yellow towels; ____ sets of 4 blue towels; ____ sets of 4 green towels; ____ sets of 4 white towels; or ____ sets of assorted colors (one towel of each color – pink, yellow, blue and green).

Name _____
(PLEASE PRINT PLAINLY)

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

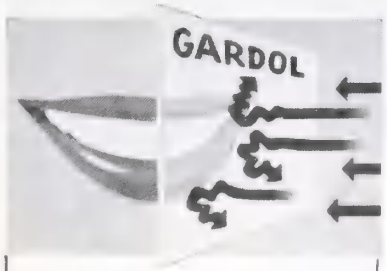
Offer good only in the U. S., and is void wherever prohibited, taxed, regulated or license is required. Offer expires December 31, 1955.

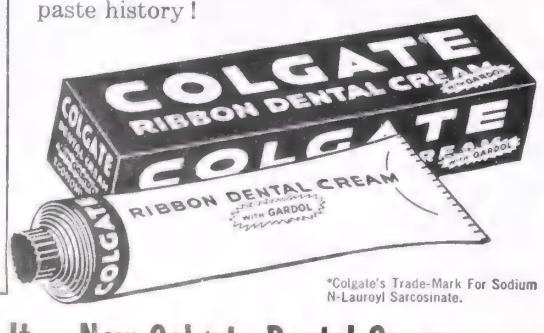
KLEENEX AND DELSEY ARE REGISTERED TRADEMARKS OF INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.



EVEN IF YOU BRUSH YOUR TEETH ONLY ONCE A DAY

Colgate Dental Cream Gives The Surest Protection All Day Long!

Brushing For Brushing, It's The Surest Protection Ever Offered By Any Toothpaste! Because Only Colgate Dental Cream —Of All Leading Toothpastes—Contains Gardol*



To Guard Against Tooth Decay Longer—Stop Bad Breath Instantly!

Gardol, Colgate's wonderful new decay-fighter, forms an invisible shield around your teeth. You can't feel it, taste it, or see it—but Gardol's protection won't rinse off or wear off all day. That's why Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol fights tooth decay 12 hours or more!

ASK YOUR DENTIST HOW OFTEN YOU SHOULD BRUSH YOUR TEETH!

But remember! Even if you brush only once a day, Colgate Dental Cream gives the surest protection all day long! Stops bad breath instantly in 7 out of 10 cases that originate in the mouth! Fights tooth decay 12 hours or more! In fact, clinical tests showed the greatest reduction in tooth decay in tooth-paste history!

*Colgate's Trade-Mark For Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate.

Every Time You Use It...New Colgate Dental Cream CLEANS YOUR BREATH WHILE IT GUARDS YOUR TEETH!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 92

bought at most drugstores, and they are capped. Of course you can carry your own tap water from home if you will boil it, put it in sterilized bottles (for instance, large soda-water bottles which can be corked or have screw-on caps). Neither the cans of milk nor the bottles of water have to be kept cold.

At each feeding pour the proper amount of water into the nursing bottle, add the sugar and dissolve, then add the evaporated milk from a freshly opened can. Your doctor can tell you the proportions for each bottle. For instance, if the usual total formula is evaporated milk, 13 ounces; water, 17 ounces; and corn sirup, 3 tablespoonfuls, divided into five bottles, then each bottle would be made with water, 3½ ounces; corn sirup, 2 teaspoonfuls; evaporated milk, 2½ ounces (throw away the rest of the can of milk). After the feeding, wash the bottle and nipple thoroughly with hot water, soap and brush, and it can be used again.

If the baby is on solid foods, bring the baby-size cans of the ones he likes best and don't try to duplicate everything that he regularly gets at home. Traveling reduces the appetites of many babies. Don't urge.

If you can afford it on a train get a compartment. It's a great help when a baby becomes fretful.

Disposable diapers are most practical.

Avoid buying for children, when traveling, such foods as custards, milk puddings, cakes and pastries with soft fillings, creamy salad dressings on salads and sandwiches, cold meats, cold fish, cold eggs and egg salad. (Hard-boiled eggs are safe in the shell.) These are the foods which most often cause food poisoning when improperly refrigerated or handled. Better stick to freshly cooked foods, milk in individual containers, bread with butter, peanut butter or jelly, crackers and cookies.

Automobile travel brings up special difficulties and special opportunities. In most families the biggest problem is the restlessness of young children, which usually goes on to fretfulness. Another problem for some children is less-than-normal appetite at mealtime, partly caused by the distractions of strange eating places and sometimes also by a slight degree of carsickness. Usually the best answer is fairly frequent stops—for a little exercise and play, for toileting and for a snack of food. The snack doesn't have to be at a restaurant or drink stand—it can come from the trunk compartment of the car: a few crackers or a simple sandwich, a drink of milk or fruit juice from a vacuum bottle or a picnic icebox, perhaps a piece of fruit.

The most important quality in the stopping place is that it have some space where the children can run around without having to be warned every minute: a field or grove away from the road a bit; a park with children's play equipment in a town; a filling station in the country. To put the last point the other way: stopping at a filling station where there is no space for children to run is time and opportunity lost.

For small children, who like things always to be the same, it may be worth while to carry along their own toilet seat or a potty they have got used to at home.

Arranging the passengers in the car can be important. Most parents prefer to be together in the front seat and let the small fry have the back. However, persistent squabbling between the kids can often be stopped only by separating them and separating the parents. Whereve the small fry are, they usually can't abide sitting for long and they must have some space to move around in. To be sure, there is more danger of their being hurt on a sudden stop if they are standing up (especially standing up on the seats), but if you watch families in cars you'll see that nine out of ten parents have given in to letting them stand. You can put the back of the front seat. The floor space of the rear seat of a sedan is fairly safe for standing; the seat then becomes a play table. The two-door station wagon with a narrower seat between the driver's seat and the full width back seat provides a fairly safe U-shaped passage that small children love to roam in.

A four-door sedan can be equipped with an accessory that allows the rear doors to be unlocked only with a key.

A crawling baby can be free to roam or fall asleep if the leg space in back can be built up level with the rear seat by means of baggage or boxes, board and padding.

The hardest but often the most important rule of all, on a long trip, is to stop for the night by 4 P.M.—when it is still fairly easy to find a motel or hotel room, before the children are frantic with restlessness and fatigue, and while there is still time for them to play around and get used to the place before supper. You can save some of the time that would be lost, by early starts in the morning.

The reason, of course, that such a stop-for-the night rule, which works so well for children, is hard for adults is that they (especially men) take pride in covering distance and they can suppress their hunger and fatigue for long periods. It's often impossible for a mother to get a father who has the bit in his teeth to stop by arguing on the road. The stopping-hour rule had better be settled by mutual agreement and solemn promise before the trip is ever begun. Men can be relatively reasonable in a theoretical discussion, but they hate to be curbed in the middle of an ambitious project.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

TO SOW WILD OATS

Saxons planted oats as early as the tenth century. But the grain quickly reverted to the wild state when neglected, a common occurrence in the chaotic and warlike age. Seed from wild oats produced thick blades, but light heads. After a man had gone to the trouble of making a crop of it, he seldom found it worth harvesting.

It was foolish and wasteful to sow such seed, but old folks couldn't tell a youngster this. If a youth wished to try a crop of wild oats, he might as well learn by experience. Evidently a good many striplings did sow wild oats, for the expression passed into figurative use to indicate indulgence in any youthful folly.

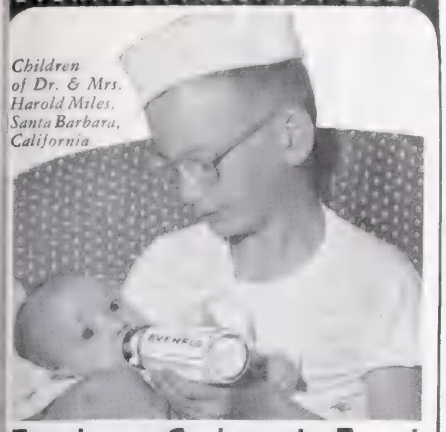
—W. B. GARRISON

BORN TO BE QUEEN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 57

tagged along behind them through the big stone house. When the toddler became sufficiently exasperating, they would shut her out of the playroom.

Once when the older girls had spent hours dressing their dozens of dolls for a mock wedding, Pietie sneaked into the playroom and stripped the costumes off every member of the wedding.



"Who took my lipstick?" the nurse demanded of the three girls one day. Since arriving in Canada, she had begun wearing some color on her lips. One really felt conspicuous without it.

"I did," Trix admitted promptly with a winning smile.

Who could resist such a charmer?

Juliana was enchanted by the great personal freedom her children were able to enjoy in Canada. "Trix of Orange" the oldest princess scrawled in bold shaky letters on her school papers. Her friends accepted her rather strange name as matter-of-factly as they did Detective Welbergen, who followed Trix and Irene as they walked to public school and back. They roller-skated with the other children on the block, and learned New World games, songs, slang.

Evenflo . . . Best For Baby

Children of Dr. & Mrs. Harold Miles, Santa Barbara, California

Feeding "Corkie" Is Easy!

Bradley Miles saves mom some time by giving his little brother "Corkie" his Evenflo Nurser. Evenflo's patented Twin Valve Nipple is so easy to nurse that Corkie does not take long to finish his meal.

Mrs. Miles, a doctor's wife, appreciates the safety of sealing the Evenflo Nipple downward with the formula for refrigerator or travel bag, and the convenience of the wide mouth, easy-to-clean Evenflo bottles—used by more mothers than all other nursers combined.

THE PYRAMID RUBBER CO., RAVENNA, OHIO

SELF-REGULATING Evenflo® PRECISION FEEDING

4- & 8-oz.

Complete Evenflo Units 25c
" Colorgrad Units 30c
" Deluxe Pyrex Units 40c
Unbreakable Plastic Units
8-ounce 40c; 4-ounce 35c
Unbreakable Plastic Bottles
8-ounce 30c; 4-ounce 20c
Evenflo Nipples & Parts 10c
Evenflo Deluxe Lifetime Silicone Nipples....39c

America's Most Popular Nurser

BABY'S "GOING STEADY" with TEDDY

the famous Teddy Tot

"DADDY LONGLEGS" CAR BED and SEAT

with the patented Extension Legs

Safe'n'sure traveling comfort for baby. Posture-firm mattress is wetproof, sagproof. The Daddy Longlegs makes Teddy Tot the only car bed that can be used with complete safety in the front and rear seats of cars. Spring-Lok easily converts bed to seat. Completely assembled. Ready for use. $9.25 (King Size Model — $11.00). Also Twin Size.

Teddy "Co-Pilot"

Sturdy auto chair and auxiliary hi-chair. Colorful steering wheel, beep horn, and gear shift. Child stands or sits in safety. $4.95

At all better department and juvenile stores

Manufacturers of Quality Products Since 1921

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURING CO.

ROXBURY 19, MASSACHUSETTS, U.S.A.

And, except for official occasions, Princess Juliana could lead the life of millions of other women throughout the world. It was the quiet, lonely, unspectacular life of a wife of a soldier in action. No curious crowds gathered as she slipped in and out the garden gate—often on foot, as she had never learned to drive. No press bulbs flashed as she went marketing with a basket over her arm, or gave blood, or worked with other wives of servicemen at the Red Cross.

The princess expected to find conditions in Holland greatly changed when they returned—especially after the probable change in relations with the Dutch colonies in the Far East, for three hundred years the brightest jewel in Holland's crown. "The colonial conception is done with," Queen Wilhelmina had announced in 1942 in promising these colonies their independence. Princess Juliana foresaw customs and manners based upon wealth and prestige changing as life became bereft of luxury, far simpler, more austere. Hardship would serve to draw the people closer together.

As a member of the nobility herself, Zussie was not at all sure about this. She saw many difficult problems of adjustment ahead for the princess-turned-housewife and her three Canadian-raised Dutch daughters.

In January of that terrible Hunger Winter of 1945 they learned that Amsterdam and Rotterdam and The Hague had become ghost cities. Nothing moved on their deserted streets but wooden-wheeled bicycles and the green-and-gray German-army lorries on their nightly man hunts. Every able-bodied Dutch man and boy had gone into hiding to escape forced labor.

When the Dutch began to scavenge the countryside for tulip bulbs to eat, the Swiss and Swedish Red Cross volunteered to send shiploads of food to the tiny North Sea kingdom, but the Nazis refused to accept their offer until every Dutch railway striker returned to his job.

Often that winter Zussie wondered if she would have the courage to hide a refugee from the Nazis, knowing that discovery would mean death or torture for herself and all her family.

BUT as the weeks and months of that agonizing winter crawled by, both strikers and their starving families held firm. Grass sprang up in station platforms and rails rusted as the paralyzing strike continued. Not one in forty thousand Dutchmen failed his absent queen.

Finally, realizing that none of the strikers could be bribed into betraying his country, the Nazis allowed the Red Cross ships to unload and every starving Dutch family received one loaf of real bread and half a pound of margarine.

Then once again the German conquerors were racing in panic toward their Siegfried Line as they had on Crazy Tuesday in September when the Dutch danced in the streets awaiting their Allied liberators who never came. Eight months after that heartbreaking day, in the early part of May, 1945, all German troops in Europe surrendered.

Soon Juliana returned to Holland for the liberation ceremonies. But it was not until July that Zussie received word to start packing the children's things. Among the belongings which Trix insisted upon taking back to Soestdijk was the toy locomotive which never reached the small Dutch boy for whom it was intended.

Martine Roell and her daughter Renée traveled with them, although the attractive widow was soon to marry a member of the Canadian diplomatic corps. Even the flint-eyed Mr. Sesink had found romance among the strangers and was taking home a young Canadian bride.

New York harbor was filled with fog the hot July day they walked up the long gangplank of the former luxury liner Queen Mary. As the troopship passed the Statue of Liberty, all the hot and weary Dutch exiles could see of it was a hand stretched aloft as if to wave good-by. Princess Juliana watched until it faded back into the mist and fog. Many, many times afterward Zussie heard her mention this symbol of American generosity and love.

After a short stay in England, the Princess and her daughters and Zussie returned to Holland in two planes, since it was Prince Bern-

No more tears from "soap in the eyes"

NEW BABY SHAMPOO

Johnson's

Johnson & Johnson

WON'T BURN or IRRITATE eyes!

- Leaves hair shining, easy to comb
- Pure, gentle, safe
- Wonderful for all the family

hard's conviction after flying many bomber missions that the royal family should never all travel together in the same plane.

Prince Bernhard was waiting for his family at an airfield near Apeldoorn where he had his military headquarters. The German-born prince had since September, 1944, become the head of all Dutch resistance groups and Dutch armed forces who had gathered from all corners of the world.

Juliana, trim and sun-tanned, stepped from the first plane, holding Margriet. She was caught hard in her husband's embrace, the children hugging his knees and begging for kisses. From Juliana's tearful expression, Zussie knew that for her at last the fearful ordeal was over, her people free, by some miracle her gezin untouched by disaster, even her reckless Bernhard.

Trix's first glimpse of the country which she might someday rule but which she could not then even remember was the island of Walcheren in Zeeland.

The countryside near the Dutch coast still lay under water, the result of the smashing of dikes and dunes by Allied bombers to wash away heavy German fortifications. Above the salt waves Zussie could barely make out some red-tiled roofs and the wooden arms of windmills. Debris and wreckage floated everywhere.

"I thought mommy said that Holland a ways looked neat and tidy!" Trix remark accusingly to Zussie.

As quietly and secretly as they had le Holland five years before, the royal family sp from the airport to Soestdijk. Trix bounc up and down on the car seat with excitemer chewing gum. Several times Zussie noticed t prince regarding his eldest daughter thoug fully, but he said nothing.

A tremendous lump arose in the nurs throat as she saw once again the long wh outline of Soestdijk Palace, peaceful, sere and unchanged, its square stone sides dappl with sunshine drifting through the giant co per beeches.

As their car turned through the black gat the standard of the princess and prince co bining the rose of Lippe and the rampant li of the House of Orange-Nassau fluttered the top of the flagpole on the roof. The fam was home again.

Juliana looked agitated as she walked the long west-wing steps. The staff, weari khaki army shirts and trousers, greeted the with tears in their eyes.

"Are the servants going to war?" T asked Zussie naïvely.

"Hush, darling!" whispered the nurse. "Th have nothing else to wear!"

Spend a Pleasant Evening With Him by Using This Proved Way to Ease Away

FATIGUE, IRRITABILITY AND HEADACHE

Millions of women who find that the day's housework often leaves them tired, irritable and headachy know that a simple procedure which does a world of good is this:

You just take Bayer Aspirin to relieve your headache . . . sit down for a few minutes . . . put your feet up . . . and relax to relieve the fatigue. Almost before you know it, you're feeling fine again, ready for a happy evening.

To see one reason why this does so much good so quickly, drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water. It starts to disintegrate so fast you need a stopwatch to time its speed! The same thing happens in your stomach. Because Bayer Aspirin is ready to go to work almost instantly, you feel better—fast!

GET THE BEST! The best aspirin the world has ever known is Bayer Aspirin.

Feel Better Fast_ Use

BAYER® ASPIRIN

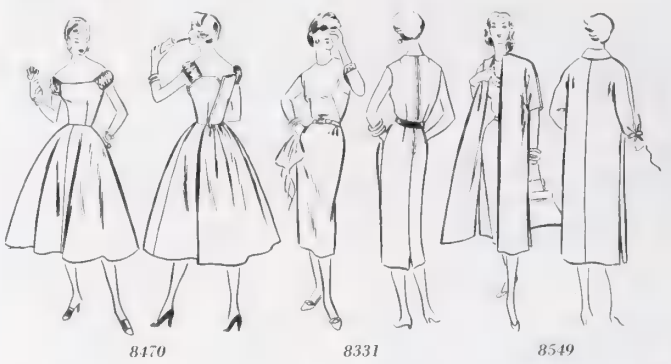
OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 62 AND 63

Vogue Design No. 8470. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

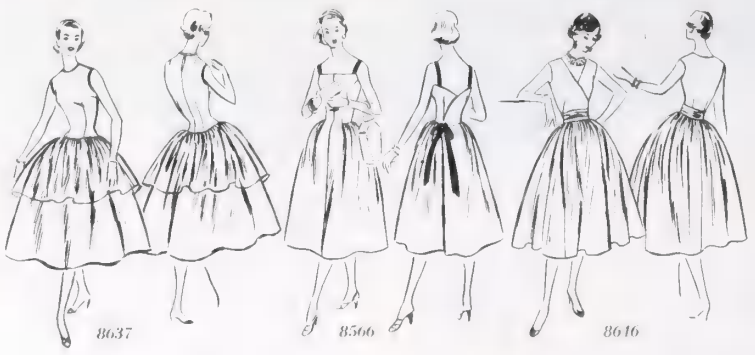
Vogue Design No. 8331. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8549. "Very Easy to Make" coat; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 75c.

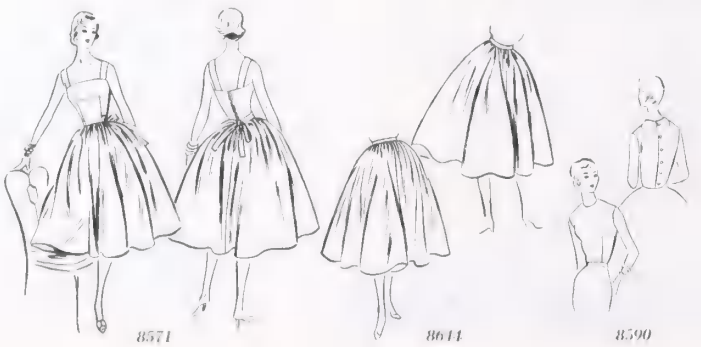
Vogue Design No. 8637. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.



Vogue Design No. 8566. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece wrapped-back dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.



Vogue Design No. 8646. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress and cummerbund; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.



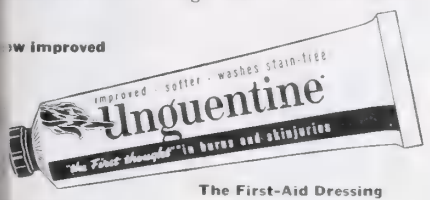
Vogue Design No. 8571. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8644. "Very Easy to Make" skirt, 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8590. "Easy to Make" blouses; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 50c.

Mothers!

Wonderful New First Aid for Children's Skin Injuries!



Unlike iodine and other harsh antiseptics which may sting and actually burn delicate tissues—new Unguentine works 4 ways:

- Relieves pain fast!
- Fights infection!
- Promotes faster healing!
- Prevents gauze from sticking to the injury!

For scrapes and burns—helps ease the pain! Soothe on—no sting! Wash off—no stain!

ow improved

The First-Aid Dressing

lorwich Product

UNGUENTINE ®

FASHION STYLED

Apollo

AND

PREMIER

FIBERGLAS INSULATED 4-ZIPPER BAG illustrated $3.95

Baby Food Bags

AT DEPARTMENT STORES, CHILDREN'S SHOPS & CHAIN STORES EVERYWHERE

OR THE DEALER NEAREST YOU WRITE TO...

he Apollo Co. INC. 3341 E. JEFFERSON DETROIT 7, MICHIGAN

THUMBSUCKING

since infancy caused this malocclusion.

ACCEPTED ADVERTISING PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

THUM broke the habit and teeth returned to normal position.

THUM TRADE MARK

t Thum at your drug counter. Only 60¢.

CORNS

Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your gist. Money refunded ot satisfied. Moss Co., hester, N. Y.

removed by MOSCO

ree MATERNITY STYLE CATALOG

'E MONEY—Shop by Mail! FREE cata- pictures hundreds of exclusive ma- ity fashions. World's Largest. Complete ction, Dresses, Suits, Mix & Match Sep- es, Sportswear, Girdles, Lingerie; $2.98 22.98. Catalog mailed in plain envelope.

CRAWFORD'S

t. A, 8015 Wornall, Kansas City 14, Mo.

One of the staff cleared his throat and began to make a speech. He welcomed them home and apologized that there was not a stick of furniture left in the library or dining room—the Germans had stolen it all. The enemy had also slashed the draperies from their rods with razor blades and carted them off in Wehrmacht trucks. For some unknown reason, the Nazis left all Queen Anna's Russian treasures, but took all of the furniture from both the prince's and the princess' sitting rooms. Otherwise, everything was intact.

William Roell had done his job well. He had saved every bit of the royal china, the silver and all the palace heirlooms, both large and small.

"Only he is not here to cheer," remarked Juliana sadly.

In the last few weeks of the war the palace was full of parachutists, the staff told them. The servants had managed to clean up the litter of broken bottles and trash in the royal bedrooms, but soap was still very scarce in Holland. They had not been able to remove all the black boot marks.

That evening the royal family gathered in the curtainless dining room for their first meal at home. The Dutch Antilles tapestry with its bright jewel colors once again glowed from the wall. Sitting on mustard velvet chairs, borrowed from the Yellow Room, the family was served by beaming footmen in battle dress.

It was not a relaxing meal. The prince scolded Pietie when she banged on the table with a spoon to get attention. Irene was not to sit with one foot curled under her. Trix must not talk with her mouth full.

The girls did not care much for the fillet of sole and boiled dried peas. For dessert they had stewed apricots.

"Why can't we have steak and ice cream?" wailed Trix.

"The German soldiers stole most of the animals in Holland during the war, and planes killed a lot, and now many of our farms have been flooded so the farmers can't grow anything," Juliana explained kindly and gently. "Each of us will have only one egg a week for quite some time, and very little meat or cream."

After dinner, the children showed their father the two black spaniel puppies they had brought from Canada.

"Can we keep them in our bedrooms?" Trix begged. "Can they sleep there?"

"Of course," grandly acquiesced their father.

"Now you must feed your dogs every morning before breakfast," he told his daughters, "and be sure to take them outdoors for airing every few hours. Housebreaking them will be your responsibility."

THE next day Trix forgot to take hers outdoors in the afternoon and he soiled a bedroom carpet. Her father took away her candy-ration book for a week.

A few days after the family's return to Soestdijk, Irene celebrated her sixth birthday.

"The poor child hasn't a single friend," lamented her mother. "They're all in Canada."

Finally the princess telephoned a local school principal and told him that she would like to invite to the palace every school child in the three neighboring villages from grades one to six.

"But Your Royal Highness," Zussie could hear him gasp over the telephone, "that would make about six hundred children!"

"Fine!" replied Juliana. "We'll be expecting them."

ZUSSIE was certain that lights burned late that night as mothers mended and patched odd rags of clothing to outfit their children for such a party. Shoes, however (which only a few months before had cost $160 a pair on the black market) were still unobtainable. Some children managed to come in wooden platforms held on by strings. Others came in cardboard slippers. Many arrived barefoot.

At first some of the guests huddled together timidly on the spacious green lawns behind the palace. Soon, however, their teachers organized some games. To Zussie, the children had a gaunt and somewhat dazed look. In between games, they blissfully gulped down glass after glass of sweet lemonade, the only refreshment the palace chef was able to provide for the party.

Juliana moved quietly about the lawns, her gentle face glowing. The eldest princess was ecstatic at the sight of so many playmates. She ran from one group to another while the birthday child Irene tagged shyly behind.

At the end of the afternoon, Trix appeared suddenly at Zussie's side.

"Have you noticed," she asked in tones of dismay, "the way their feet look?"

Zussie nodded.

"I've looked at all of them," Trix continued, "and Irene and Pietie and I are the only ones wearing regular shoes." She gazed down at her white calf pumps with leather bows. "The only ones. And those who came barefoot, do you suppose that last winter they had no shoes to wear in the snow and ice?"

The nurse nodded again. "I'm afraid so, Trix."

"Please!" begged the seven-year-old princess. "Let me go barefoot too. I feel so ashamed to have shoes!"

Trix never complained about their rather monotonous diet again. When the cold weather came, she accepted without question the frigid cold of her bathroom and dressing room. She and Irene dressed by a wood fire in their big front bedroom, as there was no fuel yet to heat the palace. Juliana even gave orders to the electrician to disconnect the one small lift to save power. It was quite a change for the princesses, Zussie felt, from a house with central heat to a damp stone palace with miles of icy stairs and corridors.

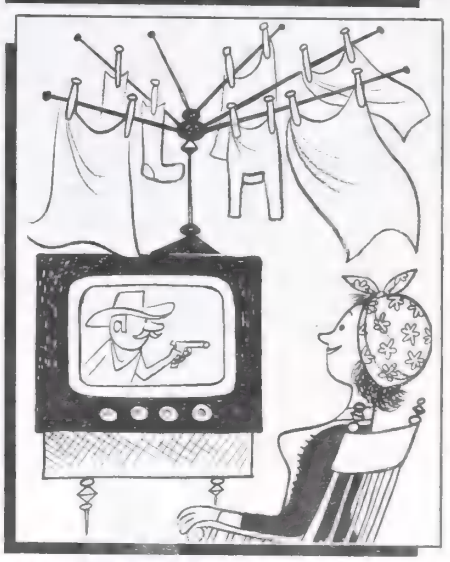
The sports-loving prince soon had another surprise in store for his daughters. In the royal stables across the highway from Soestdijk two ponies joined the prince's great Thoroughbred jumpers in their handsome black-and-gold stalls.

"Everything comes easily to Irene, doesn't it?" the prince remarked to Zussie one day as they stood watching the two older princesses perform in the riding ring which was laid out behind the palace. The pretty six-year-old waved gaily as she trotted past on her small white mare. Trix bounced along behind on a second horse, her round face creased in deep concentration.

"WHO WEARS THE WORLD AS A GARMENT"

By DOROTHY LEE RICHARDSON

Who is the Wizard of the World, who takes
The scattered threads which crawling creatures spin
And combs them and untangles them and makes
One filament where many strands had been;



And weaves it to a cloth so flashing fine
No earthly eye might look on it and see,
And shapes the cloth into the flowing line
Of a garment fit for His Eternity?

Who is the Wizard? Where does he abide,
Transforming labor into love's delight?
I cook the soup; I scour the kettle bright.
The food, the shine, within his thread are tied.
At dawn I sense him striding in on light.
At dusk I feel him weaving at my side.

FROM LAUNDRIES TO TELEVISION

WHATEVER YOU NEED

Find It Fast In The 'Yellow Pages'

NEW MUM MIST PROTECTS EVEN THE 2 IN 5 WHO PERSPIRE FREELY

Here's deodorant protection you never thought possible!

New Mum Mist spray deodorant stops perspiration instantly and for hours. Contains miracle hexachlorophene to prevent odor all day long—even if you are one of the 2 in 5 who perspire freely.

No more messy running or dripping!

Mum Mist sprays on, stays on. It dries fast—won't run, won't drip. Completely safe for normal skin—doesn't damage delicate fabrics. For protection that's fast, protection that lasts—get new Mum Mist!

At all toiletries counters 59c

BY THE MAKERS OF FAMOUS MUM CREAM DEODORANT

with hexachlorophene

WELL-GROOMED PEOPLE GOING PLACES IN PURSE OR POCKET CARRY ACES

What a convenience! Easy to carry, take little space. Same wonderful quality as larger Ace Hard Rubber Combs for home use. Same wonderful protection for hair and scalp because sharp ridges are polished away, every tooth is sm-o-o-othly rounded. Individually packaged; many styles, for all the family. Moderately priced.

American Hard Rubber Company, N.Y.13.

ACE® HARD RUBBER
COMBS

SMOOTHER • STRONGER • LAST MUCH LONGER

Gentle Ex-Lax Helps YOU TOWARD Your Normal Regularity

TONIGHT—If you need a laxative, take chocolated EX-LAX, America's best-tasting laxative. Take it at bedtime—it won't disturb your sleep.

IN THE MORNING—You'll enjoy the closest thing to natural action. No discomfort or upset. You'll soon feel like yourself again!

NEXT DAY—EX-LAX continues to help you toward your normal regularity. You hardly ever have to take EX-LAX again the next night!

Buy The New 65¢ Size—Save As Much As 37¢
Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX
THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

MORE PEOPLE USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATIVE

MORE CASH FOR YOU!

YES, you can have more cash in your pocket if you put your spare time to work. Write for our money-making plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
925 Independence Square Phila. 5, Penna.

Real Walking Ease for Troubled FEET!

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

Combine Style Distinction with Real Foot Freedom

You'll quickly discover what real walking ease is like when you step out in your first pair of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's scientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, foot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind to your feet. No "breaking-in" discomfort.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort* Shops in principal cities and selected Shoe and Department Stores. If not obtainable locally, write for catalog to Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Dept. J-6, Chicago 10, Illinois.

"Irene probably has more natural co-ordination than Trix," went on her father. "But she doesn't try very hard. Trix always wants to do her very best.

"You understand, Zussie," the prince went on, flicking his riding crop against one highly burnished boot, "the girls are not to be made to feel that they have to learn any sport. The only exception is swimming. Remember when Trix tried to jump that hurdle last week?"

Zussie certainly did. Trix had sailed right over the mare's head and landed on her skull. She might easily have broken her neck.

"I told Trix she never has to jump again if she doesn't want to," went on the prince, who had taken many prizes in this class in international horse shows, Zussie knew. "When I was a boy in Germany I once dived into a shallow part of our lake and stuck my head into mud up to my neck." He grimaced at the recollection. "My tutor insisted that I make another shallower dive at once. I did, but to this day I have an obsession about diving. All pleasure in it was ruined for me."

As they were talking, Trix suddenly reined in and, turning her pony's head toward the three-foot hurdle, dug her heels into the horse's side. Before the prince could utter a word to stop her, she was hurtling toward the barrier. Zussie held her breath as the animal soared into the air, Trix hanging on to the saddle with a look of sheer determination. Then she was over safely.

"Good girl!" cried the prince. "A beautiful try!"

Trix threw her father a look of pure adoration.

"She's got guts, that one, Zussie," the prince remarked out of the corner of his mouth, his face flushed with pride.

But before the day was through, Trix's impetuosity had plunged her into hot water again.

She was walking with her nurse down the long robin's-egg-blue corridor when a young man appeared following one of the palace footmen.

"Hey!" yelled Trix, to get the stranger's attention. "How long can you chew gum?"

The young man glanced up, startled. When he saw who was addressing him, his jaw sagged quite comically with surprise.

"I keep mine in a saucer by my bed at night," Trix prattled on gaily. "That way I can make it last two days."

Without waiting to hear the stranger's comment, Zussie hurried the oldest princess out of sight into the playroom.

"After all," the nurse heard Juliana explain at dinner that evening to her husband, "Trix couldn't know it was a newspaper reporter."

"BUT she is much too casual about such things," replied the prince, gazing sternly at Trix. "For instance, it is quite intolerable the way she—and her sisters," he added, including them all in his reproving glance—"burst into my study at all hours without knocking. Also, Trix and Irene call everyone around the palace 'thou,' even the servants."

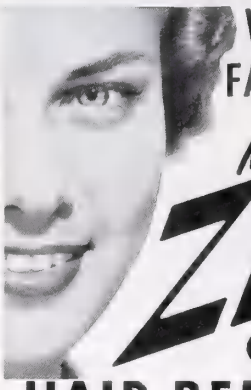
(In Holland, "thee" and "thy" are used only in the gezin, or family circle; and as a matter of fact, there are many Dutch children who do not even address their mothers and fathers in such a manner. They use the more formal "you.")

"Also," he added, glowering at Trix, "yesterday I heard you address my secretary as Cees."

Trix looked baffled. "But I've talked to him at least three times, daddy. Why can't I call him by his first name?"

"Because he happens to be much older than you. Because this is not Canada," pronounced her father.

Three subdued little princesses with heads bowed primly over their plates waited for the footmen to bring around the dessert. Each princess must help herself to every dish the footmen brought around, whether she liked it or not. And whatever she put on her plate, she must finish. Trix had become very adept at helping herself to infinitesimal portions of things she didn't like, such as spinach or rhubarb.



That evening the chef had prepared a strawberry pudding. Trix cut herself a large portion. After the first mouthful Zussie saw her hesi-

FALSE TEETH

KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 35c and 60c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box.

KLUTCH CO., Box 5521F, ELMIRA, N. Y.

WIPE AWAY FACIAL HAIR

NEW ZiP CREAM HAIR REMOVER

CONTAINS LANOLIN AND THE WONDER INGREDIENT EMORAL

Medically Approved . . . Odorless

A new, exclusive formula, created by superfluous hair specialists of more than 40 years experience, ZiP CREAM HAIR REMOVER answers Milady's fondest dream: A pure white fragrant cream for removing facial hair, containing two beneficial and protective agents, Lanolin and Emoral. Leaves skin petal-smooth. No bristly regrowth; no stubble.

Perfectly Simple . . . Simply Perfect for quickly and easily washing hair off the face as well as off the arms, legs, and body. You will be delighted—amazed!

ZiP – IT'S OFF!

Good stores . . $1.50 . . 89¢ . . 50¢

JORDEAU • FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK

tate. Then, as her father glanced her way, she hastily finished the rest. But just before bedtime she ran down to the kitchens, and sticking out her tongue at the white-hatted chef, she cried, "You can't fool me! There was rhubarb in that dessert!"

The girls were so eager to win their fastidious father's praise that they actually competed to obey all his rules and regulations, Zussie found. But being princesses with a public which expected them always to appear gracious and charming was something else again.

Once a week the princesses went to Utrecht to have the braces tightened on their teeth. It was only a five-minute job for the dentist, but somehow, out of nowhere, hordes of people would collect about the black limousine with its official crest. Zussie would find the sidewalk so jammed that she could hardly get the girls back to the car.

"Go away!" Trix once yelled at the stolid lines of staring people. "Why must you look at us like this? Are we animals in a zoo?" Irene only looked frightened, but Trix continued to shout remarks and make faces at her shocked audience until the chauffeur with great difficulty pulled away from the crowded curb.

It was not long before Zussie heard from her friends and family that Princess Beatrix must have a most disagreeable disposition. In vain she tried to explain that the Dutch princess had never been stared at in Canada, that she was not used to causing a sensation wherever she went. The rumor still continued that Trix was a cat.

Even little Pietie was bewildered by all the sudden attention. For many Sundays after the royal family returned to Soestdijk, passers-by would sing the Dutch national anthem. This sixteenth-century ballad, which Queen Wilhelmina once remarked was the only tune in the world she could recognize, tells of the despair of Prince William the Silent when driven from Holland by the Spanish Inquisitors. In the song Prince William promises throughout innumerable verses "De Tyranny verdrijven" (to drive tyranny away). Zussie could never understand why this ballad should have such a hold on the hearts of the Dutch people. But now that the last Nazi had been routed, the Third Reich destroyed, she had to admit that the song did seem appropriate. Sunday after Sunday the passing crowds sang it exuberantly.

One Sunday afternoon after the singing had been going on for some hours, Zussie received a phone call from the palace guards which sent her flying down the west-wing steps. Two-year-old Pietie in a pink nightgown had wandered down the whole length of the front lawn to investigate the noise which kept interrupting her nap. Zussie took her gratefully from the grinning guard and hurried her inside, a new chorus of Prince William's strident woes swelling at their heels.

Both Zussie and Juliana tried to explain to the girls that the Dutch people were only trying to show their affection for their royal family, so keenly missed during their five-year ordeal.

Zussie was particularly touched by the incident of the linden tree. On the day of Beatrix's birth in 1938, a small linden tree was flown to Holland from the town of Orange in Southern France as a present to the new princess. It was planted in the Leidsche Square in Amsterdam and thereafter known as the Beatrix Tree.

Early in 1941, a Nazi soldier, watched by silent Dutchmen, hacked down the sapling with his bayonet, then tore it out by the roots.

Zussie felt sure that this particular German soldier was one of untold numbers who felt a quick push from behind while walking along Amsterdam's unfenced canals. These canals which wind through the seventeenth-century city are very black at night, and cold, and a good six feet deep. Their steep stone sides are slippery and afford no grip for desperate fingers.

Shortly after the little tree was mutilated and left to die, one of the directors of the city parks happened to walk by. He picked up the stump of the tree and, wrapping it carefully in his coat, carried it home. There, planted in his back-yard garden and carefully tended, it lived and grew.

On her first trip to Amsterdam after the liberation, Zussie observed that the Beatrix Tree, now more than seven years old and straight and strong, was back where it belonged.

But Trix was too young to comprehend her place in the hearts of the Dutch people. One afternoon at teatime she strode into her mother's study and threw down her riding crop in disgust.

"Darn it all, mommy! Every time we ride about the place those people out there yell, 'Hello, princess! Hello, princess!' Don't they know we're not old enough to be called princess? That we're just Trix and Irene?"

A few days after this incident, Princess Juliana broadcast an appeal to her people. "Please treat my daughters as children, not as extraordinary beings," she urged her listeners. "Their characters will develop more harmoniously and they will be happier for it. I remember so well how miserable I used to feel as a girl when I saw crowds waiting to look at me . . . stare at me. I craved to be just an ordinary girl."

The prince, however, took a somewhat different point of view.

"They are not ordinary girls, Jula, and never will be," he remarked mildly. "They'll just have to get used to always being in the public spotlight. After all, is it so bad to be stared at? By people who love them, heart and soul? Who would sacrifice their own lives for them, if necessary?"

"That may be so," answered Juliana, "but it's very hard for a seven-year-old to understand."

"She'll get used to it," repeated the prince. "But I do feel we should do something to improve her manners."

"Oh, well," shrugged the princess. "Manners can be learned by anyone—they are superficial and unimportant—but qualities of the heart like hers cannot."

She rose, terminating the conversation. "Now I must read to Pietie as I promised," she told him. Picking up a copy of Winnie the Pooh from the table, she walked from the room.

The prince gazed after his wife with an expression of deep tenderness mixed with exasperation.

"And don't flinch if they ask for a second helping!"

here's good news for dainty cotton dresses!

Sanitone Cotton Clinic

has revolutionized the care and cleansing of delicate cotton fabrics

Of course you can wash summer cottons—even the daintiest. They'll be clean, too. But, something is lost. The tissue-crisp freshness—the charm of newness is gone. Not so when they're cleaned the Sanitone Cotton Clinic way with the magic of STYLE-SET® FINISH. Original body texture and color brightness are restored through cleaning after cleaning—completely rejuvenated, and new looking every time. So why risk the blight of wash-tub wilt? Call your Sanitone Dry Cleaner now!

FREE! Valuable new illustrated 36-page book on Modern Fabric Cleaning. It tells how to select and care for your wardrobe. Reveals inside facts about dry cleaning. Contains complete section on latest fabrics. No obligation.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

HOW TO FIND YOUR NEAREST SANITONE DRY CLEANER

Look in the classified pages of your telephone directory, under Cleaners, for "Sanitone Approved Service." There you will find listed the Sanitone Dry Cleaner in your town. If you cannot locate one, please write directly to us.

Sanitone

DRY CLEANING SERVICE

A Division of Emery Industries, Inc.

Carew Tower—Cincinnati 2, Ohio

Sensational Discovery!

NOW...

AN EXCITING NEW KIND OF

"Perfume that Clings"

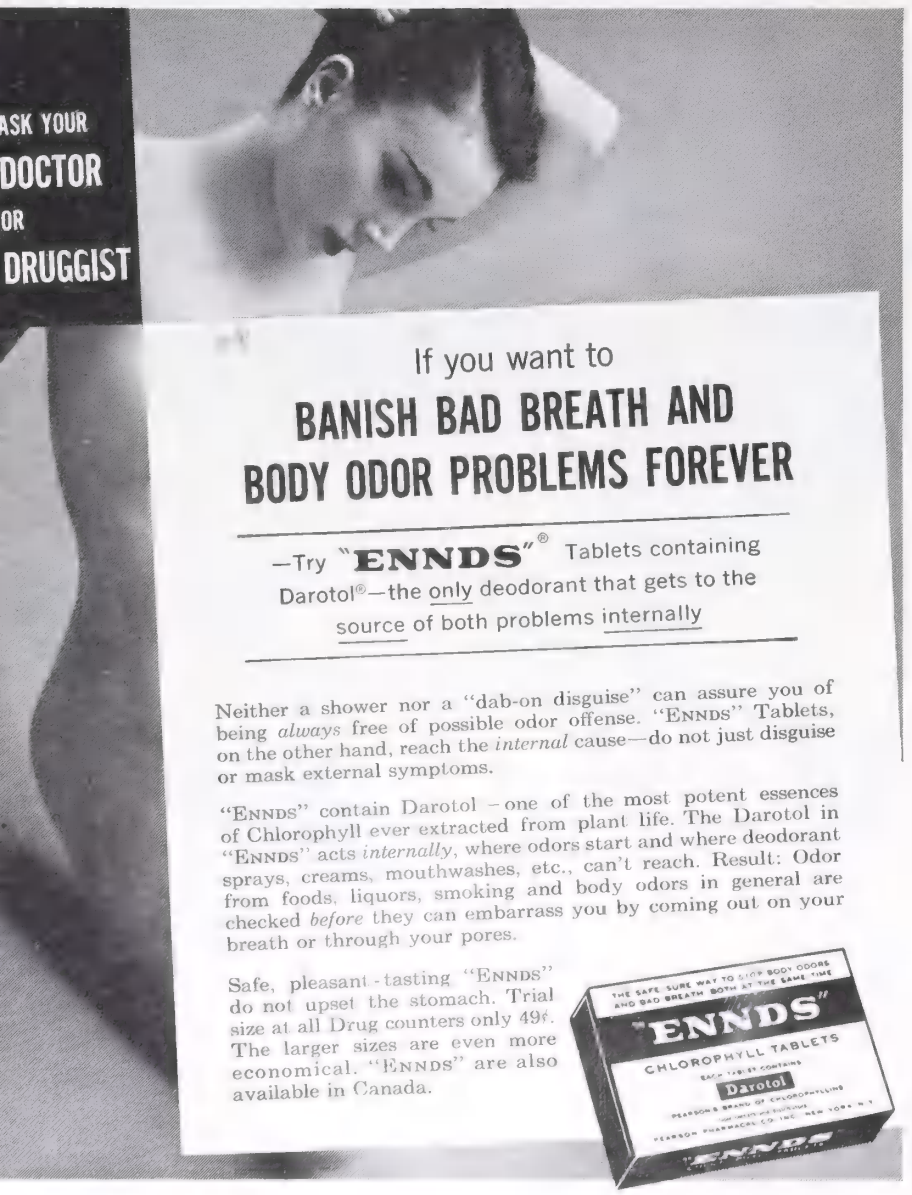
If perfume doesn't "stay" with you, or if you're looking for a luxurious fragrance to use everyday . . . this revolutionary creamy-pink perfume is the answer!

Chantilly LIQUID SKIN SACHET*

HOW TO APPLY...

Every morning, smooth a few drops over the pulse-points of your skin.

With each pulse-beat, the deep warmth of your body brings the fragrance to life . . .



YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF
to try "The Perfume That Clings"
$1.85 plus tax

And far into the evening, your skin will still yield the lovely fragrance of Chantilly . . .

Originated by

Comp'd in U. S.

HOUBIGANT

ASK YOUR DOCTOR OR DRUGGIST

If you want to

BANISH BAD BREATH AND BODY ODOR PROBLEMS FOREVER

—Try "ENNDS"® Tablets containing Darotol®—the only deodorant that gets to the source of both problems internally

Neither a shower nor a "dab-on disguise" can assure you of being always free of possible odor offense. "ENNDS" Tablets, on the other hand, reach the internal cause—do not just disguise or mask external symptoms.

"ENNDS" contain Darotol – one of the most potent essences of Chlorophyll ever extracted from plant life. The Darotol in "ENNDS" acts internally, where odors start and where deodorant sprays, creams, mouthwashes, etc., can't reach. Result: Odor from foods, liquors, smoking and body odors in general are checked before they can embarrass you by coming out on your breath or through your pores.

Safe, pleasant-tasting "ENNDS" do not upset the stomach. Trial size at all Drug counters only 49¢. The larger sizes are even more economical. "ENNDS" are also available in Canada.

"No one ever convinced an Orange," he remarked with a small laugh. "You can only get them to do what they think best." He added in a milder tone, "Oh, well, she'll come around.

"By the way," he remarked lightly, with one of his unpredictable changes of mood, "how do you like Jan Roell?"

Zussie could feel the color mounting in her cheeks. "Very nice," she murmured noncommittally.

"I understand you're seeing a good deal of him."

The prince moved back to his desk and began fiddling with his medals and honorary police badges, arranged with military precision on his desk blotter. Behind him, Eisenhower, Field Marshal Montgomery, Tedder and a dozen other military commanders stared at him from the wall. Close by his desk in heavy silver frames were autographed photographs of Winston Churchill and Franklin D. Roosevelt. Roosevelt's was inscribed: "To Bernhard, whom I call my friend."

"Jan adm ires you greatly," the prince went on teasingl . "Martine told him what a heroine you were under fire."

He picked up and scrutinized a new photograph of Trix and Irene on their ponies, then smilingly put it back. Then he glanced at a colored photograph of a laughing, carefree Juliana in an haut monde satin ball gown and orchids and diamond tiara. It was the most glamorous picture Zussie had ever seen of the Dutch crown princess.

Zussie could not read the expression in his blue eyes behind the round white-gold spectacles.

The war has left its mark on him, she thought. He seems older, more serious, more tolerant. But, she thought, he has not lost his sense of humor. Behind him was a small wooden board on which a white slogan painted in English read:

"Why be disagreeable, when with a little more effort you could be a real STINKER?"

Now the prince was grinning again. He picked up some small object from his desk and, walking over to Zussie, presented it to her with a gallant bow.

"Jan Roell is a fine fellow," he observed. "But in affairs of the heart it's well to be prepared."

Zussie burst out laughing as she took from His Royal Highness a small tube of glue. "Really, Bernhard, I have no intention of breaking my heart over Jan Roell. We're just good friends."

She did not meet the prince's keen eyes as she uttered this outright fib. She was in truth dismayingly in love with the virile, homely-faced brother of the war victim, William Roell. Once she had thought that she wanted a husband and children more than anything else in the world. Now that she was faced with the prospect of leaving Soestdijk forever, she felt suddenly unsure.

How could she desert the princesses at such a time, when everything was so new and strange and difficult for them? Could she leave Juliana, who had already lost Martine?

Just in case, she thought. As she left the room, she slipped the little tube of glue into her pocket.

One afternoon in August a few weeks later the princess told Zussie that the headmaster of a coeducational private school was coming to tea. "His name is Kees Boeke and he married a Quaker, one of the English Cadburys," she said. "You must have heard of his Bilthoven School."

Zussie certainly had. It was known as one of the most progressive in Holland. But she had heard more about its headmaster, Kees Boeke. He had been variously described to her as an anarchist, an idealist, and "one of those crazy saints who set the world on fire." He had been in and out of jail several times, she knew.

Mr. Boeke turned out to be a tall, fair Dutchman in a shabby gray suit. He had an infinitely gentle manner and dreamy blue eyes which seemed to be looking at another world. Throughout the interview he addressed Her Royal Highness as Madam.

When Princess Juliana inquired about the beginnings of his school, he explained that he had been trained to be a civil engineer, not a schoolmaster. During the First World War in England he had been deported for exhorting the ammunition workers at Birmingham to love the Germans.

"For quite a while," he explained gently, "I was an anarchist. All governments were based upon force and therefore bad, I decided. So when the English deported me back to Holland, I stopped paying taxes to this government and removed my children from state-supported schools. I also gave up all the privileges of citizenship—such as voting, and mailing and receiving letters, and sending telegrams, and riding on trains." He gave a little laugh. "As I remember, I was also careful not to walk on sidewalks, which were paid for by taxes. Then my wife and I came to another decision. She had quite a considerable fortune inherited from the Cadbury chocolate works. We gave it all to the chocolate workers. We decided to live without money."

PIANO LESSON

By MARY G. G. BURNS

Miss Maude came every summer Monday,
Treading to music slowly played
In three-four time. She carried a music roll,
A lace handkerchief and a blue sunshade.

The swish of her silk petticoat
Was like wind in the cottonwood leaves;
Measures slipped from her finger tips
Gently as raindrops off the eaves.

"Awakening Lion," "Maiden's Prayer," Morrison's "Meditations";
"Bright Star of Heaven" (broken chords),
"Mockingbird, with Variations."

"Play with Expression, child," she pled—
"Deep in the forest a wild beast is roaring . . .
Think how you'd feel, your lover dead . . .
A single star in the darkness is soaring."

But the parlor walls were safe and cool—
My hands were puzzled on the keys;
Beyond the windows June was coaxing,
Dolls waited under the locust trees.

If you would come again, Miss Maude,
On any Monday, to hear me play,
The pieces would all seem primer-easy—
You'd smile: "The lesson was perfect today."

Zussie was so startled she dropped a stitch n the sweater she was knitting for Pietie. But uliana merely murmured, "How did you ver manage, Mr. Boeke?"

The schoolmaster smiled dreamily. "It was he miracle of the loaves and fishes, mevrouw. For twelve years my wife and I and our eight children never touched a piece of money. Of ourse our friends helped.

"I remember the day I decided to start eaching my children in our bare living room. Most of the furniture had been removed by he tax collectors. The children sat on the loor, each with a fresh white notebook and pencil. We had no money for textbooks, so taught them their three R's from memory. But soon I was prosecuted for not having the proper teaching credentials."

When this difficulty was overcome, friends nd neighbors interested in having Mr. Boeke each their children raised enough money to uild a small schoolhouse. "It had no chimeys because they cost too much," the educaor serenely reminisced. "In the wintertime I aught in an overcoat and the children sat at heir desks in mittens and scarves. But the mportant thing was the spirit of love in that ttle school."

He went on to explain that he called his chool a workshop, or model community. After classes, masters and pupils worked side y side at manual tasks. "We try to stress the worth of every individual. Nothing is forced. Each child progresses at the rate best suited to im. And we never give grades. So often, we nd, marks mean heartbreak in childhood. We neasure progress in a different way—by the naturity of a child's emotions, in the way he earns to replace aggression with love, as well s by his mental growth."

At the end of the interview, Mr. Boeke told rincess Juliana that he was not at all eager o instruct royalty. Their presence might ruin he simple and unpretentious nature of his chool. He could guarantee that the teachers nd students would treat Trix and Irene exctly like all the other workers, but he could ot control mobs of photographers or sightseers. Also, he feared for the princesses' peronal safety.

Juliana assured him that the press would not e allowed anywhere near the school, and she elt sure that the public would co-operate in eaving the princesses alone. As for security neasures, Mr. Sesink would probably arrange or detectives to accompany the girls every ay, but they would remain unobtrusively utside the school building.

Mr. Boeke shook his head dubiously. "But he Germans wrecked my school!" he said. My faculty was sent to forced-labor camps. t present we are using one of our teachers' omes. We have no supplies and no funds. Alas"—he smiled at them—"I was forced to ive up my futile struggle against the use of noney. It simply wasn't practical."

Zussie suppressed a smile. Not practical, ndeed. With eight children!

"I'm sure that can all be arranged," uliana was saying decisively. Before Mr. oeke left, he consented to accept the prinesses.

THAT night as the adults sipped their coffee Juliana's study after dinner, the princess old her husband about the Boeke School, the ost progressive of its kind in Holland. She aid she felt that such a school would ease the djustment of the princesses to life in Holland.

The prince said little, but Zussie had the eling that he was not entirely convinced.

Princess Armgard, who was visiting them or the first time in almost six years, looked urprised when she heard that Trix and Irene ould be expected to help keep the Boeke chool clean by scrubbing floors and washing indows but tactfully remained silent.

The German princess, looking pitifully thin nd ill and haggard from her war experiences, ill retained her humorous perspective on life.

"You remember that flagpole the Nazis gave e after your last visit to Reckenwalde?" she uddenly asked her son. "When the Russians ad almost reached our home last spring, I alled one of my most trusted tenants. 'Do you e those two flagpoles?' I told him. 'When the ussians arrive, I want you to do something r me. From the first flagpole I want hung the local burgomaster, and from the other, the local chief of the Gestapo.'"

Her eyes, so like her son's, crinkled humorously. "And do you know what he said?" she went on. "'We can take care of the burgomaster, Your Highness, but I'm afraid the Gestapo chief has already been spoken for by the next village.'"

Bernhard joined in his mother's laughter. Then he asked, "How did you ever get that last letter to me during the war? The handwriting on the envelope was not yours."

"No," she replied, "I gave it to a friend who was going to try to get through the German lines to the Allied zone. I asked her to address it to you in England if she succeeded.

"IN the letter I told Bernhard that I was back in the scenes of my childhood," she told the two women. "I knew that he would know I meant Westphalia. Then I wrote, 'One of my greatest pleasures is listening to the beautiful concerts on the radio, especially Saturday and Sunday nights.'"

"That was a puzzler," grinned Bernhard, shaking his head. "I knew that you never cared for serious music, and especially loathed concerts. However, I knew that many messages to the underground in Occupied Europe were played over the BBC musical programs."

"I always listened to them," the German princess recalled, "even if I didn't know what they meant. 'The roses are in full bloom tonight'—I remember hearing that often."

"Yes," interrupted her son, "and 'the eagle has lost one of his feathers.' That meant somebody important to our side had escaped from the Nazis to England."

"After sending Bernhard that last letter," Armgard continued, "I sat by my radio every night, enduring those frightful concerts. When we could hear the sounds of the Allied guns in Westphalia, the British announcer said, 'The pasha is aware of your message.'"

Tears welled into her eyes as she looked over at her handsome son. "'Pasha' was the name our Chinese amah gave to Bernhard."

Zussie could remember Bernhard's joy when the Americans found his mother's hiding place in Westphalia and General Eisenhower reported she was alive and well, and so was Aschwin.

"How do you think the pasha looks?" Juliana asked her mother-in-law with a twinkle.

Bernhard had recently grown an extremely weedy-looking mustache. He did it, he had told them, to see which of his friends had the courage to tell him how awful it looked.

Princess Armgard rose brilliantly to the gambit. "Why, if Bernhard feels that he has to grow a mustache, then I feel it looks perfectly splendid on him!"

Zussie often heard the prince repeat his mother's supremely tactful remark. He kept the mustache until he had trapped as many so-called friends as he cared to, then, to the family's great relief, he shaved it off.

In the middle of September, Trix and Irene went off to school wearing identical blue wool sweaters and skirts and each carrying a red lunch pail with slices of bread and butter and an apple. When at two o'clock the chauffeur brought them and their two detectives home, Trix reported that they had taken English lessons sitting cross-legged on their teacher's bed.

It was several weeks before they were able to move out of the teacher's home into Boeke's former schoolhouse. That fall the story was widely circulated that Trix had thrown a wet mop across a classroom, protesting that cleaning floors was no job for a princess.

Zussie felt that this story, which contained not a grain of truth, reflected the reaction of the average Dutchman to the news that the Princesses of Orange were attending such a radical school. It was reported that the headmaster called Princess Juliana "mevrouw" like any ordinary Dutch housewife, who in turn addressed him as "Mr. Boeke," but the princesses called their headmaster Kees!

In spite of her own qualms about the educational methods of Mr. Boeke, Zussie had to admit that from the very first day both Trix and Irene adored the Boeke School. They not only pitched into the chores wholeheartedly, but frequently did more than their share.

It was not known, for instance, that when the wife of one of the teachers became ill, several girls volunteered to do her housework after school and Trix was one of them. Zussie was sure it was not pleasant work. The house was small and overcrowded, babies cried and needed attention to their diapers and noses, and the kitchen sink was generally piled high with unwashed dishes.

The volunteers soon lost their enthusiasm for the job and one by one stopped going. But Trix continued faithfully for weeks and did not relinquish her responsibility until a nurse was finally secured for the bedridden mother.

One afternoon Trix told Zussie that two of the teachers' bicycles had been stolen. Trix had noticed that their teachers carried home at night in tin pails the food which the children practiced cooking at school. Trix knew that the spinach was usually gritty and the pudding full of lumps. She wondered how teachers could eat such food. Zussie told her that they probably could not afford supper any other way.

The next day Trix appeared at school with a cardboard box and passed it among the students with a plea for contributions. Although money was exceedingly scarce in Holland at that time, she collected enough to pay

They say the nicest things about you...

No wonder! Bright-as-July colors that never fade through months of sun and salt water . . . gay designs and patterns . . . all this makes Dundee Beach Sheets the smart ones to rub shoulders with!

Dundee BEACH SHEETS

DUNDEE MILLS, INC., GRIFFIN, GA. • SHOWROOMS: 40 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK

for two new bicycles. "One of the teachers cried," she told Zussie afterward. "She said she never could have bought one herself. She said that a new bicycle would take almost two months' salary."

A little later she added, regarding her own two-wheeler and Irene's old tricycle outside the palace playroom, "We're rich, aren't we?"

"Yes," said Zussie, "you are."

Trix thought about it awhile. "Well," she finally concluded with a grin, "I can't say I'm sorry."

The two girls became very fond of their idealistic headmaster. However, they did not always follow his kindly example. One day while Trix was crawling on the classroom floor collecting pieces of paper for the wastebasket she discovered a slip of paper on which was written, "Trix and Benny are fools." She recognized the handwriting of a fellow worker. This, she decided, called for revenge.

She quickly organized a small band, captured the culprit, and tied him to a tree near the playground. The group then began to pile sticks and branches against his feet. He quickly promised never to call Trix and Benny names again.

"Weren't you scared?" she gloated afterward. "Weren't you frightened to death that we would burn you?"

The boy snickered. "Not at all. But I was afraid that you would tell the queen and she might put me in jail."

Trix snorted. "The very idea! As if granny didn't have her hands full already, without bothering about you."

The two princesses loved to act in plays, and whenever they performed, Juliana and often Bernhard would be sitting in the audience of proud parents. By this time the former anarchist Mr. Boeke owned a state-supported school with an auditorium, science laboratories, kitchens and laundries where both boys and girls learned to cook and wash clothes, studios for drawing and sculpturing, a ceramic furnace for firing pottery, and a spacious gymnasium. Behind the school was a huge garden where every kind of vegetable and fruit was cultivated by the children, as well as many kinds of flowers.

Both Trix and Irene loved the creative activities, but both had difficulties with their arithmetic. Zussie felt it was extremely unfortunate that Juliana and Bernhard happened to remark in Trix's presence that they had never been good at figuring. From that moment neither princess tried very hard.

"Do you think it's true that mathematical geniuses have a special lump on their skulls?" the teacher once asked Irene's class.

"Yes," replied Irene promptly. "And I have a hole."

Another skill which the princesses could not, or would not, master was needlework. Trying to knit or embroider or sew simply bored them stiff. It was much too slow. But with a piece of paper and a pencil Trix could sketch happily for hours. Everyone recognized her talent for drawing, but it was her teacher at the Boeke School who discovered that her greater talent lay in sculpturing. It was at the Boeke School, too, that slender and graceful Irene conceived her great passion for dancing.

HOWEVER, Zussie continued to have her doubts about this highly progressive school. She knew that both Trix and Irene were bright, lively and energetic children, but simply because they were interested in everything and everybody, it was impossible to get them to concentrate on something for any length of time. They tended to flit from one activity to another at top speed

The system at Boeke School, where a child proceeds at his own rate of speed without coercion from above, requires a good deal of self-discipline. Some children are born with it, Mr. Boeke explained, some acquire it, and some never do. Sitting at their desks, faced with a page of arithmetic sums which they could finish today, tomorrow or next week, Trix and Irene were easily distracted, Zussie felt sure.

The second weakness of the school, in Zussie's opinion, was that, without coercion, children must be inspired to study, and that inspiration was not always forthcoming from the hastily recruited faculty.

The girls tended to develop in a somewhat lopsided way. Irene, who very much enjoyed grubbing around the big vegetable garden at school, learned a great deal about the life and habits of the Colorado potato beetle, but she could not multiply six by seven. Trix did some marvelous sculpturing, but her spelling remained atrocious.

Finally summer vacation arrived, and the royal family moved outdoors. Afternoons the girls relaxed by the huge swimming pool with their mother and nurse and riding and swimming and tennis instructors.

One such afternoon Zussie learned that Juliana was expecting another baby.

Oh, dear, thought the nurse with a sinking feeling, I must tell her. I must give her time to find somebody else.

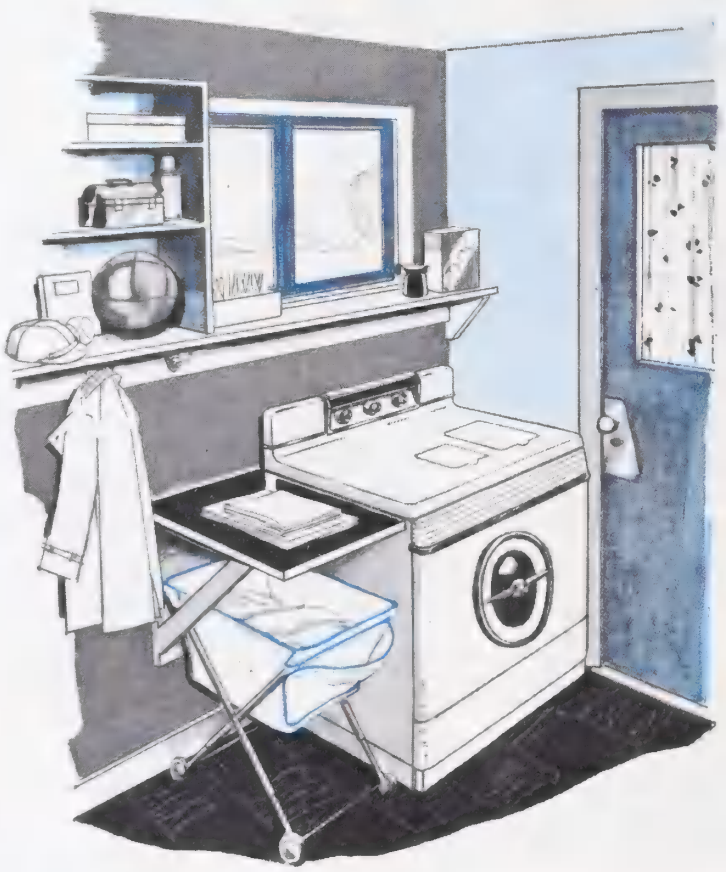
And so she told her that she was marrying Jan Roell.

"Of course I won't leave until you find another nurse," she promised.

Juliana shook her head. "As if we could ever replace you, Zussie."

Trix couldn't understand it at all. "But Zussie, we're your family!" she told her. "What do you need a man for?"

Even Zussie's promise that the three girls could be bridesmaids failed to dispel their gloom.



Juliana promised to start interviewing candidates immediately so that Zussie could set a definite wedding day.

However, her efforts became more and more halfhearted until finally, reluctantly, with many misgivings and severe twinges of conscience, Zussie gave in to her fiancé's urgings and told the royal family she would like to leave in October.

When September came and went and still no nurse had been found, she considered canceling all her wedding plans.

Finally, one Saturday night at the beginning of October Juliana remarked, "I think we've found the one, Zussie. She's Dutch, but we

A new look at Laundry

The home laundry these da can be housed upstairs or down wherever it fits family needs.

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

ONCE we carted clothes to wherever the laundry was. Today the laundry meets the clothes more than halfway. Modern washers with clean water piped in and soiled water piped out are no longer hazards to surrounding floors or furnishings.

These laundries can be installed wherever plumbing and venting connections can be made. It all depends on where you work most happily. (If certain items must be line-dried, pick your work spot handy to an outside door.) A washer will need hot and cold water, a drain and an electric outlet. For driers, the heat may be supplied by gas or electricity, and the fastest-drying electric models need heavy-duty wiring such as that for an electric range. Some driers need ducts to the outside to carry off steam and drying heat, while others condense moisture and it flows down the drain. With the plumbing in mind, choose the work spot best for you!

IN FIRST-FLOOR SERVICE ENTRANCE, this laundry is close to the kitchen for easy plumbing and convenient use. Where space is short, the single 36"-wide appliance that washes and dries clothes is space-saving. Start a load while brewing breakfast coffee, and it's dried by the time the beds are made. The unit shown here uses gas for drying, and excess heat is vented at the rear. In most places mud rooms like this need heat in winter to protect pipes.

Families who rent, or who can't arrange permanent plumbing connections in their home, will welcome new portable automatic washers that can be wheeled up to a sink or tub at clothes-cleaning time.

A word about laundry tubs. Once such tubs all had sloping fronts—a relic of the old washboard days. New laundry sinks are neat and rectangular, some made of strong yet lightweight plastic and glass fiber, many offering storage cabinets underneath. Laundry sinks are needed with automatic washers that reuse the soapy water, and they serve, too, for hand-washing woolens and delicate fabrics. In some locations the extra sink relieves congestion in the kitchen, as it can also be used for arranging flowers, scrubbing vegetables and doing other tasks.

In two-story houses, a laundry center on the bedroom floor can save extra trips downstairs with soiled clothes and upstairs with the same ones cleaned. Some people we know make use of big old-fashioned bathrooms by installing laundry centers there where plumbing connections are nearby. In new houses, water and drain pipes can be planned to serve a second-floor bath and laundry such as the wall section on the next page. Remember that any second-floor laundry needs a drier—else handling wet clothes would be a problem. Other happy combinations on first or second floor are laundries teamed with sewing, hobby or guest rooms, or combined with kitchens if kept out of the food-preparation center.

On a shelf near the washer ought to go soap, detergent, measures for doling them out, bluing, bleach, stain removers, starch, and in hard-water areas water softeners or conditioners. Also important in getting good results—reliable hot water.

ad to fetch her all the way from Texas! She's een taking care of some American children. 'ou'll see her at dinner tonight."

Cocktails were served that evening in the rince's downstairs study with its very mascune décor of sand and beige. Juliana was knitng some blue bootees by the copper-hooded replace. The thirty-seven-year-old Dutch rown princess looked radiant in the fifth ıonth of her pregnancy, her fair skin firm as girl's, her dark blond hair still untouched by ray.

Bernhard was talking rapidly into the telehone when the nurse knocked and entered. It ɔunded like a business discussion, which the prince seemed to be conducting in several languages, including French, Spanish, and American slang.

The prince had been for several years inspector general of the Dutch army, navy and air force—a highly responsible job, Zussie had been told, by no means bestowed automatically on members of royalty. He had also been elected to several boards of directors of Dutch firms, including the Dutch Royal Airlines. His friends had begun referring to him in private by his initials, "P. B.," the way Americans referred to their business tycoons.

"À bientôt," the prince was saying now. "O.K.! Adiós!" and he hung up.

There was a discreet knock at the door and at Bernhard's peremptory "Come in!" the door swung open and a tall, dark, gangling girl in a white nurse's uniform stood there.

"Why, hello, Anneke!" exclaimed Zussie, recognizing an old school chum.

"Sophia!" cried the new nurse.

"How do you do, Miss Huidekoper," said the prince, striding over briskly and shaking her hand.

Princess Juliana studied the newcomer's face as her husband completed the introductions.

"Oh," she remarked finally, "you must be the sister of that nice officer we met on the Sumatra going to Canada!"

The nurse beamed. "I didn't expect you to remember, Your Royal Highness. That was six years ago."

"My wife never forgets a name or a face," put in the prince smoothly, pulling out a beige leather club chair for the nurse to sit down.

"And how is your brother? And the Sumatra?" asked Zussie.

"My brother spent most of the war in a Japanese concentration camp," Miss Huidekoper explained. "The Sumatra fought in the war in the Pacific but was finally sunk, I believe."

"She lies in the English Channel off Normandy," put in Bernhard. "And what would you like to drink, Miss Huidekoper?"

"Sherry, thank you, Your Royal Highness," replied the new nurse primly.

"Not an American old-fashioned?" asked the prince. "Didn't you learn to drink them in Houston? I can make you a very good one."

"No, thank you," she refused, laughing. Her old schoolmate had a very warm and relaxed kind of laugh, Zussie was glad to notice.

"Were you surprised to get our letter?" Juliana wanted to know. "A member of our staff recommended you highly."

"Very surprised," replied the nurse. "The American family I was working for had paid my passage from Holland so I didn't feel as though I could leave them after only two months. But the moment your letter came they said, 'If Princess Juliana wants you, of course you must go.'"

Zussie recalled the day the square white letter with its engraved crown in one corner changed the whole course and direction of her life. Indeed, she probably would not be marrying her engineer Jan Roell if she had not hurried to Soestdijk on her bicycle on that wet and raw March evening, now more than eight years ago.

Miss Huidekoper was saying, "I also read in the States that a new baby was expected in the Dutch royal family. I think that's what finally decided me. I can't resist new babies."

Juliana smiled. "Yes," she replied happily, "I'm expecting in February. Come, I'll show you the children before they go to sleep. Trix has a small fever—nothing at all serious. Trix was my bungle cloth," Zussie could hear the princess explaining as she took the new nurse's arm and they went out the door together.

Zussie stared after them, wondering how it was possible to feel so happy, and at the same time so very wretched.

The prince, leaning against the fireplace mantel with its collection of miniature porcelain elephants and dogs, and its many photographs of airplanes, looked at her expectantly.

"I think she will do very nicely," she told the prince. Her voice sounded stiff and insincere to her ears. Forcing some warmth into her words, she added, "She'll do fine."

The prince grinned at her. "Never mind, Zussie," he said sympathetically. "Soon you'll be having a parcel of kids of your own."

Two days later Anneke Huidekoper moved into Zussie's room and Zussie was driven out the big palace gates. Not for the last time, however. When Juliana heard that Zussie was inquiring about hotels in which to hold her wedding reception, she phoned her and said, "Why not at Soestdijk? There's plenty of room here!"

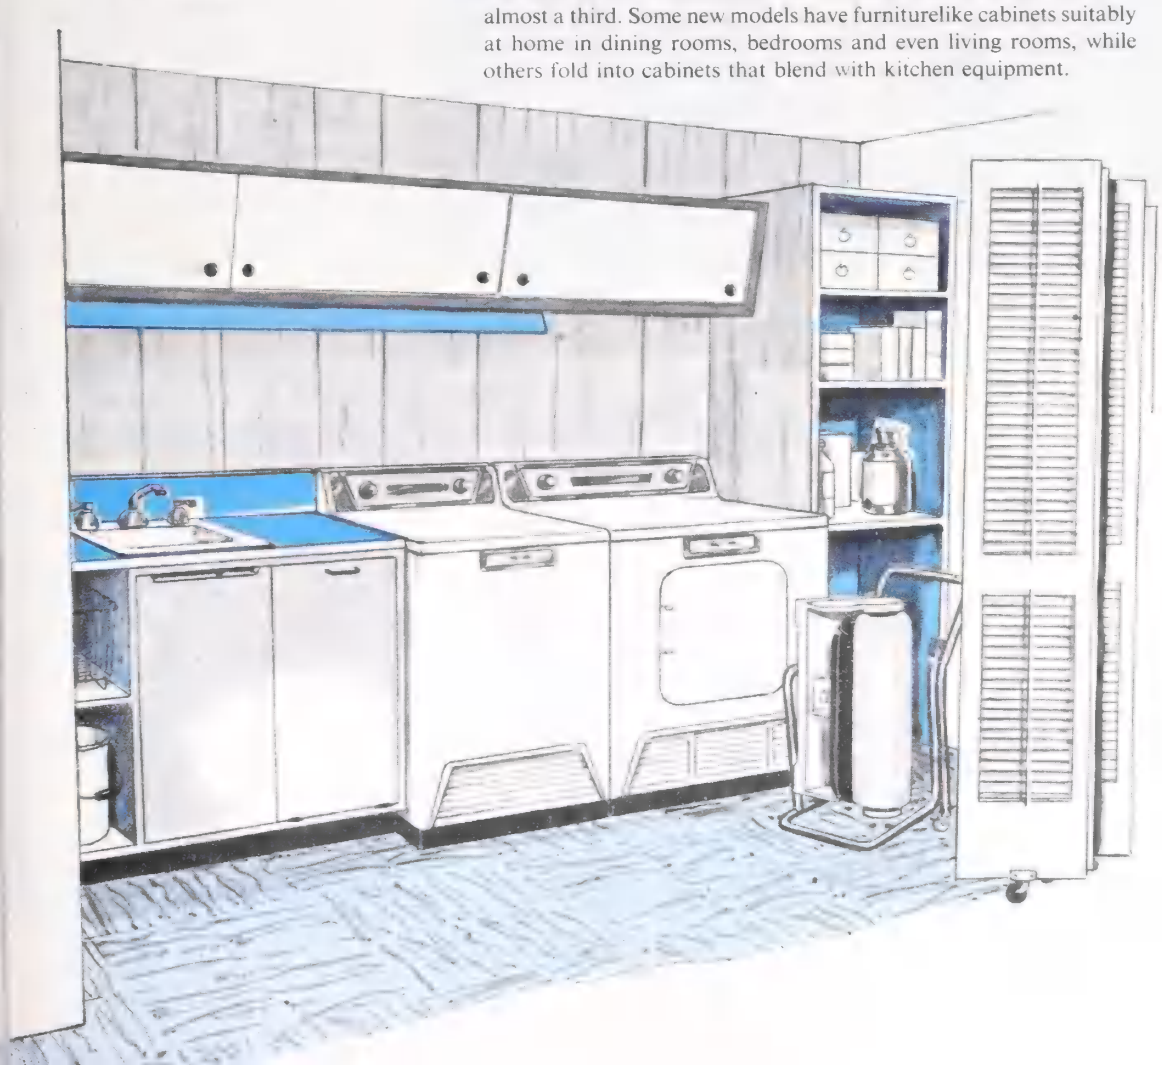
Trix and Irene were both bridesmaids, wearing dresses of blue voile which they wore on many subsequent occasions. They also had new gray squirrel jackets of which they were terribly proud. Pietie was the flower girl. Afterward a wedding luncheon for fifty-two guests was held in the Waterloo Room at Soestdijk Palace where Zussie had so often played with her young royal charges.

Her wedding present from Bernhard and Juliana was a radio which she still has in her living room. Queen Wilhelmina presented her with a brooch.

After their honeymoon, the newlywed Roells moved into a red brick villa surrounded by quiet fields and woods close to a small country village. It was part of the Roell family estates, where Jan and William and their parents had lived before the war.

It was not long before Pietie and the new governess came to call.

Centers



RICHARDSON

IN SECOND-FLOOR HALLWAY laundry is close to bed- and bathrooms where a large share of soiled clothes collects. The combination washer-dryer here is 30″ wide and comes in five colors ranging from soft pink to deep wood-tone brown. The arrangement, including the appliance built in at no-stoop height plus ventilated hamper and storage for linen and laundry supplies, takes about 4′ of wall space. A new use for generous-sized linen closets in old homes—if plumbing can be arranged. The unit uses electric heat for drying, and moisture and lint go down the drain.

IN BASEMENT, laundry at end of playroom hides behind shutters between washdays. With washer, dryer and ironer nearby, clothes go from hamper to linen closet in shortest time. Using separate machines, a second load washes while a first is drying, and by taking clothes from the dryer when damp-for-ironing, no sprinkling is needed. The washer and dryer together are 55″ wide; the small portable ironer, folded for storage, occupies a 15″ x 17″ floor space.

No need for ironing to be tied to the washing-drying center. Comfort and convenience decide a place to work. Today's ironing load is lighter because many dryer-dried things don't need an iron if removed while slightly damp and folded smooth, and some new fabrics dry wrinkle-free. Even so, there is still ironing to be done. Needed will be an ironing table and iron, a basket or cart for moist clothes, racks or a table for finished work. Ironers can cut work time almost a third. Some new models have furniturelike cabinets suitably at home in dining rooms, bedrooms and even living rooms, while others fold into cabinets that blend with kitchen equipment.

"Oh, goody!" cried Pietie, looking around as they entered Zussie's home. "A house! Come on," she said, tugging at Zussie's skirts, "let's call up Mr. Sesink and mommy and Martine and all be together and cozy again like we were in Canada!"

"Heavens, Pietie!" laughed Zussie, hugging and kissing the smallest princess. "I didn't think you remembered all that!"

"Do you have any cookies?" When Zussie nodded, the smallest princess ran out to the kitchen to find the cook.

The two women sipped their tea, gazing out the big living-room window at the snow-covered garden.

"I don't know how to tell the family," Anneke admitted finally, "but I've just got engaged."

"But you have only been at Soestdijk two months!" exclaimed Zussie.

"I know," admitted the nurse. "It happened very suddenly. Dick—he's my fiancé—saw my picture in the papers when the palace announced that I was taking your place as the children's nurse. Dick remembered that he knew my brother in a Jap concentration camp. He decided to look me up." She giggled. "Dick says it's terribly hard, courting a girl in a palace—all those guards and locked gates and detectives. I have so little time off—you know what it's like, Sophia, with three children to look after."

"Yes, go on."

"Dick comes to see me in the evening in the library," Anneke told her. "Usually one of the footmen brings us a tray of drinks or coffee. Last night I was surprised to see that the tray was already set up on the buffet. Right in the middle of it was a big platter of hot fried onions. I had to laugh. The prince knows I adore them. I guess he was trying to discourage our romance."

"Perhaps he was," smiled Zussie, thinking of a small tube of glue. "I'm sure he hates the idea of losing such an excellent nurse so soon."

"By the way," remarked her former schoolmate, gazing out the window, "do you remember when mummie had the German measles? I mean Princess Juliana. She asked me to call her and Bernhard by their first names, but somehow I just couldn't. It's different with you, but I call them mummie and pappie, like the children. Do you remember when she was sick?"

"Why, yes," replied Zussie. "It was last summer. She was only sick for a day—it was nothing."

"Do you remember how far along she was in her pregnancy?" persisted Miss Huidekoper, looking at her with serious eyes.

Zussie calculated back. "Why, very early I'd say. In her first or second month. Why do you ask? Is anything wrong?"

"Oh, no," responded the nurse hastily, getting to her feet. "Well, I really must run along. You've no idea how busy we are opening presents for the coming baby. Mummie isn't going to keep one—they're all to be given away to babies who arrive the same day as hers."

"How is Juliana feeling?" asked Zussie uneasily.

"Oh, extremely well. She's the type to have a dozen children."

"And the prince?"

"He's walking around with bronchitis and a fever. There's no stopping him! He refuses to go to bed."

Several weeks later, Juliana phoned. "Could you and Jan come to dinner tonight?" she asked. "The children are putting on a play for us in the new movie room."

"But isn't your baby due this week?" inquired Zussie.

"Any day now," replied the princess. "Doctor de Groot has moved into the palace with us. But who knows? Trix was two weeks late, remember?"

"Very well, we'll be there," promised Zussie.

It was a bitterly cold February evening, but the frigid temperature and harsh wind had not discouraged a large crowd from collecting by the palace gates, eager to be the first to learn the news. For weeks the people had speculated endlessly on the possibility of this fourth child's being a boy. The last Dutch heir apparent had been born in 1843.

"This is probably our last chance in this generation," Zussie's gardener had informed her solemnly. "I just know it's a boy!" he added.

As the Roell car paused by the sentry box at the front palace gates, Zussie could see dozens of newspaper reporters playing cards and drinking in the brightly lighted inn across the street. Sixty of them had been there for two weeks, Miss Huidekoper had told her, waiting to flash the announcement across the news wires of the world.

The west-wing library had been refurnished as a gift of the youth of Holland. Juliana had personally approved each piece of furniture so that the room looked very much the way it did before the war, with comfortable upholstered pieces in beige and a soft green which matched the handsome jade-and-gold clock and vases.

By the door was a small table with a pile of opened brown-paper packages which Zussie imagined were baby presents sent to the palace which Juliana intended to give away. On top of them was a plump little baby pillow with a note attached to it in Juliana's firm round handwriting.

"Anneke," it said, "please see that this pillow is made much smaller. Otherwise some poor child might suffocate in it."

Trix came running up to Zussie and kissed her, then curtsied and shook her husband's hand.

"Hi, Jan!" she greeted him. Then, "I'm going to have a baby brother," she told her former nurse. "Real soon!"

"Now, Trix," laughed her mother, "don't get your hopes up! A new little sister would be just as nice."

"It would not," protested Trix. "We've already got Pietie."

The third little princess came running into the library in a white mousseline de soie dress intricately tucked and pleated. Her face was flushed with excitement and her eyes sparkled

Products shown are Plas-Tex "Thunderbird" Housewares

SO LIGHT, SO SMOOTH, SO PLIABLE . . .

. . . these handy, hard-working housewares make light of many chores. Like anything made of BAKELITE Brand Polyethylene, Plas-Tex "Thunderbird" Housewares are pleasant in the hand, practical in use. Because they can't chip, crack or rust—won't dent or break.

Imagine how such housewares save you time and trouble! Jumbo wastebaskets so light a child can empty them. Dishpans so soft and smooth there's no fear of chipping finest china or snagging best nylons. Mixing bowls that spring into shape after flexing for easy pouring, easy storing.

It's BAKELITE's quality control that provides this lightweight durability and snap-back flexibility. Housewares of superior quality rely on Polyethylene by BAKELITE, leader in its production. Every step of the making is constantly checked for best results. BAKELITE's years of experience in the making of plastics—and every facility for making them best—insure quality you can depend on.

Did You Know that adding Polyethylene to the wax coatings for bread-wraps makes wraps tougher and helps give tighter seal?

BAKELITE BRAND Polyethylene Plastic

BAKELITE COMPANY, A Division of Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation UCC 30 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

The term BAKELITE and the Trefoil Symbol are registered trade-marks of UCC

"See my new dress!" she called to Zussie, twirling around on her toes so that a dozen bracelets on her plump arms jingled merrily.

"Oh, Pietie," moaned her mother, "that's about the fifth dress you've worn today. And how many times have I told you that you may wear one bracelet at a time and one necklace? Now please run along and take all the rest of that jewelry right off!"

Pietie scowled, then, climbing into an amphibious vehicle equipped with foot paddles—a present from the Dutch marines on her fourth birthday—she charged out the door.

After supper the group trooped down to the basement movie room which could seat about seventy-five people comfortably. It also contained a small stage where Zussie had often watched the princesses give their performances. Usually, they charged admission—"No less than a dime, please"—which they gave to the Red Cross.

Apparently this evening's show was free. Trix announced that it was called The Stairs and indicated that an important event which had recently taken place on the west-wing doorstep would be faithfully re-enacted.

In the first scene, the three princesses seemed to be watching something out the window. They giggled and pointed and jumped up and down. Next Trix made an appearance wearing rouge and lipstick and a fur coat which Zussie recognized as Anneke's. "Good night, Dick!" she murmured lovingly to Irene, who was dressed in a topcoat and long trousers, her blond locks pushed up under the top hat.

From Anneke Huidekoper's scarlet countenance it was easy to guess that the performance was a complete surprise to her. She covered her face with her hands as though she found the kissing scene excruciatingly prolonged. But Zussie felt even sorrier for her during the last act. This showed the three princesses telling all the servants what they had witnessed from their bedroom windows.

Juliana laughed until the tears ran down her cheeks. Bernhard, too, joined in the fun, but he looked tired and drawn, Zussie thought. His solicitous glance strayed often to his wife.

When Zussie and her husband left the palace at eleven, the waiting crowds were still here, moving their arms and feet to keep warm. She was glad they did not know what she knew, what Doctor de Groot had intimated to her shocked ears during dinner.

I hope it's not a boy! she thought. When Irene was born, and Pietie, she had hoped for a boy. Now she thought, Trix must be queen!

In the morning she awoke to the sound of cannon fire booming across the frozen fields and canals. Juliana's child had been born that night! Hardly daring to breathe, Zussie sat rigidly on the edge of her bed, and began to count.

Next month: Juliana becomes queen—"Are you going to reign a bit, mommie?" asked Pietie.

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

THE higher the income, the more apt there is to be parsley on the plate.

Domestic relations: the ones you feed in the kitchen.

Small sister, watching brother with girl friend: "They're hugging hands, mommie."

When a man boasts, it is an indication that he holds his listener in higher esteem than he does himself.

Two young boys overheard:
"Your hands are clean!"
"Yeah."
"Help your mom with the dishes?"
"Nah."
"The clothes?"
"Naah!"
"You mean you just washed them!"

A good family circle is best maintained by permitting members occasionally to take to their corners.

The ABC's of a bride: Always Be Calm.

A too-independent woman can take away the instinctive gallantry which makes a man want to protect, provide for and pamper the "weaker" sex.

A career woman works for a man; a housewife, because of a man.

Ah, yes, there are men who think a housewife's work can get done and stay done; and strange to say, they are usually married.

No married man or woman should try to make his future catch up with his mate's past.

A sign appearing in the window of an elderly gentleman's house has captured the heart of his neighborhood: "Dogs clipped, $2.00. Or if you can't afford it and it is for the benefit of the dog, will do it for nothing."

The one time a person should not live up to his fullest capacity is when he is on a diet.

Persons who have gone through several years of marriage should recognize the inevitability of sometimes quarreling, but never before their children.

Progressive education for girls: the shortest distance between finger painting and painting fingers.

If a child telephones a parent to wish him a happy birthday and reverses the charge, the parent must gather his crumbs of comfort where he can; at least he didn't have to put in the call.

"The way to forget your worries," says our favorite cleaning woman, "is to write them in a letter and mail it to yourself. When you get the letter back, in a few days, you'll be surprised that most of those troubles are just little ones, because by that time you are probably working on an entirely new batch."

At twenty, when a man turns to look at a woman she knows why, but a decade or two later she glances in the next store window to see if something is showing.

Our local bachelor says, "The straighter the seams in her nylons, the more apt a girl is to be single."

"I never quite get rid of the feeling when dressing the daughters up to look their best that I'm working against myself."

Parenthood: when you can use the experience you haven't had.
Grandparenthood: when you can't use the experience you've had.

No man knows his true character until he has run out of gas, purchased something on the installment plan, and raised an adolescent.

Bleaches as it cleans. Bab-O scientists now bring you a new Bab-O that contains bleach. Millions of tiny bleach bubbles of activated oxygen give new Bab-O its amazing whitening power. Saves rubs—saves scrubs! Bleaches out coffee, tea and fruit stains from sinks as no other cleanser can.

New bleach "bubble-action" makes pots and pans shine. See how Bab-O floats away grease without hard rubbing. Cuts 4 times more grease—faster than any other cleanser. Get Bab-O in the regular or giant size, now!

SAFE! for colored porcelains—safe for lovely hands.
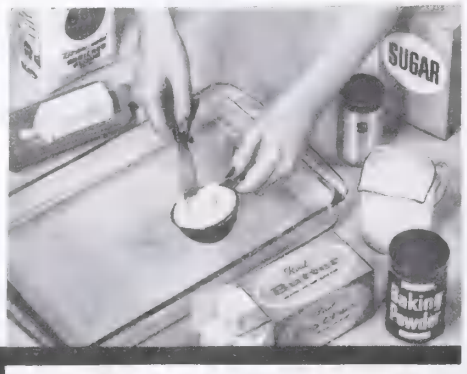
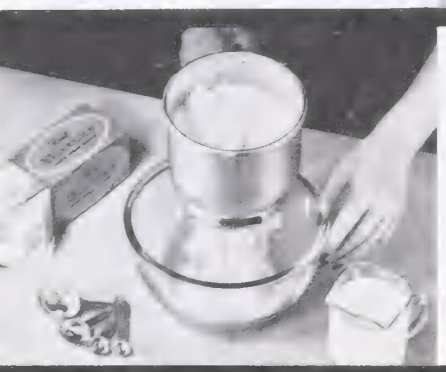
And M-m-m . . . Bab-O smells nice, too!

Only Bab-O BLEACHES as it CLEANS!

How to make new, oven-fresh



Butter Dips



Crispy Hot Breads . . . dipped and baked in real butter!

⅓ cup BUTTER (for pan)
3½ tsps. baking powder 2¼ cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour 1½ tsps. salt
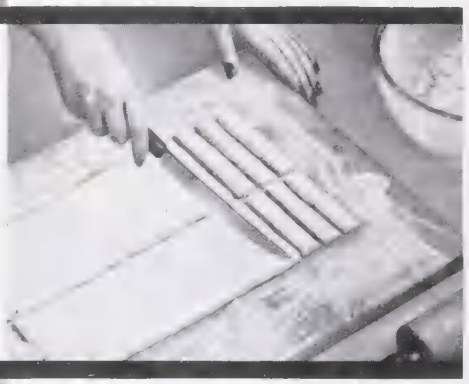
1 tbsp. sugar 1 cup milk

You can't beat the real thing—real butter

1. Butter the pan—Heat oven to 450° F. (hot oven). Measure ⅓ cup of soft butter and spoon it into oblong pan, either metal or glass, 13 x 9½ x 2 inches. Place pan in oven just until the butter is melted. Remove from oven immediately when butter is melted.



You taste the difference even more on hot foods

2. Sift the dry ingredients—First sift 2¼ cups flour. Then sift flour again with 1 tablespoon sugar, 3½ teaspoons baking powder, 1½ teaspoons salt. Next add gradually 1 cup milk. Stir mixture slowly with fork until dough just clings together (about 30 strokes).

Butter is churned from 100% real cream

3. Roll and cut—Turn out on well floured board. Roll over to coat with flour. Knead lightly about 10 times. Roll out ½" thick into rectangle, 12" x 8". With floured knife, cut dough in half lengthwise. Then cut each half crosswise into 16 strips (32 strips in all).

Your family deserves real butter

4. Dip in butter—Pick up cut strips in both hands and dip each strip on both sides in melted butter. Next lay them close together in two rows in the same pan in which butter is melted. Bake at 450° F. 15 to 20 minutes until golden brown. Makes 32. Variations: Add ½ cup grated cheese to dry ingredients, or ¼ cup minced chives or parsley.

Foods made with real butter belong on your family table

This message is paid for by dairy farmers across the Nation as part of their program to show you how you can live better with foods made from milk

American Dairy Association

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer" • 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois

Watch Disneyland on ABC-TV, Bob Crosby on CBS-TV

COMING OUT PARTY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 67

to bite your tongue even if they are made to resemble slightly the innocent rosebuds and brazenly bite some more, pretending they have thorns. Cucumbers, wilted or crisp as the sheet of foolscap Uncle Dudley's last will was written on, and hard-cooked eggs (cook them twenty minutes if you want them perfect) with herb dressing. Have anything else you can think of. How can you go wrong?

EGGS WITH HERB DRESSING

Shell 6 hard-cooked eggs. Cut into halves lengthwise and place them in a shallow dish. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Mix ½ cup salad oil with 3 tablespoons vinegar. Season with ½ teaspoon basil, ½ teaspoon tarragon, ½ teaspoon orégano, ¼ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and ¼ teaspoon Tabasco. Mix well and pour over the eggs. Marinate in the refrigerator for half an hour. Remove from marinade and garnish each egg half with a rolled anchovy with a caper in the center.

One hot dish. For years I've been told that one hot dish should appear at every meal. I haven't always faithfully followed or minded that admonition, but I'm doing it now and making it hot, savory and hearty, that the guests may go back to their dancing and cards or kibitzing with that wonderful, satisfied feeling that follows only a good meal. The chief dish here is a casserole of chicken and meat balls; and by the way, it's one of those dishes that are made to order to grace that brand-new chafing dish the boys gave you on your birthday. Give it a mind someday. And here's the receipt:

CHICKEN-AND-MEAT-BALL CASSEROLE

Have a 3-to-3½-pound ready-to-cook-weight frying chicken cut up. Sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper. Dust with a mixture of 3 tablespoons flour and 1 teaspoon paprika. In a large skillet brown the chicken well in ¼ cup shortening.

Take out the chicken and add ½ pound mushrooms, peeled and sliced, and 1 medium onion, sliced. Cook slowly until lightly browned. Then mix in any flour that is left with the fat that is in the pan.

Add chicken to onion and mushrooms in the frying pan, add ¾ cup water, cover and simmer slowly for 15 minutes. Add tiny meat balls made from a mixture of ½ pound ground beef, 1 slice bread soaked in water and squeezed, ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, and a pinch each of thyme and marjoram. Makes about 25 meat balls. They should be very small urchins compared with their big brothers. Continue cooking 30 minutes longer or until chicken is tender. Then break up 1 package partially thawed frozen peas and add to chicken and meat balls. Season with ½ teaspoon salt and cook until peas are just tender, about 5 minutes. Be sure the chicken is very tender. Double or more this receipt according to the hungry guests.

An old sweet song. "In the Day of Jubilee"—an old song and one I sang lustily in the old days. In the Deep South every camp meeting resounded with its soul-stirring words and music. And it was there I learned it. And although most of the words are forgotten, every time I see a receipt—and there seem to be a lot—with that name at the top, I think back and hear again those sweet Negro voices praising the Lord in the only way they knew, in song and "testimony" for Jordan's wondrous crossing. In the Day of Jubilee.

So here again is one of those dessert receipts we've named as we've done before; and whether you've heard or remember or not that old sweet song, you'll remember this.

CREAM JUBILEE

Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in 3 tablespoons cold water. Mix 1¼ cups milk, ¼ cup sugar and ⅛ teaspoon salt and heat in the double boiler. Separate 2 eggs and beat yolks lightly. Stir hot milk into the egg yolks. Cook and stir over hot water until slightly thickened. Add softened gelatin and stir until dissolved. Remove from heat and add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Cool until the mixture is slightly thickened. Beat the egg whites until stiff. Gradually beat in ¼ cup sugar. Whip 1 cup heavy cream until stiff. Fold the meringue and the whipped cream into the cooled custard. Turn into a 5-cup mold or into individual molds. Chill until firm. Serve with cherry-and-strawberry sauce. Garnish with ⅓ cup toasted blanched almond halves, disposed in a pattern on top. This reminds me. But never mind. At the moment time's awasting and things are bodacious enough as it is.

Cherry-and-Strawberry Sauce: Pit 3 cups dark sweet cherries. Mix in a saucepan with 1¼ cups water, ½ cup sugar, 5 teaspoons lemon juice, a 2" strip of lemon peel, a pinch of salt and 3 or 4 drops red food coloring. Add 2 tablespoons cornstarch mixed with 3 tablespoons cold water to make a smooth paste. Stir it into the above mixture. Cook and stir until clear and thickened, then continue cooking and stirring 10 minutes more. Cool thoroughly. Then add ½ pint fresh strawberries, sliced. The frozen ones are all right. If you use canned black sweet cherries for the sauce, drain sirup from a 1-pound-13-ounce can, add a 2" strip lemon peel and 1½ tablespoons lemon juice. Mix 1½ tablespoons cornstarch with 2 tablespoons water and stir into cherry sirup. Cook and stir until clear and thickened; continue cooking and stirring 10 minutes more. Add cherries. Cool thoroughly. Then add ½ pint fresh strawberries, sliced, if desired.

June, they say, is the month of roses—also weddings. Well, I grew roses for years, and mine bloomed all summer. As for weddings, June will have a hard time keeping ahead of September and October.

Yours,
ANNIE THE ICONOCLAST

SILHOUETTE

By ELIZABETH GRAHAM

I was called at dusk
To a mountain shack,
Where the light was by candle
And the flame shrank back

When I opened the door;
And there wasn't any greeting.
Or slow, memoried smile
To mark this meeting.

The room's thinnest shadow
Sought release, tossed and turned,
When the draft bit in deeper,
And the candle coughed and burned.

The stars took to drowning
In rain that hadn't fallen;
The wind rose to answer
The thunder's rough calling;

And I sat in a chair
With my gray pride gone,
And the night grew colder,
And the night went on.

•

The clouds broke open
And the dark world sighed,
And my lover kissed me
Before he died.

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 41

valiantly setting out a trio of buds. I decided oday, while watering them, that African vio- ets, like love, know no season.

In June the dog shows are out of doors. Now we take Hollyberry and hope she will not scent some lush pheasant just as she is doing the long down. She is always so eager, and she scents everything from a bone on the tip- op of the refrigerator to a bit of cheese locked n the cupboard by the range.

The only thing Holly cannot understand is why a great Dane looms so large. When she sees one, she wilts. I suspect we would feel the same if we saw the men from Mars in the back yard, metallic and iridescent and secure. (I assume Mars has no bombs, but has every- hing else.)

Jill has been cooking madly with the electric frying pan, just to see how much she could cook in it. She reports that with this one item, plus a coffee maker, you could live hand- omely. If my daughter were now in college, nstead of teaching at one, I should endow her with an electric frying pan, for it seems every- hing from omelets to beef Stroganoff can be done in one. For next Christmas we have listed electric frying pans for all three of the children. Equally good in a one-room apart- ment or for an Army medic and wife, or for the making of creamed things for the grand- child.

"Summertime an' the living is easy," goes one of George Gershwin's songs. It is so. Days are warm and the sun is a golden ball tossed in the deep sea of the sky. Evenings are cool enough for a fire, in case we want to sit and read or do a jigsaw puzzle. Mornings are a deep pinky pearl, and all the dogs begin yelling for their breakfasts very early as the light is so high.

It is definitely, for us country dwellers, a working month, what with the garden and the lawn and every dog needing a bath, and always the windows need washing. When we relax, we can always freeze peas.

But the world is so beautiful that nothing seems hard, everything is soft and gentle. And even if we go nine miles for new curtain rods and find out they gave us the wrong hooks for them, we take it calmly. We just drive back and exchange them.

I am minded of how ladies were supposed to behave not so long ago. They could make fire- place fans out of paper, or make wax flowers or paint water colors, and they could supervise the servants as they boiled a leg of mutton. They could never interfere with their hus- bands' real life in the world, and they were al- ways to be meek and unassuming.

Sometimes I wonder what our egg woman would say if I told her this, as she whips in at dusk with two dozen new-laid eggs. She is young and pretty, her children are all in school now, she works all day in the business and rides around half the evening delivering eggs. She looks a thoroughly happy woman, I may say. No paper fans for her.

I think the new idea of a marriage being a working partnership is a fine and sound one, and in our valley it works out. The grocery is a family proposition with the charming young wife checking out as the husband weighs the onions. They have fun working together, one has only to look at them to know.

And I am sure our overburdened wonderful doctor would just give up without his sweet, gentle and gay wife who acts as office nurse, balances the books, talks with patients over the phone, gives all the prescribed injections, and skids over icy roads all winter doing er- rands for a family of four children. They both work from twelve to twenty hours a day, but before they finally turn in they have good hot cocoa or coffee by the fire and let the tensions of the day ease. I just could not imagine Mrs. G. preferring to do needlepoint or play a "stringed instrument" while Alex went a solitary way!

We read so much about what is wrong with marriage—but I think the truth is that the happy marriages never make the headlines.

June nights are really the color of chalced- ony. The quality of the moonlight is so cool and pure, and against it the little supper lights flash out all along the curving country roads. I like to think how all things come home at eventide: birds with the day's flying over, chil- dren with the shouting and roller skating done, country cats snug in the sweet hay in the barns, farm dogs dozing on the back steps. Hens cluck drowsily in George's chicken house, and the cows are stiller than field mice.

The jet planes roar over us in the daytime; now I like to consider that beyond the jet planes there is the moon, rising over the apple trees in the old accustomed silence and glory.

These are times of terrible stress; nobody knows our destination, as a country, as a peo- ple. It is good, I think, to pin one's faith on the moon, who has been around a long, long time, and may well shine as silver on our children's children!

How sweet the roses smell on a warm June night!

OFF THE CITY STREETS

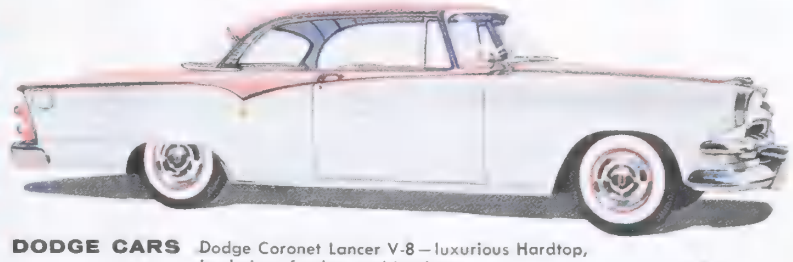
CONTINUED FROM PAGE 46

Not for anything would she admit to a greater interest or to the fact that she still smarted from the remembered slight. A month before, Ma had come forward among the very first with an offer to house, feed and care for two of the city children, and the mayor had thought it best to tell her that she was too old.

"Don't feel too old to take in a couple of wavers for two weeks," Ma had replied, sit- ting across from him. "Raised seven kids of my own with no trouble to nobody ——"

The young mayor was forty-two years old, and Ma had known him, she thought, since he was in diapers. Of course she knew his father a lot better. The old mayor's path and Ma's had crossed often and there had been violent clashes between them, particularly during pro- hibition, when the Baggleys operated a still out behind their barn. From the present emptiness of her life, Ma frequently looked back to those stimulating times as a golden age in Baggley family history.

"I know that, Ma," the young mayor said, "and it's mighty good of you to offer. I guess you could use the money as well as the next one too." Ma give a start. She did not know the Sunshine Fund was contributing toward the support of the children, and his inference that it was the desire for money which had prompted her offer sent the color up into her face. "You see, what we're looking for, Ma, is people with youngsters around the same age as these New York kids: seven to fourteen. That's one of the rules the people from the fund laid down. It's so the kids won't get lonesome. I'm all hipped on this idea. It'll get these kids off the streets for a while, give them some fresh air, teach 'em a little how a farm is run, and it ought to do our own kids good to meet them. Might sharpen them up a little. And I'm proud of our folks. Doc Bradshaw's taking four, the Havenses are taking two, my wife and I are down for six—and with our own three I don't know where we're all going to fit, but that's how it's been going. We're practically filled up." It was the brush-off for Ma and she knew it. She sat rubbing her hand across the bat- tered frame of her handbag. "Yep, I'd say you better let this go by, Ma," the young mayor told her. "It'd be too much for you. Time you started taking things easy. It's not that you wouldn't do a swell job of it."



But Ma knew what he and the town thought of her and of her farm, fallen into disuse over the years. When she went out and down the hall past the waiting applicants, there were grins and titters, and for one of the few times in her life Ma felt rejected and old and tired. With only a grandniece now at the farm—and nothing particularly cheerful about her—it would have been nice to have a few boys racing around the place again, raising a little Cain. . . .

WITH ONLY YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS—

YOU CAN WIN

IN THE LUX LIQUID "FREE-FOR-ALL"!

3

DODGE CARS Dodge Coronet Lancer V-8—luxurious Hardtop, in choice of color combinations

10

15" ADMIRAL COLOR TV CONSOLES

new single dial tuning for breathtakingly true color reception

50

Artcarved DIAMOND RINGS

Registered and guaranteed by Artcarved America's foremost ringmaker

100

CHESTS ONEIDA COMMUNITY STERLING*

Service for Six in exquisite Engagement* pattern in anti-tarnish chest

*Trade-mark Oneida Ltd., Oneida, New York

AND everyone who enters gets a free gift—a handy wall bracket for Lux Liquid, and a coupon worth 10¢

All you have to do is send me your name and address!

You don't have to buy a thing, or even write anything—except your name and address. Use a postcard or the coupon below and you'll automatically be entered in my Free For All.

I'll also send you a handy little wall bracket to hold a can of Lux Liquid. And a 10¢ coupon for Lux Liquid. Get your name and address to me right away!

ARTHUR GODFREY

ARTHUR GODFREY
BOX 1507
NEW YORK 46, N.Y.

Please enter me in the Lux Liquid Free For All

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Employees of Lever Brothers and their advertising agencies are not eligible to enter. All entries for Lux Liquid Free For All must be postmarked not later than midnight, June 17, received by June 27, 1955.

As the train, clanging and hissing, ground to a halt, the high-school band struck up East Side, West Side; the townspeople cheered and waved, and with a crash of thunder the first big raindrops fell. Down onto the platform swarmed one hundred and twenty excited boys and girls and the station was immediately loud with their shouts and calls and exclamations. There were bobbing heads, dazzled eyes, wide grins, tears, eagerness, bewilderment, bubble gum, pigtails, rucksacks, comic books, toy pistols, a pair of leg braces, missing teeth, dolls, a black eye, blue jeans, sneakers. The high, excited din of their city voices fell strangely on Ma's ears. Accustomed to underprivileged children—the mother of seven—she was nonetheless appalled by many in the group. Thin, rickety, tough, at once fierce, ragged and pitiable, they'd give you a fright, Ma thought, turning away, struck to the heart. Harried supervisors had accompanied the children and they bore lists of names and referee whistles. There was a hasty counting off as the children were lined up in twos and crowded in under the shed to avoid getting wet.

The train pulled out and the mayor climbed up on the platform: "—— among friends, because that's what we all are here. We're going to do everything in our power to give you the best two weeks you've ever had ——" The rain, turning into a downpour, cut short his address. "Folks—folks, that's right. I think if you'll all crowd in under the shed, we'll get started right away. These kids know we're glad to have them, so let's go." There was a crush forward around Ma and her car. The mayor himself remained out on the open platform, calling off the names while the shoulders of his suit turned dark with rain. "Hadley! Mr. and Mrs. Hadley! Will you take Michael Espisito and John Cotter? . . . Kids, as your names are called, will you step over to this side and meet your folks? And will the supervisors see to it that the right kids —— All right. Mr. and Mrs. Craver. Oh, just Mrs. Craver's here. Well, you get Florence Beebe and Diane Edwards. O.K.? And folks, as soon as you get the kids, if you'll move right on out to make room here? Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, I have you down for Joseph Barron and Edgar Stevens. O.K." He looked up. "What's the trouble here? What's their names? Florence Beebe and Diane Edwards? They go with Mrs. Craver. Well, she was here with her two girls —— They what? Just gone to bring the car up closer? O.K., then. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller ——"

The afternoon turned steadily darker and the rain beat down in loud sheets. There were crowding and confusion as people sorted out the children, looking from one identification tag to another. Ma saw her townsfolk overcome initial shock and dismay in some cases, smile bravely, grab hold of the children and scoot out across the rain with them. The vehicles began to pull away in all directions as if there had been a rout. The mayor's wife, who was putting up the supervisors until the night train came through, ducked out with them and the six children she was adopting.

In the end, the mayor, hoarse, baffled, soaking wet, was left with several children and no foster parents to claim them. Ned and Sally Peters had not put in an appearance to call for their two boys; and Mrs. Craver had not called back for Florence Beebe and Diane Edwards. Near Ma, four boys sprawled disgustedly on the baggage truck. Ready to move on, Ma felt sorry for them, abandoned, unwanted, yet she could understand the foster parents' losing heart at first glance: a tougher-looking quartet she had never beheld.

Her eyes took in the two girls, Florence Beebe and Diane Edwards. One, about ten or eleven years old, was stout, eyeglassed and timid, in a clean blue dress that was too short and childish for her. She appeared close to tears, flinching each time one of the boys on the truck struck her bare legs with a wad of paper or a pebble exploded from a strong rubber band twisted around his fingers. The other girl—"Diane Edwards" was printed on her identification tag—was perhaps a year older, thin and slattern and narrow-eyed, with a wise, sallow face and a painted mouth. She smacked her gum swiftly and loudly, and one foot in a dirty white semi-high-heeled shoe maintained a restless tapping. Her hands were rammed into the pockets of an open, sagging gray sweater.

"MAYOR"—the stationmaster came out, starting to lock up for the night—"I got Allen Craver on the phone an' he says his wife was took sick here all of a sudden; an' he don't think he can do nuthin' about takin' in the two girls they promised. I tried the Twitchells but they don't answer. May Frame tells me Miz Twitchell was home 'cause she put through a call for her over to Stewart Falls just a little while ago but she ain't answerin' now."

"Well, I can't take these kids over to my place," the mayor said in a low voice. "We're bulging as it is. What am I going to do?"

Bulge a little more, Ma thought, enjoying the last laugh as she climbed into her car. It had been, in all, a fairly interesting afternoon, but she was glad to call it quits: it was rapidly growing colder and in the dampness she could feel twinges of arthritis in her joints. She switched on the ignition and after a bronchial whirring, the engine turned over. Ma was content now to go home; she looked forward to a leisurely, relaxed weekend.

"Ma! Hey, Ma!" The mayor came running over and poked his head in the window. "How's about doing me a big favor? I have these supervisors up at my house and I'd hate for them to hear about this mix-up. It looks bad for the whole town. How's about taking these kids to your place for a couple of hours till I can straighten things out a little? They can't wait here alone, and I got to get on back."

"Me take them?" Ma grinned, savoring her triumph. "No siree, not me. I'm 'too old,' Harry. You better ask someone else. I'm afraid they'd be too much for me, remember?"

"Ma, what can I do with them?" the mayor asked. "Come on, be a sport. Just help me out of this fix till the supervisors get out of here. At the very latest I'll have them off your hands in the morning."

"In the morning! Why, I couldn't put up all them kids! I don't have beds enough or ——"

"Put them anyplace. You had seven kids. You know how to manage ——"

MA looked past him through the rain at the children. They were aware of what was being discussed; the four boys had risen to their feet, waiting to come forward but afraid of a further rebuff. Ma felt herself suddenly on trial as a human being. The longer she looked, the less tough they seemed; individually, she thought, they weren't so bad. And the two girls had picked up their belongings. . . . A semicircle of steady, waiting young eyes met Ma's.

"Well, as long as it's just for a few —— Oh, all right, I'll—I'll take 'em. Come on!" she called. "Come on, hop in!" And as she was wondering where she was going to put all six, the mayor, by a feat of legerdemain, produced two more, two little colored boys eight or nine years old who had been sitting off by themselves on the other side of the station. He piled them in the front seat beside the two girls. It was the grin, Ma said to herself. The grin on them two little dark faces. I couldn't say no.

"Ma, thanks a million." The mayor slammed the car door. "I'll repay whatever it costs ——"

"Forget it. There won't be no cost just for one meal. Couldn't very well leave you out in the rain, could I?"

"No," they said. "Gee, thanks, lady." . . . "Thanks a lot."

The car with its eight underprivileged children and their possessions started off for Ma's farm four miles outside Turnersville.

"Well, what do you think of the country?" Ma asked when they had gone a little way.

"I guess the country's all right ——" The answers were uncertain. "I never been in the country before ——" Gratitude was a fleeting thing to some of the boys in the back seat. If Ma felt she had been left with the scrapings of the barrel, they felt they had struck rock bottom too. "We hit the jack pot all right," Ma presently heard. "We git the lousiest car of all." . . . "Where we goin'?" . . . "Shaddap!" . . . "Hey, git your feet offa me!" Someone hit one of the little Negroes a loud slap on the head. The beanie the other was wearing, covered with celluloid buttons, was flicked off and tossed out the side window. The two little boys said nothing. "Hey, there's a cow! T'ree, four, five cows! In the rain!" . . . "Hey"—the question was addressed to Ma, crowded at the wheel—"hey, how's about lettin' us go home? We don't like it here." . . . "Hey, lady, the rain's comin' in the roof."

In the early-evening downpour, Ma grimly swung in between the sagging white fence posts that were half obliterated by high weeds. The car jounced in the ruts of the wagon path, scraped under the low branches of an apple tree and came to a halt just inside the crowded cobwebby barn. "Now, all out. Get your stuff and scoot down there and in that side door. Some of you big boys, give me a hand here with these heavy packages." Her arms loaded down with provisions, she plowed after them through the soaking, mosquito-infested grass.

The farmhouse was small, crooked, low and weather-beaten. Two attached sheds were in an advanced state of collapse; shingles were missing here and there; a shutter hung askew and one windowpane had been patched with cardboard some twenty years ago. The New York children were all crowded on the tiny side porch, waiting to be admitted.

"Say, what's all this? Who are you anyway?" Ma's grandniece was demanding, refusing to unlock the screen door. In the dimness she stood before them, pretty, careless-looking in her sleeveless house dress, her

"Remember their Anniversary"

ON ANNIVERSARIES
Say it with Flowers-By-Wire

Let your Flowers-By-Wire be a part of their happy celebration. F.T.D. will carry your sentiments, telegraph-fast, to those you love . . . when you can't be there. Delivery worldwide is guaranteed by your F.T.D. Florist . . . the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit
Your F.T.D. Florist

TRADEMARK

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
Send Flowers Worldwide
INTERFLORA

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

blond hair twisted tight to her scalp with metal curlers.

"It's company," Ma said, squeezing in between her guests. "Let me in." Ellie unlocked the door and fell back as the children raced past her into the small unlighted dining room.

"Well, who —— You gone out of your mind?" Ellie cried. "What's the big idea?"

"Tell you soon as I ketch my breath." Ma turned to the children. "Just—just find a place for yourselves and sit down, and then . . . well, we'll see what we'll do." She drew Ellie into the lighted kitchen and partly closed the door. "Listen, I had to!" she said, unpinning her damp jacket. "These are some of the kids from New York an' no one else would take them. It's only for tonight. Harry Bannister's going to pick them up first thing in the morning."

"You mean they're going to sleep here? All that raft of kids? Where?"

"Well, now, I—well, never mind about that. Just see what you can do about hustling them up something to eat. I thought I'd make a pan of saleratus biscuits if you'd ——"

"I'm not getting supper for any bunch of kids. I'm going to East Milton to the dance and I got to get ready." Ellie's voice could clearly be heard in the suddenly quiet dining room. She turned a rebellious back, picked up an iron from the wood stove, tested it with a wet finger, unrolled her dampened pink cotton dress and spread it on the ironing board.

"You're as bad as the rest of them," said Ma. "How would you like it if you was landed in a strange place an' no one took you in?"

"If it was here," Ellie retorted with feeling, "I'd be lucky!"

"You'd think it was my fault you can't go flyin' off to the city. I'm not holding you back, Lord knows." Ma had watched all her children leave, but it just seemed something went wrong every time Ellie had a little money put aside. Last year after working all summer at Barg's soda fountain, Ellie came down with a bad throat; and before they knew it, Doc Bradshaw had her tonsils out and handed her a bill for seventy-five dollars, wiping out the last penny of her savings.

Injured silence held in the kitchen. Ellie boned and Ma sliced off wedges of salt pork, put potatoes on to boil and began to make her saleratus biscuits. It had been many years since Ma had done any cooking on a large scale and the task of getting a meal together for such a number presented sudden doubts as to her continued ability. Had she put in too much baking soda? Too much milk? And how many potatoes would they eat?

She left her work to go to the dining-room door and snap on the light. "Any of you big boys here handy about milkin' a cow?"

A CIRCLE of surprised, even shocked, young eyes met hers. Some of the boys had been sitting apathetically about the table, their rucksacks and belongings piled before them. The thin older girl sat apart chewing her gum and swinging her foot nervously; the other girl stood close by her, looking frightened. None of them knew the first thing about milking.

"Where—where's the other two?" Ma asked. "Them two little darky boys?"

After a silence, the thin girl said, "Outside."

"Outside? Where?"

"Ask them." With a toss of her head, she indicated the boys.

Mystified, Ma went to the screen door to look and she saw the two little boys sitting on the tiny wet open porch only a few feet away. "Say, you'll get all wet there," she exclaimed. "Come in out of there." The two boys hopped off the railing, then stood waiting, and Ma saw that the door had been locked. "Who bothered to lock the door?" she asked, mildly surprised at their city habits; part way through the sentence she was aware of missing the point, of sounding old and foolish to them. The suspicion crossed her mind that the two little boys had been banished because of their color, yet as they stepped into the room their polite faces were blank of expression and the other faces, all save that of the older girl, were reassuring, seemingly unstudied, innocent: they were just the faces of children.

What is meant by a "knowledge of the world" is simply an acquaintance with the infirmities of men.
—DICKENS

BEFORE they ate, Ma told them where the privy was, out in back—the city children were shocked at this—and showed them the black iron sink and the kitchen pump. One or two tried the noisy pump for novelty's sake but none felt like washing and that was perfectly all right with Ma. After giving each a plate, Ma took up her stance at the stove. "Now as each of you come past, I'll give you your vittles and you can take 'em inside to eat. This kitchen's too upset to sit —— Ladies first, there—and no shoving! You'll find plenty of sirup and buttermilk in on the table." It was scorching hot at the stove and the desire for a can of beer had for some time been gaining on Ma, but before the children she felt it wouldn't look just right. Swallowing past her cottony dryness, she went on shoveling out the potatoes, the pork, the suspiciously heavy biscuits.

While she was standing up, eating her own supper from a small cleared space at the kitchen table, Ellie came down the back stairs in her pink dress and her high-heeled white shoes. Her light hair was brushed out and shining and she was wearing the enamel flower earrings and necklace she had sent away for. She was a right pretty girl, Ma thought with family pride; it was a shame she had to go and spoil it with that sullen disposition. People sort of looked down on Ellie because she was old Ma Baggley's grandniece.

"I'll be drowned going over there in that jeep of his," Ellie said as if speaking to herself.

Real huffy tonight, Ma thought. She walked to the doorway of the dining room and stood smiling in at the children eating at the round table. The two silent little colored boys had their plates on the floor in the corner near the harmonium. Kept from the table by the others? That was the impression Ma caught, but the situation was too complex for her to settle in one evening. Let someone else worry about it, she told herself. I'm glad I'm not saddled with them for more than one night. It's true what Harry Bannister said: they would be too much for me. I'd sort of forgot what kids can be like.

At a rap at the back screen door she turned around and Frank Manning came in swinging a dripping Army poncho from his shoulders. He had come across the fields from his own place in back, evidently on foot, for his shoes were muddy, his sun-tan pants were wet up past the knees and a white T shirt was plastered to his back. His black hair was wet and tangled and his jaw unshaven.

"What's the matter?" Ellie shot him a swift glance. "Why aren't you ready?"

"We can't go," he said. "I'm sorry, but my check didn't come and ——"

"Oh, I might have known!" she stormed. "Every time you ask me to go anyplace you're always 'sorry,' we can't go, you haven't got any money!"

"Well, I am sorry, Ellie. I been trying all over to borrow a couple of bucks."

"Don't talk to me! From now on, don't even come around!"

He stood before her, big and physically strong, yet powerless.

"Frank," said Ma, "maybe I could let you have four or five dollars this time ——"

"Never mind!" Ellie shouted. "Don't bother! I wouldn't go with him!" In tears she ran up the stairs and slammed the door.

Frank, irresolute, turned to leave.

"Frank, sit down. Here," Ma said. "Don't pay her no heed. She don't mean half the things she says. What happened, anyway?"

He sat down and put his head in his hands. "The VA held up my disability check. That last one must have been the end. I guess now I'm all better," he said bitterly.

Hobbling a little with arthritis, Ma went over to the sink. "Well, you are, aren't you?"

"Yeah. Far as that goes, I been all right for the past couple of months. It's just—I don't know. I don't blame Ellie. I'm all ——"

"Well, didn't you finish the job for the Cotters? Fixin' their roof?"

"He didn't like the way I was doing it, so I quit. And then I had a run-in with that cheap skate Diffenderfer. He came over to tell me he won't need me the next two weeks—this is after I even came down on my price for helping him get in his crop of bush peas. And that's real blood money, working for him. I wasn't looking forward to it, but that's out too."

"Oh, Frank!" Looking down at him, dejected and angry, Ma was assailed by the memory of his return from Korea on crutches, his leg in a heavy cast, a hero then, smiling and spruce and confident, with everyone autographing the cast and promising to help him out. Well, Ma thought, people had tried; it was Frank himself who had failed, had changed. The mayor had put him in two good easy jobs, both of which Frank had quit through "war nerves." That's what folks called it, but the mayor had grown disgusted and felt Frank should have pulled himself together by now. What the mayor originally had in mind for Frank was the job as football coach and athletic director of the high school. The injury to Frank's leg had kept him out of this during the past school term, and in the meanwhile the two stopgap jobs had been offered. Charity, Frank called it, and after throwing the last job away only two months

OF COURSE, just about everything looks nicer in candlelight—but there's a special reason why Heather is so lovely. The etched pattern has a frosty finish, glows in candlelight as if lighted from inside. We leave the rest of the surface clear, and being hand-blown lead crystal, it sparkles brilliantly. This makes a charming study in contrasts, lovely in any light. (Just nicer with candles.) The illustration only hints at Heather's beauty, so we hope you'll see it "in person". The suggested place setting we show here is $11.50*. Conveniently in open stock because it's made by the Fostoria Glass Company in Moundsville, West Virginia.

slightly higher in the West*

FOSTORIA

It's easier to be wise than otherwise

...even though you lack experience in baby care. Just do as the experts do. In swabs, for example—

More doctors and mothers have used 'Q-TIPS'...

More babies have been cared for by 'Q-TIPS'...

...than all other cotton swabs combined!

Recommended by MARY MARGARET McBRIDE
NBC Radio — Mon. and Tues.

The box for you is blue!
Look for this famous blue box. Only 'Q-Tips' has the strip-off safety-seal, handy sliding tray.

IT'S A BEAUTY OPERATOR, TOO!

Keep 'Q-Tips' on your dressing table to blend on make-up, erase smudges, touch up hair the easy way. It's a marvelous manicuring and grooming aid.

Also available in Canada ■ Q-Tips®
Made by Q-Tips Inc., Long Island City, N. Y.

ago in an argument, he had been living alone on his little farm behind Ma's, doing occasional odd jobs and existing on his disability pension.

"And along with all this," Frank said, "Ellie tells me she's got about sixty-five bucks put away and when she gets twenty more, she'll take off. And that'll be all I'll need: if she goes." A sound from the dining room made Ma realize how silent her guests had been. "Who's inside?" Frank lifted his head.

"Some of the Sunshine Fund kids from New York. Harry Bannister asked me to take them in for the night." Ma went to the door. "You can bring your dirty dishes out."

Frank watched them file past his tipped-back chair, and after a moment he asked, "All you kids from New York? How—how's the Music Hall? And the Paramount? That was down near Times Square, wasn't it?"

"Sure. You been there?"

"I used to go there on furlough during the other war, hang around Times Square ——"

Ma, scraping the plates, volunteered the information that Frank had been wounded in both wars and had been awarded two Purple Hearts, three Bronze Stars and the Silver Star twice. This, though slightly exaggerated, caused the boys to look upon Frank with growing respect. "What'd you get the stars for?" Robbie, the oldest of the boys, asked, lighting a cigarette, and at first Frank glossed over the account, but as more questions came, he began to describe the incidents in greater detail. The rain drummed on the kitchen roof and behind the young listeners their shadows loomed up on the pine walls. Frank sat smoking nervously, talking and talking, finding a rapt, respectful audience, the sort he had had when he first came home from Korea.

In a momentary silence, Diane, the thin, old-looking girl, informed them that Florence's father had been killed in the other war; he had been an officer. Florence shrank at finding herself the center of interest, and in a high whisper answered Ma's questions. Yes, her father had been an Army officer. She lived with an aunt now. Her mother was away in a hospital sick. Diane coughed professionally and patted her flat chest. "TB," she explained.

At ten-thirty, after placing pans and basins through the house to catch the rain, Ma put her charges to bed. Most of them protested that they wanted to stay up to talk to Frank, but he, as if realizing how immature was his only remaining audience, grew uncommunicative. The two girls were brought upstairs to the spare bedroom between Ma's and Ellie's, and the boys were bedded down on the floor of the dining room and of the little farm parlor that was opened for the first time in more than six months. The old patchwork quilts that Ma dug out, some made by her grandmother, smelled musty, were worn and not very clean. Won't hurt them for one night, Ma told herself; by tomorrow they'll be in their rightful place with everything nice and clean around them.

By the time she returned to the kitchen, Ellie had come down in her old work dress, and was standing with her back turned, looking out at the rain. There was silence between Frank and Ellie, but her mere presence, Ma thought, was hopeful. Vastly tired, Ma eased herself into her rocking chair, worked her feet out of her shoes, at last opened a can of beer and passed another one on to Frank.

"Well, you know," Ma said after the first wonderful draught, "I went down there and offered, but I'm just as glad now that things worked out the way they done. I can see how I'd never be able to tussle with a pair of kids like those for the next two weeks. It's got sort of beyond me, that kind of work."

Frank said, "These kids somehow—they remind me of the ones, the orphans you'd see left knocking around in the rubble through Europe and Korea. I used to see them standing there, deserted or lost, little tiny kids, and there was never anything you could do because usually you'd be going up into the line. And I know the sight of them would—it'd tear the heart right out of me. And it's funny, it was the only thing that would. I wish right now I was only fixed so I could take the whole bunch of boys over to my place and give them a good time for their first two weeks in the country."

Ma rubbed her nose. "It's a funny world, all right. Here's these kids bein' bundled out of the city to give them a breath of fresh air, and here's Ellie breakin' her neck trying to get to the city. Maybe every summer we'll see you comin' back here for two weeks, Ellie, lookin' real peaked, to get built up a little ——"

"That'll be the day," Ellie said, her back still turned. "Once I get my heels out of here, no one will ever see a sign of me again."

"Yes; well, I heard people talk before," said Ma, a great believer in the fact that things somehow took care of themselves; with a sigh of content she punctured another can of beer.

The rain continued all through the next morning. After a breakfast of scrambled eggs and heavy buckwheat cakes, Ma directed the children to pack up their belongings and be ready when the mayor called to transport them to their foster homes. They hung about the little dining room, staring disconsolately out the two streaming small-paned windows. The slow hours dragged past. The boys fell to squabbling and fighting, and Ma, stepping over some of them, made her way to the telephone. She found the mayor's office closed, and when she called his house, there seemed some difficulty in getting him to come to the telephone.

"Hello, Ma," he said at last guardedly. "Look. Let me call you back in an hour," and before Ma could reply, he hung up on her.

That was at eleven. Another hour passed and there was no call, and by the minute the pent-up city children grew more restive and troublesome. "Whatta dump they bring us to. I'd rather be home. I bet he never calls for us." . . . "If they were goin' to take us away, why didn't they bring us to someplace good like Coney Island?" They began seizing and throwing one another's rucksacks about. A long pane of glass in the china closet was broken, someone was hurt and a fist fight ensued with two of the contestants—Robbie, the oldest boy, and a smaller boy named Whitey—punching each other and rolling around on the floor. This time on the telephone Ma was more direct with the mayor.

"Now see here," she said, still panting from her exertions to separate the two fighters, "either you come right out here for these divils or I'll pile 'em in the car an' deliver them over to your place lock, stock and barrel."

"Ma," he pleaded in a hoarse whisper, "I'm doing everything I can to find a place for them. Just give me another couple of hours. These supervisors—I didn't know it, but they're staying over the weekend, making another spot check of the places where the kids are allocated, and I don't want them to know about this because it might ruin it as far as taking any further batches of kids through the summer. I've been on the phone with Ned Peters and I got him to the point where he and his wife are willing to take in the two kids they were originally down for. If you want to do me a favor, you could drive them over there now. And if you'd call up the Twitchells and ask them ——"

"I won't ask them! I'll just bring the flaming kids over an' drop them off, and if they don't want them, then it's up to them to do something about it; I tell you I'm just about fed up!" Laboriously, on a paper bag, she copied down the names and the families who were to receive them. "All right, now, you're goin'," Ma said, turning away from the telephone.

"We goin' home? They gonna let us go back?"

Ned and Sally Peters had had a son, Teddy, fifteen years old, who had drowned the summer before, swimming at the foot of the Elephant's Toes, that high semicircle of smooth gray boulders up in the mountains behind Ma's farm. The Peterses had devoted their whole lives to Teddy, and after the tragedy people said she had changed more than he. It was a distinct surprise when she came forward and said she and Ned would be willing to take in two of the city boys for two weeks. Ma had heard that Teddy's room had been opened, his new bicycle taken down from the barn wall. But when the names were read out yesterday at the station, there was no sign of Ned or Sally.

The Peterses' house, set on a slight hill, shaded by a stand of maples, had acquired a blind, unlived-in air. Ma turned her chugging car up the wide silent driveway. When she sounded her horn Ned Peters came to the side door and stood looking unsmilingly out at Ma and the city youngsters.

"Howdy, Ned! Brought you your two kids!" Ma called encouragingly.

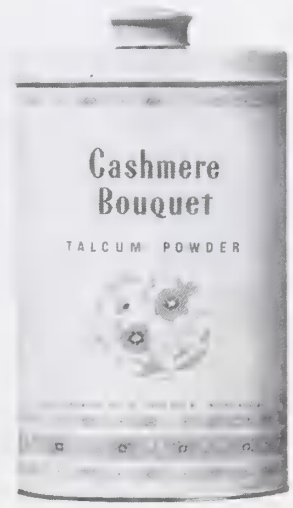
"See you a minute, Ma?" he asked. With misgivings Ma got out of the car and climbed the slight rise to the neat side porch. "I don't know what-all we're going to do about this," Ned Peters said, "but Sally's pretty well cut up. I just been talkin' to Harry Bannister ——"

"Well, maybe when Sally gets a look —— When she gets used to it, I know she'll be better. Suppos'n' I bring 'em in to her. Wait a minute now and I'll see which ones you get. I don't rightly know one from the other."

Ned Peters stepped inside the house to prepare his wife, and when Ma went down to the car and called the names off her list, she was shocked to see the two little colored boys climb out with their belongings.

"Now this is your place," she said, starting up the path with them. "You want to thank them nicely an' behave yourselves while you're

CONTINUED ON PAGE 112



"When you read the words of the princess, say them in a high voice."

How to make your life a bed of roses...

Relax to the satin feel of flowers on your skin,
the heady scent of flowers in the air...
the sheer luxury of having every inch of you soothed and sweetened with Cashmere Bouquet cashmere bouquet

Talcum Powder

59¢
29¢
Plus Tax

Is there an air of freshness about you . . . always?

A sweet, appealing air of freshness . . . is yours, always . . . when you use Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh keeps you free from embarrassing underarm odor and stains. Underarms are dry! For Fresh contains the most highly effective perspiration-checking ingredient now known to science.

When you open the Fresh jar you'll discover . . . its delicate fragrance . . . its whiteness, its whipped cream smoothness. Not a trace of stickiness. Not a trace of greasiness. Gentle to skin, too.

For an air of freshness use Fresh Cream Deodorant every day—be sure you are lovely to love, always.

Fresh is a registered trademark of Pharma-Craft Corporation. Also manufactured and distributed in Canada

a Fresh girl is always lovely to love

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 110

here, because they're nice quiet people." She looked down at the two kinky little heads. "Guess I don't have to tell you that, though, do I? 'Cause you're the best behaved of the lot. And you're goin' to be much better off here, away from all those bigger boys pesterin' you." Ma did not know what the Peterses would think of the fact that the boys were colored, but hoping for the best, she opened the door and shooed the two suddenly shy little figures ahead of her into the neat, empty kitchen.

Ned Peters returned and Ma saw the start he gave at the sight of the two boys. Sally, pale and shaking, trying to smile in welcome, came out of the dining room.

"Sally," said Ma in greeting, "I brung you two nice well-behaved little boys. This one's Wilbur, an' this one here's name's Arthur."

Sally looked up at Ma for a split second, shocked, then she looked back down again at the boys and tried to force the smile to her lips. The two little boys with trustful, solemn eyes wore the beginnings of smiles, waiting for the first sign of welcome.

"H-hello." Sally put forward a thin hand. Ma could see that she was trying her very best. "I'm happy to ——" She was shaking visibly. "I'm very ——" Suddenly, shockingly, she burst into tears. "Take them away. I can't! I can't!"

"Sally!" said Ned sharply.

"No!" Sally cried. "No! No! I don't want them!" She turned with a wrench and got herself out of the kitchen. Ma was struck dumb. Ned followed his wife inside. The kitchen seemed to echo with that refusal: No! No! I don't want them! Inside, Sally Peters could be heard crying, speaking incoherently through her tears.

"You—you boys wait right here," Ma said. She shut the swinging door behind her and stepped into the spare airless dining room where Sally was sitting on the edge of a chair, covering her face, rocking back and forth. Ned Peters stood helpless above her.

"It isn't that they're colored boys," Sally was protesting. "I wouldn't care what they are. They're not my Teddy!"

"Do you the world of good if you could take 'em, Sally," said Ma, bending over her. "It'd take your mind off yourself ——"

"I know, but I can't. It's too soon ——"

Ned Peters said, "When she said no, she couldn't yestiddy, everybody should have left her alone. You better go on, Ma. She'll be better soon's she quiets down a little."

THE two little boys were standing motionless as stone. Not even their heads had moved. Only their eyes, frightened now, lifted to Ma to see what was going to happen next.

"Come on outside with me a minute," Ma said, her heart turning over with pity. "I want to sort of explain something to both of you." In the shade at the foot of the steps Ma bent down and tried to explain to Wilbur and Arthur that Mr. and Mrs. Peters had lost a son last summer through drowning and that it was that fact and only that fact—"nuthin' else, I want you to remember that"—that prevented them from taking in the two boys. "It would have been the same for any little boys that came here, do you understand?"

Her heart was again flooded with pity when she looked down at the two little faces gazing straight ahead at the strange green unwelcoming countryside. For neither of the little boys believed what she was telling them.

Heavyhearted, she led them back to the car and opened the door. "The lady's sick in the house there," she explained to the others. "Found she's not up to takin' in any two little boys, so we'll—we'll have to find another place for them. A better place." The two little colored boys climbed in without saying a word.

The Cravers, after five years, were still considered new in Turnersville. Mr. Craver was president of the furniture factory over in Stewart Falls, and Mrs. Craver had instituted in Turnersville the Garden Society, the Music Appreciation Society and the Arts and Crafts Club. Ma's acquaintance with this cultured and talented family was somewhat limited. During the first year of the Cravers' residency Mrs. Craver stopped Ma on High Street, graciously introduced herself, explained that her electric washing machine was out of order and asked if Ma would be interested in doing a day's washing for her. "Go wash your own dirty clothes!" Ma had replied, affronted. A week later, driving home in the dusk, Ma almost missed her turn at Craver's corner, and made it only by smashing through the Cravers' new white picket fence, bringing down with it two recently planted birch trees. Ma, rather unsteady and befuddled, had generously offered to pay for all the damages, but the bill had staggered her and a long-drawn-out lawsuit had followed. The Cravers in the end had won only a moral victory, for Ma had never felt able to pay off on the verdict. It was with hesitancy that Ma now brought the same offending car to a halt before their house.

"Now this is where you two girls get out," Ma said. "There's two very nice little girls in the house so you won't feel at all lonesome."

In deference to the white gate, neat brick path and its edging of ruffled petunias, Ma made a pass at scooping up some of her white hair and reshifting a few hairpins. With Florence Beebe and Diane Edwards and their possessions, she went up the front steps, and though there was a bell to ring, Ma could not resist trying the polished brass knocker on the bright green door. Abbie Ford, remote and unfamiliar in a maid's gray uniform and white apron, opened the door politely and Ma and the girls stepped in on a hooked rug that had as its motif a large Newfoundland dog surrounded by a wreath of roses.

Good manners require a great deal of time, as does a wise treatment of children. —EMERSON

"Who is it, Abbie?" Mrs. Craver's cool voice came floating from somewhere.

"I—it's me, Miz Craver." Ma found herself walking into a large pantry where Mrs. Craver was arranging flowers at a copper sink; her two daughters, Penny and Barbara, in starched pinafores, were beside her, one holding the flowers in a flat wicker basket.

"Mrs. . . . Baggley, isn't it?"

Ignoring the icy tone, Ma said, "Yes. I—brung them two little girls you ordered. I kept them overnight over at my place and the mayor asked me to drop them off ——"

"You what? You brought —— But I don't understand!" Color rushed up into Mrs. Craver's face. "There's been some mistake. Why, Mr. Craver explained the entire situation. We're not—we can't—the mayor had no right to send you here! He knew perfectly well we were not going to accept those children. You'll have to take them away!"

Ma's heart plunged. "Where'll I take them?"

"I'm sure I don't know, Mrs. Baggley, but he is not going to force them in on me!"

Concern for the welfare of the two New York girls vied in Ma's bosom with the pleasurable prospect of a good rip-roaring fight with Mrs. Craver. I could wipe the floor up with her, Ma thought, but sternly repressing herself, she said, "You have a nice big place here. An' you have help. Why don't you give it a try? Give 'em a chance? Other people are taking these kids in ——"

"Other people may do as they wish." But Mrs. Craver had begun to tremble.

"An' you asked for them," Ma reminded her.

"Mrs. Baggley, I realize there'll be a lot of talk and criticism about this and I'd like my position to be perfectly clear. This was never my idea. It was Mr. Craver's and I opposed it from the start. It's not that I don't feel for these children. I do! Like any mother, I feel very sorry for them, and while I believe they should be taken out of the city, I think there should be camps for them or places —— I've always been most careful in the selection of playmates for Penny and Barbara, most careful, and yesterday I took them with me and went down to the station hoping I could be convinced —— But when I saw—when I saw the two girls I was expected to bring in to Penny and Barbara! One I'm convinced was badly retarded, but it was the other—the

33¢ ANTIZYME Tooth Paste

FREE!

when you buy regular 59¢ PRO Tooth Brush

Look for the special combination package.

Antizyme stops the major cause of tooth decay continuously, 12 to 24 hours in 9 out of every 10 cases tested. Many people report—"not a single cavity in over two years" after using Antizyme.

This offer of a free tube of Antizyme with a 59¢ PRO Tooth Brush—either tufted or PRO "59"—may mean new dental health for you. PRO Tooth Brushes massage gums better, polish teeth brighter.

he best is always a PRO

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH CO.

MONEY... in Your Spare Time

Write us for details and supplies.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY

927 Independence Square Phila. 5, Penna.

No other way cools tired burning feet faster, better than Ice-Mint

When feet feel like a furnace, and it hurts to walk, just rub on cooling medicated Ice-Mint vanishing cream. Discover how fast those burning, fiery aches and pains can be relieved. Greaseless, stainless! Contains amazing, soothing lanolin. Also marvelous for sunburn and windburn! Ask your druggist for wonderful Ice-Mint today!

other one! Why, I'd no more expose my daughters to a girl like that ——"

"I hear what you're sayin'! I'm not deaf!" At the sound of Diane's tinny voice, Mrs. Craver and Ma both wheeled about in dismay to find the glittery-eyed, embittered girl in the doorway. "Listen," Diane said from between her teeth, "don't do me any favors. If I knew this was your house, I wouldn't have come here—I wouldn't stay with you not if you gave me a million dollars! You don't think I'm good enough for your kids—I'm too good! I saw them makin' fun of us yesterday! I'm not dumb! I didn't come here to be laughed at!"

"You sneered at my girls!" Mrs. Craver cried hotly. "I saw you!"

"Because they sneered first! They're lucky I didn't spit in their eye and drown them!"

"Get out of my house! All of you!"

Diane shrilled, "You go to hell, you lousy old windbag! I wouldn't stay in your stinkin' house!"

Ma quickly bundled the stiff, resisting figure of Diane along the hall where Florence Beebe was standing, trembling and terrified. "Come on, come on, Florence, we'll go someplace else." Ma was more afraid of the scene's effect upon this child, for Diane seemed able to fight back. "Don't you worry; we'll find someplace nice for you. I'll see to it."

Coming down the path Ma experienced the same scalding sense of apology she felt when she led little Arthur and Wilbur back to the car under the gaze of their companions.

"They got the bum's rush too," the boys were saying. "You can't blame 'em; I wouldn't take them two in neither."

Angry tears spilled down Diane's thin face, but rigid, fierce in her sagging sweater and semi-high heels, she walked down to the car, pulled open the front door and slung her lumpy brown-paper package of clothes inside. "All I want to do is go home!" she announced harshly. "I'm sick of this country! You can have it. It stinks. An' everyone in it."

Out at the Diffenderfers' there was a welcome of an entirely different sort. Lil Diffenderfer saw them coming around the back of the house and her loud chuckling laughter could be heard as she started up to greet them. "These our boys?" she cried, opening the screen door with a bang. "Well, how are you, boys? Sure glad to see you! My, ain't they thin though! Certain'y have to feed 'em up, won't we? You got good appetites? Ma, d'you hear whut happened to us?" Lil was a big, loud, laughing young woman, joggling inside her pink-checked gingham dress. "Me and Willy got all mixed up on our dates ——" The mere memory sent her into such paroxysms of laughter that her eyes swam. "Haha ha ha, we was over to Thompkins Falls yestiddy to collect a debt, an' we didn't land home here till ten o'clock last night an plumb clean forgot till Harry Bannister give us a ring."

THE kitchen smelled of fresh gingerbread. Its bare windows looked out on flat green fields stretching far away in the sunlight. Ma saw Willy Diffenderfer starting for the house. The three Diffenderfer boys, aged eight to twelve, farther out in the field, had turned to look at the city children, but they worked on without leaving their places.

Willy Diffenderfer was fat but strong, and he had a big, good-natured, moon face. The two of them, Ma thought, were the noisiest couple in Turnersville, always shouting and laughing. And yet, underneath, Willy was shrewd. "These our boys?" he asked, coming into the kitchen, sweating, shooting them a smiling glance as he went to the sink to draw a glass of water. "I thought they wuz gonna be big strappin' fellers to help me around the farm!" He roared with laughter. "Well, li'l ones good for hoein' and weedin', an' pullin' up bush peas, we got plenty of that!" Noisily he gulped down the water. "Yes siree, we'll put blisters on 'em palms." There was another laugh in which Lil Diffenderfer uneasily joined. "What's yer names, sonny?"

"Well, now, this one," said Ma, indicating a hard-faced tow-haired boy ten or eleven years old, "this one's named Billy Purvis, but they call him mostly Whitey on account of his color hair. And this other one here's named Allie Watson."

I dreamed

I went up in a balloon* in my*

maidenform® bra

I'm the most heavenly body in the stratosphere... in perfect shape for this fabulous flight! Flying, floating, drifting, dreaming... Maidenform makes me the prettiest sight in the sky. Jets? Flying saucers? Who looks at them when I'm aloft? No airlines can compete with my lines when I'm lifted like this by Maidenform.

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's "under-wire" Pre-lude* Strapless in fine white or black embroidered broadcloth. Available plain or with cups lined lightly with foam rubber. A, B, and C cups ...from 2.50. Send for free style booklet.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1955 MAIDENFORM BRASSIERE CO., INC., N.Y. 16 COSTUME JOHN FREDERICS

Girl Friday Notes:

"Everybody likes Tweed"

Dress by Jerry Parnis

Tweed is the one fragrance above all others to wear anytime, anywhere.

TWEED Perfume from 2.25
Mist 2.25 Bouquet 1.50

prices plus tax

Lenthéric

NEW YORK PARIS LONDON

"Come on, boys, step right out here an' lemme see how strong you are, see what kind of muscles you city boys have."

Whitey stepped out into the center of the kitchen, but Allie flushed and hung back; and when he finally did join his companion, Ma saw for the first time that he had a slight malformation, a withering and stiffening, it seemed, of one arm and hand. He was a thin-necked boy with distended nostrils and eyes wide and shy. He tried to stand up shoulder to shoulder to the sturdier Whitey. Willy Diffenderfer, his broad back to Ma, made his inspection.

"WHAT's the matter here?" he wanted to know. "What's this you got? Somethin' wrong with this hand?"

"Yes, sir." Allie's voice was choked.

"Whut happened to yuh?"

"Polio. When I was little."

It was as if a transparent cloud had suddenly chilled the kitchen.

"Think you can do any work with that hand?" Willy asked. "Think you can lift up that there bucket of slops?"

Ma sensed it was torture for Allie to have his infirmity singled out like this and, on the point of interfering, she watched the boy try to lift the heavy pail with his withered arm. His whole body shuddered with the effort. The pail was raised a little from the floor and almost at once it fell back heavily again. Allie disengaged his hand and stood awaiting the verdict.

"H'm-m. . . . Well now, listen, sonny, suppose you go outside for a little minute an' lemme an' Ma talk things over here. Yeah, you better take all your stuff along with you. . . . No, you other, you, Whitey—you stay here."

Allie, his face flaming, left the kitchen in silence and the screen door closed after him.

"Now what'd you want to do that for?" Ma turned on Willy in wrath.

"Ma"—Willy's face had regained its good-humored smile—"how's about you givin' me one of them big husky boys you got out there instead? I'll keep li'l' Whitey here on condition you give me one of the big ones."

"No! I don't see how you can be so stinkin' mean to a little boy ——"

"Shucks, that boy wouldn't be no good on a farm." Willy was all smiles. "Now Whitey here—he looks like he was gonna be a real good worker. I can tell, me an' Whitey'll git along just fine. Yes, sir, he's gonna help us git in that big crop of bush peas for market ——"

"Oh, so that's it!" The light finally broke upon Ma. "First you were gonna hire Frank Manning to come down an' help you, only you'd have to pay him, so now you think you'll get it out of these city kids for nuthin'! Even get paid by the fund for havin' them do your work! That's no work for city kids, squattin' down pickin' bush peas all day long, haulin' heavy baskets way across the fields. They didn't come here to work for anyone in the first place! Whitey, pick up your things; I wouldn't leave you here five minutes."

She left, seething, talking to herself, thinking belatedly of all the wonderfully crushing things she could have said to Willy Diffenderfer had she only thought of them in time. A vast burning disgust built up in her as she drove along into Turnersville to the Twitchells' house. Her temper was short and all the fire she might have expended on her first three calls was in readiness as she climbed out of her car. She was on the best street in town. The two biggest boys, Robbie and Mac, stepped out, rather pleased with their luck.

"Not a bad-lookin' dump at all," said the tall, handsome, dark-haired Robbie, a cigarette hanging from his smiling lip. The admitted leader of the group, well grown for his age, he reminded Ma of a young moving-picture actor. He wore a checked shirt, sleeves rolled high, and tight blue jeans. "You can see from the roof they ain't got a television, but they got a two-car garage back there ——"

"Throw that cigarette away!" Ma said. "And both you boys wait here; I'll go in first." As she stepped onto the shady porch, Miss Ellison called over from the adjacent porch:

"Miz Baggley, you lookin' for the Twitchells? M-m. Miz Twitchell's mother fell and broke her leg and Miz Twitchell had to go over and take care of her. Don't think she'll be back for at least another two weeks."

Toward sundown, in angry disgust, Ma came chugging up the driveway to her farm with the whole group intact, all equally dirty, hot, tired and disillusioned. She had made one final stop at the mayor's house, but there, instead of discharging the unwanted New York children, she was informed by the housekeeper that the mayor, his wife, the supervisors and all the children had gone off in the station wagon to visit the various sights of interest around the countryside.

Climbing out of Ma's car in the barn, Robbie stretched his cramped legs, spat and said, "How about callin' up that jerk of a mayor an' seein' if he's back yet? Maybe he'll get us out of here before we have to spend another night. I'd like to git home. If you ask me, this country stuff is stric'ly for the birds."

"Won't do no good to call him up now, though I'll try," Ma said. "There's no train out of here now till late tomorrow afternoon."

A mingled groan went up at this, and as they moved across the trash-strewn yard Ma found herself helpless with pity for them. She longed for a way to comfort them after the cruel disappointments of the afternoon.

THE NIGHT WIND

BY GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

The birds still sing that sang to you,
And daisies star the lawn
The same this year as a year ago . . .
As though you were not gone.

Nothing has noticed . . . or no more
Than the wind that seems to weep
Night long. I hear it hour on hour,
Waiting for dawn or sleep.

"Gee, I'm hungry, I'm starved!" a young voice was complaining. "Do you guys know we didn't even have no lunch today?"

I suppose Ellie'll have a fit at me bringin' them all back here again, Ma thought, but what else could I do with the poor things? If only I had something in the house especially tasty to give them for supper, to make it like a party, so they'd at least have one thing nice before they go back on the train tomorrow. . . . She walked into a silent, empty kitchen and picked up a note which informed her that her grandniece had gone into town with Ed Stone, the Bartleys' hired man, and wouldn't be back till late. This news came as such an unwelcome surprise—it meant preparing another dinner unaided—that Ma was forced to sit down suddenly for a minute or two to catch her breath. It's too much to ask anyone my age, she said to herself; then, throwing off that mood as weak and self-pitying, struggling uphill against her weariness, she asked, Now let's see, what did I use to make a meal of in the old days? What do I have in the house? I know, there's potatoes eggs, flour, bacon, maybe some macaroni . . . and beer, a voice suggested. Nice cold beer, lots of it. Go ahead, Ma, relax. The kids can wait and it'll do you good; it'll put you in a good mood. . . . Setting that thought aside, she got painfully to her feet and started to prepare the dinner.

The boys had drifted outside and Ma could hear them pegging stones and fallen apples at the tree trunks and at the indignant hens running for their lives across the yard. Then one of the troop thought he saw a snake in the tall grass and that brought the lot of them racing for the safety of the dining room, where they lounged about, squabbling and discussing the advantages of the city over the country. They found little in favor of the country.

"And how about you?" Ma asked Diane who, clattering about the kitchen in her too large run-over shoes, had started to help her with the dinner. "Will you feel disappointed goin' home after bein' here only one day?"

"Me? I don't know. It don't matter to me much where I am. I was never in the country before and I think it's kind of spooky. And I was just thinkin', see, like if I was home tonight, I'd probably go baby-sitting over in Stuyvesant Town, so I'd have a television all to myself, and I'd make three or four dollars maybe—and if I didn't do that, I'd go to the movies. That's what I really love."

Several times while Ma was at the stove she heard a peculiar mewing sound, almost as if one of the kittens were behind the stove, but it wasn't until she happened to close the pantry door that she saw stout little eyeglassed Florence Beebe pressed in there against the wall, her mouth open and her shoulders shaking with the effort not to cry aloud.

"Why—wh-why, what's the matter?" Ma asked in astonishment.

"I—I wouldn't be able to get in! My—my aunt's away on her vacation—there won't be anyone home! I won't know where to go!"

"Well there, there now. Don't cry like that." Ma sat down in the rocking chair and drew the large child onto her lap. "No one would send you home, not unless they knew for sure your aunt'd be there waitin' for you. Were you worryin' about that all this time?" Ma felt the child's head nod against her breast. "Well don't you worry no more. You just sit here now a little till you get all quieted down. Diane, like a good girl, take a peek at them potatoes an' see they don't burn."

A few minutes later Frank Manning knocked on the kitchen door and came in to see if Ellie felt like going for a ride after supper. Ma, rocking the tearful but quieter Florence, nodded toward Ellie's note and when Frank had read it, scowling, she said, "Don't pay no attention to that. She don't care two pins for Ed Stone; she told me so only the other day." Ma proceeded to give Frank a full and scathing account of her visits that afternoon.

"With the kind of people live around here, had an idea you were going to run into something like that," he remarked bitterly. "It burns me up to see kids treated that way. Grownups I don't mind so much, they can take it; but ever since I was in Italy and then again in Korea it was always the kids ——"

"Yes. Well, to be fair, I must say what happened today in parts was an accident like." Ma set Florence Beebe down and went over to the stove again. Frank, she thought, had a way of running down everyone in town, good or bad, and she said, "You couldn't really blame the Twitchells for leavin' for Stewart Falls, and I know myself how bad Sally Peters feels after losin' her boy; but when I think of that Willy Diffenderfer an' the Craver beauty, it does make my blood boil! You know I hate to see kids used bad, too, an' I never had to go to Italy or Korea to find that out."

A RECKLESS idea had begun to take form in Ma's mind, but she set it temporarily aside. I'll give it a couple of hours to simmer. She reminded herself of her old age and her arthritis and the case of beer she had waiting until tomorrow afternoon when she would have the house to herself once again. The boys returned to the kitchen to talk to Frank and it pained Ma to note that they quickly borrowed from him a certain hangdog attitude, an air of being rejected that she had always despised in anyone.

"Yeah, it's a pretty rotten deal," they commiserated with Frank. "They git us here an' then they use us lousy."

Ma spoke up. "Well now, I wouldn't want any of you goin' home tomorrow feelin' all the folks around here is mean and nasty, because that's not true. Some, most when you come right down to it, are pretty darned good; you can see that by the way they took in all those other boys an' girls—a hundred and some odd of them. It was just an accident that something happened to go wrong in your case."

But they preferred being like Frank, bitter and abused and out of step. "Aah, it's always like this ——"

"No, it's not always like this!" Ma was stung to reply. "An' to prove it to you, I have a sur-ise." Before she could debate the issue any rther within herself, she said, "Instead of you in' home on the train tomorrow, how would u like to stay here with me and spend your cation here? I'd be pleased as Punch to have u, each an' every one, an' I'll do my best to e you have a real good time while you're th me. Now! What d'you say to that?"

Instead of an enthusiastic chorus of reonse, Ma's offer was met with uncomfortle silence, then: "I'd rather go home."

"Well of course if you don't want to ——" a, having made her offer honestly, now felt a ise of relief settling down on her, but Frank anning suddenly spoke up.

"No, look, all of you," he urged, "why don't u try it here for a few days—say a week. If u ask me, it's mighty kind and generous of a to make the offer, and for my part—well, -if you'd like, I'd be more than willing to lp out all I can while you're here." He redned and Ma saw that it was not easy for him make the offer. He was proud and touchy d fearful of a rebuff; and in a dim way Ma alized he was suffering from a deeper sense the same rejection that was afflicting the unnted children. What he was asking of them s a chance to realize the old dream of helpg the wartime orphans; he wanted, too, to on being a hero still in someone's eyes. "I'd me over and get up a program for you; I'd en supervise it every day. I wouldn't be any od at thinking up things for the two girls, t when I was overseas I used to plan how neday I'd like to open a camp for boys, a od one, and teach them things about huntg maybe, and firing a rifle, and living out in woods. Or if it wasn't going to be that, then was going to be a gym. I got a lot of stuff, a of equipment over at my place. Suppose I to get hold of some tents and mattresses—I s thinking if we put you fellows out in tents that little bank above the creek, you could me indoors to sleep if it rained; and we uld build an outdoor fireplace, maybe do me of the cooking down there ——"

The idea caught on at once. The boys were for starting immediately.

"No, wait," Frank said. "It'll take a day or before I could lay my hands on the shelter lves and stuff we'd need, and first we'd have straighten the whole thing out with the ayor. Probably if he hears I'm in on the deal, 'll scotch the whole thing."

There's that self-pity again in Frank, Ma ought, an' I don't like to see it getting ahold him. "Well anyway," she said, "suppose we sleep on it tonight, and tomorrow we'll get ld of Harry Bannister. The worst he can say no, an' we'll all have the satisfaction of owing we tried. We all done our best and at's all you can ask of anyone."

In the morning, after a long I-wash-mynds-of-the-whole-thing lecture from Ellie, a began to ask herself if she hadn't been too pulsive. It's not two little boys like I first ured on, she reminded herself; it's six, some them mighty big and hard to handle, and it's o girls besides. I don't know that I can honly manage that many. And as Ellie pointed t, one of them might get sick—you never ew what was going to happen. Nor was Ma ceived about the city children. Among themves they could be as unfeeling and cruel as me of the people in Turnersville had been tord them, and almost all of them, it seemed, re mean at times to the two little Negroes.

UNAWARE of her hesitancy, the boys, acting if all the arrangements for their stay had en completed, had climbed up into the barn t and found the old ice-cream freezer, ange with rust, and dirty sacks of rock salt, a sketball hoop, some fishing lines and a box hooks and flies, a Saratoga trunk full of thes and papers, the rickety doll carriage ss had used, two rusted rifles, ice skates, oken chairs—all were spread out among the sting cans and debris in the yard.

Ma came out and was trying to persuade em to put everything back when Whitey ld her that since this was Sunday he would ve to go to Mass. Diane remembered then at she, too, should attend, and little Arthur nounced he had promised his mother and s daddy that he would go to church service en in the country. Startled, Ma said of course she'd drive the churchgoers into town, whereupon the rest of her charges all decided to go along, too, for the ride. It was four minutes to ten right then. There was no time for them to wash, to put on clean clothes, even to comb their hair. Just as they were, they rushed for the dilapidated car. Ma put her large foot all the way down on the gas pedal and the car responded bravely with its best forty-six to forty-seven miles an hour.

At the first intersection they met up with Frank Manning coming down the side road in his jeep, and he called over to tell them he was on his way in to try to borrow the shelter halves from the proprietor of the Army and Navy store. Since it was late and the two churches were at opposite ends of the town, Frank offered to take Whitey and Diane and drop them off and pick them up again when the service was over. The two oldest boys, the handsome Robbie and the slack-chinned light-haired Mac also switched over to be with Frank and take their first ride in a jeep.

Breathless from hurrying, Ma with Florence Beebe holding her hand, with Allie and the two little colored boys ahead of her, tiptoed down the gleaming center aisle of the First Presbyterian Church, looking for an empty pew. This happened, unfortunately, to be much nearer the front than the back. Worse, the service had already commenced and with every moment it became increasingly apparent to Ma that compared with the rest of the townsfolk and their children, all turned out in fresh summer clothing, the Baggley delegation, herself included, presented a deplorably unkempt appearance. Self-consciousness, however, was not long-lasting with Ma. There were too many things for her to observe and listen to. Mr. Lundbeck in his address welcomed all the new children and praised the families that had so generously opened their hearts and their homes to them. He developed this topic with such eloquence that even Ma, a temporary

Your loving care means so much to his everyday comfort

He Looks to you for Love—for wise care too

HIS THINNER SKIN REALLY NEEDS THIS SOFTER TISSUE

You keep his little washcloths softest soft for his thinner skin. Be sure to look for "tender skin" softness in his bathroom tissue, too. The new ScotTissue is gentle, yet strong to prevent tearing and shredding.

Your love welcomes him to his new world, makes it a warm and friendly place to be. At the same time, your thoughtful care helps to keep him comfy all his baby day through.

One simple comfort your baby will appreciate is a really soft bathroom tissue. The new ScotTissue is softer than ever for his thinner skin. Yet it is strong and absorbent to help you cleanse neatly and thoroughly. You can use it with complete confidence.

Pick up several rolls next shopping day. It is your wisest choice for baby . . . and in the big 1,000-sheet roll your best buy for the family, too. Another great Scott value. "ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

1,000 sheets—over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues

FIRST...LAST

...and FOREVER

A boy's first love for a girl . . . painstakingly cut into a tree for all to see. A man's enduring love for a woman, and hers for him, beautifully carved years later on a monument of marble or granite. These are the traditional and timeless expressions of sentiment that are part of American life. Make sure your love is as equally and eloquently expressed. Arrange now for a family plot in a cemetery that allows you the privilege of erecting a beautiful monument. Then select that monument, too, while all are here to participate in the choice.

For invaluable advice on how to ease the burdens of a family bereavement, write for a free copy of "Planning Now for Tomorrow."

For sound counsel and a fair price on a monument correctly designed from quality material, rely on a Monument Dealer who displays this emblem.

MONUMENT INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

Monument Institute of America, Inc., 282 Delaware Ave., Buffalo 2, N. Y.

and unofficial foster parent, could not help feeling pleased and generous and uplifted. It was twenty years or more since Ma had been to church and she found herself enjoying this sight of her neighbors at prayer. She liked the organ, the smell of fresh starched cotton, the roses on the altar, the gleam of brass, the tall stained windows open to the summer sky. Real nice, Ma thought, real pretty. After the sermon there was a hymn Ma remembered from her youth and she joined in the singing good and loud; she enjoyed that, too, but then when the collection was taken up, her pew could contribute not one penny; and after the service was over, filing out into the brilliant sunshine and down the steps onto the churchyard path, Ma again felt conspicuous and queerly ashamed with her uncared-for children around her.

SHE drew to one side of the churchyard path. "Here now, we'll wait here for Diane and the others to show up," she said, but soon all about her were people shaking hands and visiting back and forth, talking about the New York children in their midst.

"Morning, Mr. Craver!" Ma heard behind her. "Morning, Mrs. Craver! Morning, Penny, Barbara! Where are your two city children, Mrs. Craver?"

"Why, I wasn't feeling well—probably I've been doing too much—and Mr. Craver thought it would be too much of a strain."

Mrs. Craver discovered Ma's nearness and with haste she moved her husband, her children and herself over to the other side of the path. From the group of women who presently surrounded her there was trained on Ma a barrage of disapproving glances, audible little clickings of the tongue and scandalized whispers, which carried clearly across the path. Ma's color went up and she eyed them briefly and balefully. It was on the tip of her tongue to say, You're all pretty good at criticizin' but not a one of you'd take these kids in and give them as much as one square meal—still, she had to admit their comments on her appearance were deserved. How could she explain that church attendance had been a last-minute thought, that they had left in too great a hurry for her to comb her hair and change her dress, much less put on her corset?

There's only one pretty child in the world, and every mother has it.
—CHESHIRE PROVERB

Ma caught sight of Frank Manning coming with the remainder of her brood: Diane in her dirty white runover shoes and drooping gray cardigan sweater, the two oldest boys and little Whitey all with dirty faces. Frank himself was a disreputable sight for a Sunday morning, unshaven and tousle-haired, in dirty sun-tan pants and a soiled T shirt.

Before they could reach her, the mayor came over. He extended his hand and smiled. "Ma, I can't thank you enough for the way you've helped me out," he told her. "I've been trying like h—like mad to get someone to take these extra kids in and I've pretty well given up on it. I'll have them all off your hands early this afternoon. I'm going to send them back with the supervisors. Maybe they can come out here again with some later group. It's rotten for them, but what are you going to do?"

The children were listening, and Ma felt a nudge on one side and a tug at her skirt on the other, and there was that circle of young eyes fixed directly on her, reminding her of her promise to let them stay. "Well," she said, "Harry, since we all got to know each other better, I—well, I invited 'em all to stay the whole two weeks at my place; an' they all said they'd sure be glad to. Frank here is willin' to help me with the boys." Frank and the mayor had been eying each other in an unfriendly manner. "And Ellie's helpin' me too," Ma added untruthfully. "Ellie's home now cleanin' the place all up and cookin' a good big dinner. We think ever'thing's goin' to work out real fine ——"

"Oh no, Ma. No. No. It'd never do. As a matter of fact—well, I'm positive the supervisors would never O.K. it because for one thing, you see, these kids are supposed to come here to get into an entirely different atmosphere, I mean different from the slums they come out of, and—well, I mean ——"

Eying Mrs. Craver, Ma said in a carrying voice, since it was obvious the nearby people were all listening in on the conversation, "Well, some people around here won't take the kids in! They got nice atmosphere, whatever you call it, but that don't mean nuthin' if you're not treated right in it! Now I don't have to tell you I know as much as anyone else about raisin' kids, an' I'm willin' to stake my oath I'll do as good a job of it as anyone here in Turnersville givin' these kids here the best two weeks they ever had."

But it was Frank mentioning the arrangements he had made to borrow the tents for the boys, as well as his plans for a gymnasium in the barn and the outdoor fireplace, that really caught the mayor's attention.

"In a way, you see, it'll be like a camp, just as if the kids came to a camp with a counselor and everything," Frank explained earnestly. He caught the mayor's quizzical glance; his words stumbled and he said, "I know you haven't got such a high opinion of me, but I'm—I'm pretty sure I can do a lot with these kids. It's what I always wanted to do, and I sure wish you'd let me give it a try."

"Frank, under any other circumstances, I'd be glad to! I've given you every chance I could think of. I'd like to see you try one thing and stick to it to the end without getting sore and quitting. Come on over here a little." They moved away from the children and Harry Bannister lowered his voice. "You see, I have to vouch for the reliability of all the people who take these kids in—and I wouldn't want to jeopardize the whole project by you walking out on the deal, or by Ma —— All right, there's no use kidding ourselves. This is no time for polite words. We all know Ma likes to go off on a bender now and then ——"

"Harry, on my honor." Unobtrusively Ma held up her right hand, hoping Mrs. Craver wasn't watching. Her face was serious. "If I say something, I do it. I won't touch a drop. Not one single drop until the whole vacation is over and they're all out of my place."

"Wish you'd let me try it," was all Frank could bring himself to say, but looking at him, dogged, growing red in the face, Ma knew the effort it was costing his pride to ask. The mayor was watching him too.

"Well, suppose we leave it like this. You and Ma here try it for a week and see how you make out. Personally somehow I don't think it'll work, but I'd like to be proven wrong. You go ahead and show me."

WHEN Ma landed home, before tents or anything else went up, she demanded each boy go down to the creek, take along the bar of yellow soap and have a thorough scrub. "An' I'm goin' to examine each one, ears and all, so you might as well do a good job of it. I want you to turn in all your dirty clothes too; I'll boil 'em and wash 'em out first thing tomorrow morning." To Frank, she said, "You can go along an' see they do it."

Frank grinned and said, "Don't let all this power go to your head, Ma. And let's get one thing straight right off the bat: while I'm here I'm boss of the boys; you have the girls to deal with. In this case, though, I think you're right and I'll go along with what you say."

As the boys moved off, Robbie, the oldest, hung back, half smiling, half defiant, objecting that no one around the place bothered with washing up and that was one of the main things he liked about it.

"Well, there's goin' to be a big change then," Ma replied. "No one's insisting on anyone bein' all dolled up all the time, but they'll all clean up at least once a day, that's for sure."

"You too?" little Whitey was moved to ask, and immediately his face flamed.

Ruffled, Ma replied firmly, "Yes, me too," and as she withdrew into the house it struck Ma that it probably was high time.

From the kitchen doorway she paused to look out at Frank delivering a lecture to Robbie, who still had not given in.

"You'll have all the freedom you can use," Ma heard Frank's voice saying sharply in the distance. "But you can't run anything without system and order. And someone's got to be at the head of it. I won't be giving orders all the time; I won't even be here all the time, but when I say 'Do something,' you do it without handing me a big song and dance about not liking to take orders. I'll never tell you to do anything unreasonable. Now get down there to the creek, and you be first on this bar of soap. Here, catch."

Robbie caught the bar of soap, but even so, he still balked, hoping to lead an insurrection. The others, however, had all ranged themselves on Frank's side and Robbie, reluctant though smiling, finally gave in.

The three tents proved an inspiration. Put up Monday morning in the shade above the creek, they were just within sight and calling distance of the house, yet far enough away to impart an air of privacy and masculine independence. Robbie and Mac occupied the first tent, Whitey and Allie the second, little Arthur and Wilbur the third. Under Frank's direction the boys cut down the weeds and tall grass all about their tents; they set to work building a large outdoor fireplace nearby. They used a rusting wheelbarrow to cart the field stones and Ma heard their voices shouting and arguing, but the work kept the six of them busy most of the day, and that evening when Ma looked out her back door she saw the clear steady glow of their first fire.

Thereafter their day began with a straightening of the tents, an airing of the quilts and a trip down to the creek to wash. They lined up then under Robbie's leadership and came into the kitchen for their breakfast, sometimes eating it there, sometimes going to all the inconvenience of carrying it down to their tents. In such matters, Ma never interfered. Immediately after breakfast came an hour of chores, a grudging, unpopular hour during which they chopped wood for Ma and Ellie, cut down the grass and weeds around the house, raked the yard; then the six moved quickly and inexpertly through Ma's little truck garden, weeding between the rows of corn, potatoes, beans and tomatoes, bitter to one another, yelling and arguing, cursing sometimes, in constant nervous fear of attacks by snakes, bees, wasps, cows and bulls.

FRANK, cooling off somewhat in his anger toward his neighbors—surprised, Ma felt, by the friendly co-operation he met at every hand in borrowing equipment for the boys—went back and finished repairing Cotter's roof. He was paid for it, and when he stopped by afterward with his ladders to do some work he had long promised on Ma's roof, he found he had six willing helpers. The house resounded to sudden activity, to singing, hammering and shouting as the boys, stripped to the waist, climbed up and down the slanting roof, prying off rotten shingles, climbing in and out the upper windows. Part way through the third morning, they started to tire of it and decided to go off exploring. "No, sir," said Frank around a mouthful of nails. "I told you it wasn't fun; you wanted to do it anyway. Now you got to finish out the morning. You two big guys get to work with the paintbrushes; the rest start cleaning up all that busted shingle down there." Through their combined efforts the place did not turn beautiful—it was poor-looking and homely and would always be so—but after four days, the fallen-in sheds were repaired, a shutter was straightened for the first time in twenty-seven years, and with a new coat of brown stain, a freshly painted white door and white blinds, a neat yard about it, the Baggley farmhouse showed more care than the oldest inhabitant in Turnersville could recall.

"Ma, I drove past here twice by mistake," the mayor said when he pulled up to the side door. "I thought it was your friend Mrs. Craver's place, it's fixed up so fancy."

"Go on with you," Ma said. She leaned on the door of his station wagon. "It does look pretty good though, don't it?"

The mayor explained he had stopped by to pay her the allotment for each of her eight children and to see how she was progressing.

"Say, I'll be so rich I won't know what to do with myself! An' we're making out fine! While you're here, have you got time to come down an' see the boys? They're down in the creek; Frank's goin' to teach them how to swim. Nervous as a bunch of hens."

As Ma and the mayor approached, they could hear through the trees and bushes Frank's voice raised above the splashing and cries of the beginning swimmers.

"That's right! Keep it up! Keep kicking there—keep your legs straight and beat 'em up and down. . . . What's the matter with you?"

"I don't wanna learn how to swim." It was Robbie's voice. "The water gits up my nose!"

"There's no water getting up your nose—you won't even put your face near it! Look at Arthur and Allie—they're not afraid to put their faces in. Come on, try it again. I won't let anything happen to you. It's the only way you're ever going to learn."

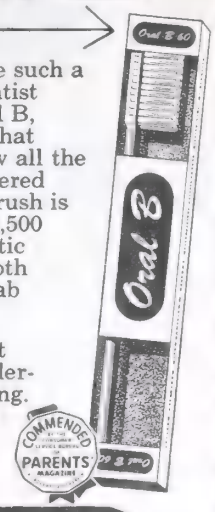
Ma and the mayor came out onto the little rustic bridge. Frank, in swimming trunks, was standing in the flowing sunlit water which came only slightly below his waist. Robbie, shivering and wet and miserable, was sitting on a flat rock on the opposite bank, hugging his knees; his skin, save for his arms and face, city-pale in the sunlight. Three of the other boys were hanging onto a log, laughing, kicking their feet up and down, while Allie and little Arthur, near Frank, were bending over and dipping their faces into the water.

"Hey! I held my face in till I counted up to ten!" Allie cried proudly, lifting his dripping countenance.

Frank, a little sheepish, hopped up onto the bank and shook hands with Harry Bannister.

"Having a little trouble with your swimmers, Frank?"

"No, it's just getting them used to it. I thought kids everywhere knew how to swim, but only two of these can do the dog paddle and that's only for a couple of strokes. The big kid over there doesn't even want to learn."



"Imagine our boy walking right up to a toothbrush and using it—with a smile!"

"There used to be such a fuss until our dentist suggested an Oral B, the softer brush that doesn't hurt. Now all the family has discovered why. This toothbrush is different. It has 2,500 extra-thin synthetic bristles with smooth tops that can't stab your gums."

Try an Oral B—it gives such a wonderful, pleasant feeling.

IN 3 SIZES—For All the Family

Oral B TOOTHBRUSH

ORAL B COMPANY
48 South Market Street • San Jose, California

THE GILBERT
VITALATOR
SOOTHES AND RELAXES YOUR TIRED BODY

Slip the amazing Vitalator over your hand . . . flip the switch. Like many skilled supple fingers the Vitalator works the aching kinks out of your legs, arms, back and hips . . . eases strained nerves, lets you really relax. The unique "Swedish massage" rotary action sends waves of vibrations through your fingertips and into your body. A welcome gift for Father's Day and other gift occasions. AC-DC Model B165A, $15.95.

AT COSMETICS OR HOUSEWARES DEPTS. OF THESE AND OTHER LEADING STORES:

AKRON, OHIO — A. Polsky • M. O'Neil
ATLANTA, GA. — Davison-Paxon; Sears Roebuck & Co.
BALTIMORE — May Co.
BOSTON, MASS. — Jordan Marsh
BUFFALO, N. Y. — The Wm. Hengerer Co.
CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Belk's Dept. Store
CHICAGO, ILL. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO — H. S. Pogue Co.; The John Shillito Co.
CLEVELAND, OHIO — Higbee's • May Co.; Wm. Taylor Sons
COLUMBUS, OHIO — F & R Lazarus
DALLAS, TEX. — Titche-Goettinger
DAYTON, OHIO — Rike-Kumler Co.
DENVER, COLORADO — Denver Dry Goods; Joslin Dry Goods • May Co.
DETROIT, MICH. — Crowley, Milner Co.; J. L. Hudson Co.
EL PASO, TEXAS — Popular Dry Goods
FORT WORTH, TEXAS — Stripling's
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — Wurzburg Co.
HARTFORD — G. Fox Co.
HOUSTON, TEX. — Foley's • Sears Roebuck
INDIANAPOLIS, IND. — W. H. Block Co.
JACKSONVILLE, FLA. — Furchgott's
KANSAS CITY, — Macy's
LOS ANGELES, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
LOUISVILLE, KY. — Stewart's Dry Goods Co.
MIAMI, FLA. — Burdine's
MILWAUKEE, WISC. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Dayton Co. • Donaldson's
NEWARK — Kresge Newark
NEW YORK — B. Altman's; Hammacher Schlemmer; Lewis & Conger
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA. — John A. Brown Co.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA. — Gimbel's • Snellenburg's; Strawbridge & Clothier
PITTSBURGH, PENNA. — Gimbel's • Kaufmann's
PROVIDENCE — Outlet Co.
RICHMOND, VA. — Miller & Rhoads
ROCHESTER, N. Y. — Sibley Lindsay & Curr
ST. LOUIS, MO. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA. — Maas Bros.
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — Auerbach's • Paris Co. ZCMI
SAN ANTONIO — Joske's
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SEATTLE, WASH. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SYRACUSE, N. Y. — E. W. Edwards & Son
TAMPA, FLA. — Maas Bros.
TOLEDO, OHIO — LaSalle's
TULSA — Brown-Dunkin
WICHITA, KANSAS — Innes

A PRODUCT OF A. C. GILBERT CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN. PRICES SHOWN SLIGHTLY HIGHER [illegible] & WEST

"What's the matter with him?"

"A little afraid of the water."

"What are you going to do with him?" the mayor asked.

"Oh—try to coax him into it by degrees. Show him nothing can happen to him here. I have one kid with a bad arm; I'm showing him how to swim on his good side. He's doing all right with it too. . . . Come on, Robbie," he called. "Get down there with the others and practice putting your face in. Wait, I'll come over. I'll be right beside you."

"That Robbie," Ma explained as Frank waded back down the creek. "Frank made him like the leader over the others when he's not here with them or when they're out roamin' around in the woods, and in return for watchin' them good an' takin' good care of them, Frank's showin' him how to drive my car. Just up an' down the driveway an' all round in back of the house; an' you never saw any kid so crazy about anything in all your born days. He'll do anything for Frank—for that matter, they all think Frank's just about the greatest thing that ever lived."

The mayor stood watching the lesson progress, a smile on his face. "They're a great gang. It makes me wish I was back around that age myself—but I'm not and I have to be off. See you again, Ma."

"Now see?" Ma said to Ellie that evening. "That's what Frank likes to do, work around boys."

"Boy Scout leader," Ellie said derisively, snapping beans, but Ma caught her often at the window looking out to where Frank, neat in appearance, more military in bearing, his dark hair damply combed, was showing the boys some turns on the parallel bars.

"He seems to know just what boys that age'll like to do. An' did you notice, he takes special pains with that Allie, that one with the arm. He has him throwin' the ball in that basketball hoop real good."

"One-hand push shot," said Ellie without seeming interest.

"Yes, well, whatever it is, it gives him an interest. Frank, that is. I was gettin' real worried about him the way he was goin'."

"If I was him," said Diane, "I wouldn't trust that Robbie so much. He's a real mean louse. He's always browbeating the kids in our neighborhood. They're all afraid of him."

"Why, he seems to be behavin' himself real good now," said Ma.

"M-m, that's because you're old," said Diane with her unsparing honesty. "You don't see what's goin' on."

Ma, however, had brought up her own children on the assumption that the less one saw, the less there was to bother about. She didn't expect boys to be perfect, and unless there were unmistakable signs of trouble, she'd never go searching for it. At present the city boys seemed to be behaving especially well. They were eager and quick to do favors for her and Ellie because Frank had promised them, as a reward for good behavior, to take them on a two- or three-day hike next week up into the mountains beyond the Elephant's Toes, training them as combat scouts.

Ma's own life during their two-week stay was easier and more entertaining than she had expected. True, it was something of a continuous strain for her to remain on the wagon, to keep herself and the farmhouse respectably neat and clean, to hold back on her oaths and colorful language, but the two city girls were helpful; and so that they wouldn't all come down with ptomaine, as she ungraciously put it, on the third day Ellie volunteered to relieve Ma of all the cooking. In turn, little Arthur and Wilbur took over some of Ellie's chores unbidden. Polite, gentle, soft-spoken, they were around the house a little more than the older boys. They liked to watch the chipmunks, the rabbits and the various kinds of birds. They enjoyed standing in the yard with Ellie, scattering the corn to the chickens, and in time they assumed full responsibility for the job. They discovered all the nests and every morning they collected the eggs and proudly brought them in to Ma. She still laughed when she thought of them the first few days happily bringing in with the real eggs the large china eggs set out to encourage the hens. The greatest surprise of all was little Arthur learning to milk the cow. He watched Ellie a few days, then overcame his initial fear, took his first lesson and then milking, too, became part of his daily routine. Coming into the kitchen, he always permitted Wilbur to help carry the pail. Ma understood it was their way of trying to repay Ellie and herself for taking them in.

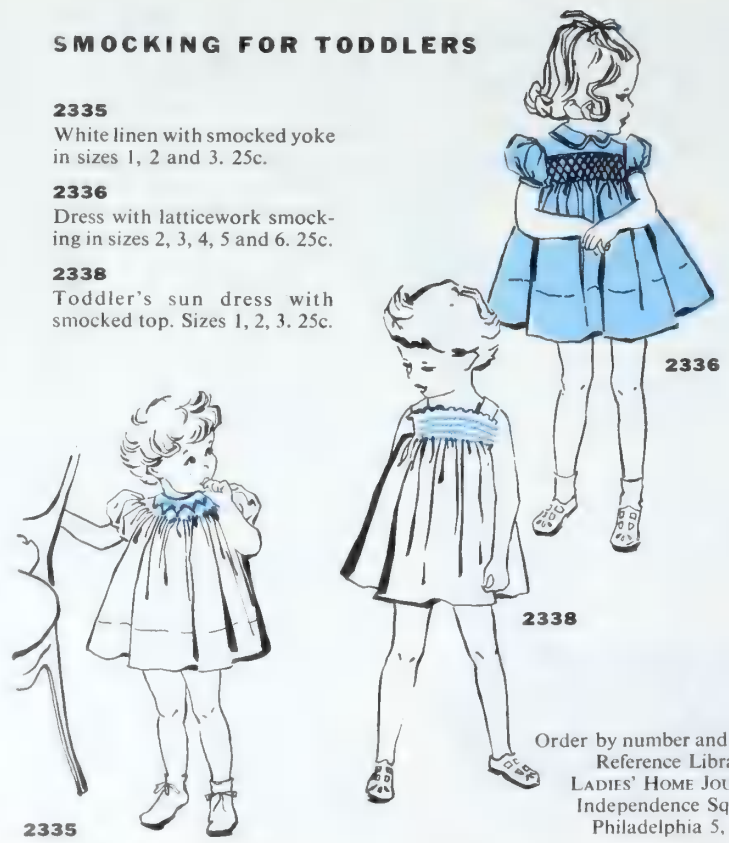
Florence Beebe continued to be a source of some concern to Ma. Originally from a more refined background than any of the others, she was unsure of herself, easily confused, and almost tongue-tied with shyness. If no one disturbed her, she sat daydreaming by the hour. Ma showed her how to knit, and then, worried that the child sat indoors so much, she brought her out and taught her the difference between the flowers and the weeds in the bedraggled borders around the house. Florence became absorbed and she weeded and watered with an old teapot through the long afternoons. She felt so sorry for the uprooted drooping weeds that she transplanted them into a sort of convalescent bed beside the barn, and it disturbed Ma one day to come upon her whispering and apologizing to the plants as if they were human beings. She carried saucers of milk out to the kittens in the barn and knelt over them, loving them and kissing them, making clover wreaths to hang about their necks, telling them stories and singing them to sleep.

It's wet-resistant! Actually helps keep diaper moisture away from skin.

Amazing as it seems. Mennen Baby Powder actually resists moisture; protects baby's skin against urine burn, chapping, chafing, diaper rash! Doesn't absorb moisture like the other leading brand tested. Clings longer, too: stays on baby's skin longer to give better anti-rash protection. Has a heavenly "baby" fragrance. It's satinized to a silken texture; can't "cake" on skin. Give your baby the extra protection of Mennen Baby Powder! 29¢, 53¢. NO TAX. Slightly higher in Canada.

Cleansing Baby Oil! Cleans better; can't irritate! It's Lanolized! 25¢, 49¢, 98¢. NO TAX

Mennen . . .
Baby Specialist since 1880



Reference Library

SMOCKING FOR TODDLERS

2335
White linen with smocked yoke in sizes 1, 2 and 3. 25c.

2336
Dress with latticework smocking in sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. 25c.

2338
Toddler's sun dress with smocked top. Sizes 1, 2, 3. 25c.

Order by number and size from Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

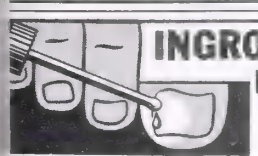
More beauty for your gifts with DENNISON GIFT WRAPS

You can make all of your gifts more beautiful with Dennison Gift Wrappings. Smart designs and lovely colors in gift wrapping papers, matching seals, cards, tags and ribbons.

Look for the Dennison name on all the gift wrappings you buy. Then you'll be sure of getting the finest in quality — the latest in style.

For gift wrapping ideas, get illustrated book — "HOW TO GIFT WRAP — THE DENNISON WAY" at retailers or send 25¢ to:

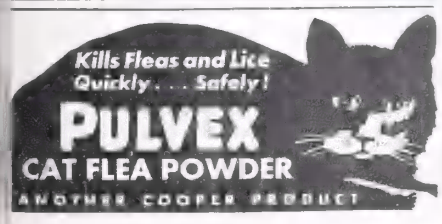
Dennison
Manufacturing Company
Framingham, Massachusetts



How To Hold
FALSE TEETH
More Firmly in Place

Do your false teeth annoy and embarrass by slipping, dropping or wobbling when you at, laugh or talk? Just sprinkle a little ASTEETH on your plates. This alkaline (non-id) powder holds false teeth more firmly nd more comfortably. No gummy, gooey, asty taste or feeling. Does not sour. Checks plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH day at any drug counter.

MONEY...
In Your Spare Time



Spare-time income can help you meet expenses. Write for details about our subscription-selling plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
923 Independence Square Phila. 5, Penna.

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

"Here's what happened," Diane explained. "Florence's mother came from a very rich family in California. They were really millionaires and they were furious at Florence's mother for marrying this officer ——" Ma had begun to suspect that the truth and Diane's love of moving pictures, her knowledge of plot and situation, often merged in the stories she told. "Then he went away and was killed. Florence was only a baby at the time, but her mother said she'd never go back to her family. Well, she invested what money she had in some kind of a business, but it failed and then the mother got TB from worrying. She spent thousands of dollars away in private hospitals trying to get better an' finally she had to go to a free one. She was supposed to come out last spring, but she's still there. An' see, this isn't really Florence's aunt she tells you about. It's just a foster mother; the city pays her each week to take care of Florence while her mother's away, an' while she's all right—she's not mean or anything—she has other kids of her own, an' you know how it is, they come first ——"

Disillusioned and romantic by turns, round-shouldered, not very clean, Diane ignored the country just as she ignored most of the things the authorities believed would be of benefit to the city children: early hours, sunlight, exercise in the open air and good nourishing food; milk, for instance, "soured" on her stomach and she never drank it. At home, she told Ma, she lived mostly on sweet buns and coffee with lots of condensed milk in it. Even in the middle of the day when the kitchen grew baking-hot and sleepy she kept on her dirty sagging gray cardigan.

"Diane," Ma said, "don't you want to take that sweater off you?"

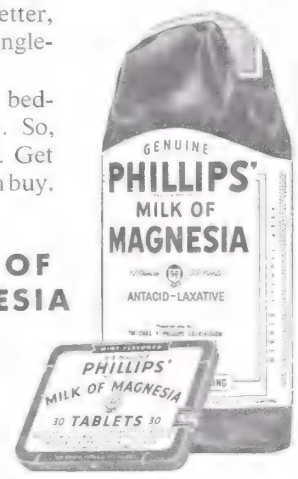
"No, no, it's all right," Diane said impatiently, returning to her discussion with Ellie of the latest romantic entanglements of the stars of Hollywood. With Diane, it was all first names: Ava, Frank, Lana, Lex, Joan, Ginger, Rory. . . . By now Ma's and Ellie's horizons had widened through a hearsay acquaintance with most of the families in Diane's tenement as well as several in Stuyvesant Town, where Diane went to baby-sit. Diane's own family was not without its interesting characters. Her father, she told them, had disappeared when she was six years old. It was not known whether he was the victim of amnesia and might even now be the wealthy mayor of a large city in the West with another wife and family of children—a theory Diane, oddly enough, seemed to favor—or whether he had been murdered and thrown into the river during a dock strike. Diane's mother worked as a waitress, had a variety of admirers—"Drips," said Diane with a scornful embarrassed smile—and scarcely a night went by, if Diane could be believed, that some one of them did not take her mother out dancing. "See, I'm always there; I fix her up, tell her what to wear, I see that she looks good. Like I give her manicures, I give her permanents —— Listen!" She sat up and her eyes brightened. "Ellie! You want me to give you a permanent? Ma too? Yes! Let me! Listen, listen, where I live, everyone's always after me to give them a permanent, I do it so good."

THE following day, a stifling Saturday, Diane turned the kitchen into a beauty parlor and administered a home permanent to Florence, to Ellie and to Ma. "Now this neutralizer—I have to use it twice—always stinks," Diane warned, sopping at the three heads of tightly rolled hair, "but it's worth it when you see how swell you're all going to look." Seemingly she had no interest in beautifying herself: her own tan hair remained lank and oily. A good saleswoman, however, she kept extolling the virtues of her permanent waves, their naturalness, soft silkiness and durability; but the final effect, hours and hours later, was not exactly as she had predicted. Ellie had been smart enough to have only the ends of her hair done, but stout eyeglassed Florence Beebe emerged with ringlets so high and tight that she looked as if she were being slowly frightened to death, while Ma's vigorous white hair was a mass of tiny mechanical dry kinks from the scalp out; yet once past the initial shock at the unfamiliarity of her visage staring back at her from the hand mirror, Ma was vastly pleased with the only beauty treatment in her life.

She would have been just as pleased with the entire vacation if it weren't for one odd unpleasant note. So far she had not mentioned it to anyone, but unwillingly, inescapably she had come to the conclusion that someone—one of the boys—was light-fingered.

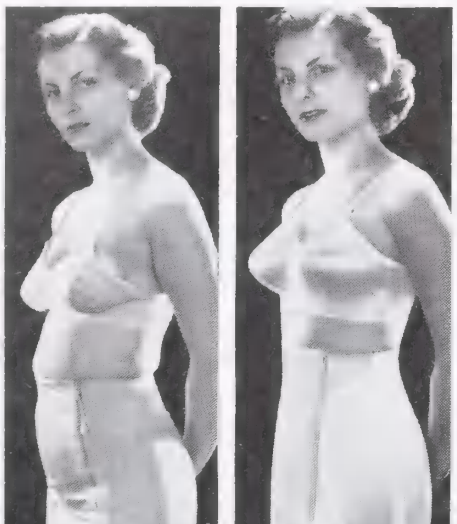
Almost from the start Ma had begun to miss things about the house, things of no particular value; still, it was unsettling. The first thing to disappear was a sterling-silver napkin ring that had turned up black and discolored in a carton of odds and ends in the barn loft. Ma had polished part of it to bring out the initial and she set it on the kitchen window sill just above the sink, intending to show it to Ellie, and before Ellie could return from hanging up the wash, it was gone. Several of the boys—just which ones Ma could not remember—had been roughhousing at the sink only a few minutes before, filling their canteens. A day or so later, Ellie complained of losing a small gold watchcase, belonging to her mother, that had always been in her top bureau drawer. A souvenir paperweight of the Chicago World's Fair was next missing from its accustomed place on the parlor whatnot. And Lord knows what else is walking out of the house, Ma thought. Always, it seemed,

My family's constipation worries are over!



They all use this ALKALIZING LAXATIVE that gives MORE COMPLETE RELIEF!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the ideal family laxative because it does both things you need for complete relief! It gives wonderfully gentle and effective relief from constipation, and—because it's an alkalizing laxative—Phillips' also relieves the acid indigestion that usually accompanies irregularity. Thus, Phillips' gives you better, much more complete relief than you get from any single-purpose preparation!



What's more, two to four tablespoonfuls taken at bedtime work leisurely—without embarrassing urgency. So, when morning comes, you start the day feeling fine. Get Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—the best laxative money can buy.

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA

LIQUID or TABLETS
The convenient 4-ounce size ..... 28¢
The economical 12-ounce size ..... 55¢
The money-saving 26-ounce size ..... 85¢
Also available in tablet form, 30 tablets 28¢

"I lost that LORDOSIS* BULGE in my Spencer"

BEFORE: in the support she had been wearing.

AFTER: In her Spencer Foundation.

* LORDOSIS (sway-back) often results from faulty posture habits. It forces abdominal organs forward and downward—and frequently causes backache or fatigue, as well as slumps and bulges.

Your figure can be lovelier, too!

Bulges are ugly. They ruin the lines of even your most becoming dresses. Get a Spencer! In your Spencer Foundation and Brassiere, your posture is improved, your whole figure gets a beauty lift!

Have your figure analyzed—FREE!

A Spencer Corsetiere will gladly give you a complete figure analysis. You'll find it fascinating, and there's no obligation. Discover how Spencers will be designed, cut and made to solve your individual figure problem — how you can look and feel like a new woman. And your Spencer Foundation will be guaranteed not to lose its shape!

MAIL COUPON or Phone for Free Booklet today. Look in yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop." Never sold in stores. Be sure to ask about Spencer figure-perfect Slips – an exciting exclusive for hard-to-fit figures.

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

Please send FREE 12-page booklet.
I have marked my figure problem.
I would like to make money as a Spencer Corsetiere ☐
6-55

Mrs.
Miss _____
(Print name and address)
Address _____
City _____ State _____

MAIL to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. (In Canada—Rock Island, Que.)

SPENCER
individually designed foundations and brassieres

the farmhouse would be crowded; the boys would all be in, walking through the rooms, going upstairs and down, and a few minutes after they left, the article would be gone. Of course, Ma thought, you don't like to say anything. The things weren't worth raising a fuss about and maybe by accident someone broke the glass paperweight and then threw the broken parts away—kids would do that any time. And maybe Ellie lost that old watchcase long ago—but how about the silver napkin ring?

On Tuesday morning of their second week, the boys all came down to the house to fill their canteens and say good-by to Ma and Ellie. Frank Manning was with them and they were all loaded down with heavy packs and rucksacks in readiness for their two-day hike up into the mountains.

"Say, are you sure you'll be able to climb with all that heavy equipment on you?" On occasions Ma knew what to say to boys. "You'll have to be pretty strong boys to do that."

"We are!" . . . "Don't you worry about us, Ma!" . . . "You bet we'll be able to climb!" . . . "Ma, look, we got the most, Robbie an' me, cause we're the biggest. We got all the stuff that weighs a lot, us an' Frank. The kids, they don't have hardly nuthin'."

"Well, I don't know, you all look like pack horses to me. An' d'you know, it's goin' to be real lonesome here without you. Who am I going to get to go and collect all the eggs for me every day? An' who's goin' to do the milkin'? I tell you, I'm sure goin' to miss my two best helpers here."

The two dark little faces flashed into wide smiles of delight.

Ma walked down as far as the creek and watched them cross over it on the rickety little footbridge to Frank's property. They turned to wave to her, then disappeared up the path between the wild-cherry trees.

The first evening of the boys' absence, Ma, Ellie and the two girls had an early picnic supper outdoors, and then as a favor to Diane they drove over to Stewart Falls to see a Marilyn Monroe picture she had missed at home. Before dinner the next night, while Ma was wondering what time Frank and the boys were going to return, the mayor telephoned to warn her that he must bring two of the supervisors from the Sunshine Fund out to the farm the following morning to see how the eight children were faring.

"And Ma, see if you can't have everything all shipshape around there," he told her. "It means a lot. We're supposed to drop in unexpected, but I thought in your case I'd better give you the tip-off. We'll stop by around eleven. O.K.?"

"You needn't worry; everything'll be all right. Everything'll —— Wait, I think that's the boys. They been off on a hike."

Still not wholly convinced, the mayor was saying, "Listen, Ma, as I start to get near your place, I'll toot my horn as much as I can to let you know we're coming."

"All right, Harry, I'll remember. I'm goin' to ring off now. The boys are all back. They're just comin' in now."

THEY crowded around Ma, healthy-looking, deeply sunburned, enthusiastic. "—— an' we saw a big eagle, an' his wings were this big, Ma; look, this big." . . . "Hey, an' we saw the Elephant's Toes—we saw where the guy got drownded from here last summer." . . . "Boy, did we eat." . . . "An' at night we sat aroun' the fire, talkin' and tellin' stories, an' you wanna see Arthur's eyes! Boy, was he scared!" . . . "Yeah, you was scared too. You was scared of bears in the middle of the night. I heard you tellin' Whitey you thought you heard bears." As a closing event of the hike, at Frank's suggestion, the boys invited Ma, Ellie and the two girls to a frankfurter roast down at their outdoor fireplace.

It had grown dark and Ma was finishing her third hot dog when Ellie came down from the house, drew Ma away from the fire and told her that her sixty-eight dollars, which she had kept in a tin cocoa box, was gone. "And it was there," Ellie said. "I saw it there tonight just before the boys came piling into the house! What am I going to do?"

Leaving the children, Ma, heavy of heart, with Ellie and Frank went up into the house to talk over the situation.

"You keep asking me am I sure!" Ellie cried with exasperation. "Of course I'm sure! I saw it with my own eyes just before they came racing in. One of them's got it! I say we ought to line them up and search them before they can hide it someplace ——"

"No. No, wait. Wait," Frank said. "There's some other explanation. There must be. I know these kids by now!"

"Look. I don't care how well you know these kids or anything else. It took me a long, long time, scrimping every penny to get that sixty-eight dollars together, and I intend to get it back. If you're not going to do anything, I'm going in and call the police!"

"No, don't. Please," Frank urged, "don't do that. Not yet, anyway. Give us a little time to think this out. Let's try to reason with the kids first, and try to get whoever did it to put the money back. Otherwise if you call the police in here, there's bound to be publicity, they'll probably ask you to bring charges against the kid and you'll wind up giving him a police record that'll stick to him for the rest of his life. Besides that, families around here will all hear about it and probably they'll be afraid to take in any more of these kids ——"

"Yes, give us a chance first," Ma said.

Ellie, impatient, turned her back on them, and after a hasty discussion between Ma and Frank, it was decided to call the boys in separately for questioning.

"All right," Frank said. "What order'll we take them in? Age? Big ones first?"

"I suppose so. I don't know how else ——"

Ellie, plainly showing she thought it all a waste of time, went over and stood at the dark screened window. Ma, more worried than she admitted, pulled her rocking chair into the shadow and sat down. Frank went out to call Robbie and he returned with him.

"All right, if you'll just sit down here, Robbie. There's a few questions I'd like to put to you."

Robbie, bringing in with him the smell of crushed weeds and grass and wood smoke, sat facing the light. At one moment he seemed to Ma keyed up, alert to trouble, as if he knew what was coming; the next moment his brown face looked clear, intelligent, perhaps too clear. Frank, disliking the task, remained on his feet, leaning forward over the back of an empty tipped chair.

"Because you're leader of the boys, Robbie, we feel we ought to tell you what's happened here." Keeping his voice quiet, Frank mentioned Ellie's discovery of her loss and he went on talking, explaining what the money meant to Ellie and how kind and decent and helpful she had been to the whole crowd, how long it took her to save that money, and what, if not returned, its loss would mean: the police called in, a scandal ruining all future chances of the city children coming to Turnersville. And all the while Frank spoke, Ma sat looking at the dark handsome boy, trying to pierce his mind, wondering if he were as honest, as surprised, as he now seemed.

"Honest, Frank! I swear," Robbie said. "Honest, I don't know nuthin' about it. I'd tell you if I did. I swear. I never seen no sixty-eight dollars, honest! When we came in the house, I stayed down here—I never went upstairs for nuthin'!"

"ALL right, Robbie, I'm not saying you did. But I'm making the same offer to each one of you to return the money before breakfast time tomorrow—leave it on the kitchen table. If it's not there in the morning, there's going to be trouble and plenty of it. I think a lot of Ellie, as you probably know, and I intend to see she gets her money back. This is just a fair chance first for the guilty one to return it, no questions asked. Oh, and one more thing." The boy had started to get up. "Don't mention this, or don't discuss it with any of the others, the girls or anyone. Keep the whole thing under your hat. Here, and when you get home. We expect the mayor here tomorrow with some people from the fund, and we don't want them to hear about it either. Unless they have to. It's like something that happens inside a family; the whole bunch sticks together and says nothing. You understand? Now tell Mac I'd like to see him."

An uncomfortable silence held when the boy first slipped out of the kitchen, then Ma asked, "Did you believe him?" She didn't know whether she did or not.

"I don't know," Frank answered, bothered. "I only know it's a serious charge to bring against anyone without proof—you can't guess at these things."

Ellie said, "It seemed to me like he was covering something up when he first came in."

"Seemed that way to me, too," said Ma, worried.

There was a knock on the door and then Mac walked in, surprised and smiling with uncertainty, blinking in the light.

"Frank, you wanna see me?"

Ma found herself paying closer attention. Tall, loose-jointed, round-shouldered, light-haired, with light eyes and no visible lashes, with freckles and a sloping chin. . . . Quick to take offense, and yet likable, Ma thought. Something decent and good about him.

"But you don't understand, mom. He's the captain of the team. It's a great honor."

"Money? Sixty-eight dollars?" he asked when Frank told him. Mac's light eyes were round. Then angry. His face flushed. No. He never saw any money. What'd they think, he'd take someone's money? Is that what they were accusing him of? Bein' a crook?

"No one's accusing you," Frank explained. "It's just that ——" His voice going on and on.

Allie came next into the kitchen, his left arm held up in its usual position against his chest. He was more self-conscious, more nervous than the others, sending his long silky hair back from his startled eyes by a sudden movement of his head.

"No sir, I—I didn't see no money, never. No, I didn't go upstairs since we had the hike." That look of wariness, of alarm. . . . Was that just his self-consciousness, uncertainty? Of them all, Ma found herself hoping it would not prove to be Allie. Patient, determined, Frank was telling Allie about the opportunity for returning the money, and then he cautioned him not to discuss it and asked him to send his tentmate, Whitey, in.

"I can't believe any nine- or ten-year-old kid stole it!" Ellie cried. "If it was anyone, it was one of the bigger ones. We ought to get the police in and search their stuff."

"No, you can't jump to conclusions. And now that we started, we have to ask each one, otherwise you're questioning some and not others. You got to be fair." The questioning, however, had begun to take a lot out of him. He looked grim and defeated by the time little Whitey came into the kitchen, sturdy, sunburned, with an eager little grin.

"Frank, somethin' you want me to do? Allie says ——"

"Yes. Will you sit down here a minute? There's something I have to tell you, Whitey, and I'd like to know if you know anything about it."

Whitey thought there was an opportunity of running an errand for Frank, whom he obviously hero-worshiped, and Ma watched the look of bewilderment come over his features as Frank's explanation progressed. Within a few minutes Whitey's face was as Ma first remembered it: city-wise, old for his years, uncommunicative.

"Listen, Whitey, you didn't notice if anyone went upstairs, did you? When we were all in the kitchen or in the dining room, talking to Ma. . . . You didn't? And you haven't heard anyone talking about money, any of the other fellows, the big fellows?" Frank was perspiring and the knuckles stood out white on his sunburned hands. "It's not a question of not snitching, Whitey."

"No. I didn't hear nuthin'." Shoulders hunched. Secretive. Closed up. Wary. Or, Ma wondered, wasn't that the way any kid from a tough neighborhood would behave? If he knew anything, he wouldn't tell.

Because he was nearing the end and growing more and more desperate, Frank kept little Whitey longer than any of the others, going back over some of the questions, but in the end he had to let him go.

"Send Arthur—no, send Arthur and Wilbur both up here together." When Whitey had gone, he turned to Ma. "This is the end. If it's either of these two kids, I'd almost rather not know. Everything was going along so well—I could have sworn I had their trust. All of them."

The two little boys came in, polite, trustful, slightly mystified.

"Sit down, boys," Frank said. "Yes, pull up that other chair. Now what I have to say to you two boys is very important and I want you to listen with care." All the same questions, repeated now without hope. "Did you go upstairs at any time? Did you see ——"

A glance exchanged between the boys.

"Wait. Ah—Ah was upstairs one time."

"What were you doing up there, Arthur?"

"Yes. Ah—well, Ah wen' up just to look out that li'l' hall window. Like 'cause Ah was back here again ——"

"You're sure you didn't go into Ellie's room for any reason?"

The large solemn eyes. "No, Frank. Ah just stood there an' looked out that li'l' window, like to see the barn an' all, then Wilbur here, he called me an' I came down."

"Is that right, Wilbur?"

Apparently that was right; beyond that they had no other information to impart and Frank let them go. Already weighed down by the threat of failure, he said to Ellie, "Well, I don't suppose there's anything else to do now except wait and see if the dough's here on the table in the morning."

Ellie's voice was unsteady. "It seems everyone's mighty generous about my money. No one bothered to ask me if I wanted to wait around till tomorrow morning to see if I get it back. I'm all for calling the police right now ——"

"No! Listen, Ellie ——"

"Listen nothing!" Angry tears had come to her eyes. "When I think of the dope I was, standing up at that stove, cooking for these rotten little ingrates! First I thought, all right, they don't have much, so I tried to make each meal nice and attractive, and I tried to think up something different they'd like each day—I'd have been better off if I just looked after myself. I shouldn't have let Ma take these kids in the first place."

"No! Don't talk like that. And don't call the police." Frank was begging. "It's not just for the sake of the kids, Ellie—give me a chance too. This means a lot to me. Let me see if my way isn't right. Somehow I still think I can handle kids and if one of them took that dough, I swear I'm sure you'll find it on the table here first thing in the morning. You can't lose anything by waiting till then."

"But what if it isn't there in the morning?" Ellie asked.

He stood looking at her. Ma could see that his whole belief in himself hung in the balance. "It'll have to be," he said doggedly. He went out without saying anything else.

Ma slept badly. She arose early, dressed herself and came downstairs. The money had not been returned. Well, maybe it's too early, she thought, pumping the water for coffee;

Antibiotics in Your Daily Life

by William I. Fishbein, M. D.

The antibiotics are responsible for saving untold numbers of human lives. Infections, once fatal, have been brought under almost complete control. Illnesses formerly causing long periods of hospitalization are now quickly relieved and convalescence materially shortened.

Many ailments, while not responsible for loss of life, nevertheless are responsible for much loss of time from work, are nagging, productive of much discomfort, disfiguring, and in general interfere with normal happy existence. Among such illnesses are colds, sinus infections, ear infections, sore throat, and acne or pimples of external origin, particularly when small abscesses are present in the latter disorder.

Tyrothricin, the antibiotic which has been incorporated in a number of products adapted for application to the skin and mucous membrane by McKesson and Robbins, is especially effective against many of these disorders. These preparations have been subjected to prolonged clinical and laboratory studies to demonstrate their usefulness.

They showed particularly low toxicity with extremely rare reactions to usage, thus increasing their range of possible utility. Preparations have been formulated specifically for treatment of naso-pharyngeal infections, especially pustular acne or pimples of external origin.

Drugs have been formulated for many purposes—pain relief, muscle relaxation, soothing action and stimulation. Tyrothricin preparations, including those limited to cosmetic fields are welcome additions to modern treatment.

Look for these McKesson Antibiotic Products at Your Drug Store

NEO-AQUA-DRIN LOZENGES—for the relief of minor throat irritations.
NEO-AQUA-DRIN NOSE DROPS—for the relief of congestion due to head colds, sinus, etc.
UTOL—for relief of pimples and minor burns and skin abrasions.

BORIC ACID OINTMENT
ICTHAMOL OINTMENT
AMMONIATED MERCURY OINTMENT
ZINC OXIDE OINTMENT

LIMITED TIME INTRODUCTORY SAMPLE OFFER
Mail Coupon Below

THE FIRST ANTIBIOTIC DEODORANT

To Every Woman Who Has Suffered Underarm Burn, Rash...or Worse...

Now, for the first time, the protection of a miracle Antibiotic in a Deodorant!

SCIENTIFIC FACTS ABOUT HARSH, IRRITATING CHEMICALS FOR UNDERARM USE

Laboratory tests show that these dangerous chemicals often invite trouble in sensitive underarm area. This is why you may have noticed redness, roughness of underarm skin.

SCIENTIFIC FACTS ABOUT REVOLUTIONARY NEW ANTIBIOTIC YODORA

New Yodora contains no harsh, dangerous chemicals. Antibiotic Pertexol* in New Yodora protects your underarm skin—checks underarm irritations before they start! New Yodora not only gives you safer, longer lasting protection from perspiration odor, but its light, creamy base also keeps your underarm area softer—smoother—lovelier! No other deodorant ever gave you safer protection from perspiration odor!

NEW ANTIBIOTIC YODORA IS GUARANTEED BY McKESSON & ROBBINS

Try at our risk for one week; if you are not amazed—entirely delighted—return and get your money back! At all cosmetic counters.

Tube 39¢ Large size jar 43¢ Economy size jar 69¢
All prices plus tax

Imagine . . . A Deodorant Recommended for Shaving!

1. Apply soft, antibiotic New Yodora—rub gently into skin.
2. Shave underarms with slow, downward strokes.
3. Remove excess with tissue—smooth remainder well into skin.

That's all you need do to stop perspiration odors! Whether you shave or not, one application daily of New Yodora is the new, surer answer to your deodorant problem.

A brand of tyrothricin*

NEW YODORA

The First...the Only Deodorant with Miracle Antibiotic Pertexol* for Sensitive Skin!

McKesson & Robbins
Dept. LHJ Bridgeport, Conn.

Gentlemen: Please rush me liberal introductory sample of antibiotic New Yodora. I enclose 10¢ to help defray handling and shipping costs.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____
State_____
Y-4

they're not even up yet, so there's no chance —— But before she could finish the thought, Allie came running excitedly across the yard and burst into the kitchen with the news that little Arthur had disappeared.

"He run away! All his stuff's gone!"

And suddenly Robbie ran into the kitchen, breathless and large-eyed. "What'd you tell for? I was goin' to tell! Arthur ran away! I knew he was the one who took the money!"

Ma was staggered by the news. "Gone—that little boy! No!" Her brain reeled and in a shaking kaleidoscope she saw the mayor arriving with the supervisors from the Sunshine Fund, she saw little Arthur running along a road with Ellie's money, she saw Frank —— "Go—go tell Frank."

Shaking in every limb, Ma filled the coffeepot, awoke Ellie and told her the news, then she went down through the dew-soaked grass to tell the boys to come up and have their breakfast. Little Wilbur, like a small self-condemned prisoner, sat inside his tent, obviously frightened, denying he knew anything about Arthur's disappearance, refusing to come out where Ma could question him better. As soon as Frank showed up, however, the boy was reduced to tears; he was led up into the kitchen, and there, looking smaller than ever without his invariable companion, he confessed that he thought he knew where Arthur had gone.

"Up in that—in that empty sort of cabin place we saw up in the mountain near where those big elephant rocks are. Up there."

"Why?" Frank asked. "Did he say anything to you about going up there?"

Wilbur was about to reply, but then he looked with wide eyes past Ma's shoulder. She turned and saw that Robbie had come up silently behind her. Wilbur's voice said, muffled, "He jes' say he have to run away."

"Why?" Frank demanded. "What made him say that? Look up! Hold your head up!"

Gulping over his tears, little Wilbur said, "He jes' told me in the middle of the night; he waked me up an' whispered he—he had to run away where no one would find him."

Ma's heart took a long, cold toboggan ride. Then it really was little Arthur who had taken the money—the cute humorous little one who learned how to milk the cow. Her first feeling was one of regret, of compassion. And if we don't get him back before the mayor and the people from the fund get here —— Her mind would not finish the rest of the sentence, but she knew all too well the danger that could come to a small boy lost up there among the steep cliffs; she could envision a large search party going up with bloodhounds; and then there would be all the publicity, and censure doubtless falling upon her and Frank ——

"Tell me yes or no: he said something to you about going up to that shack?" Frank was asking Wilbur.

"Well, he—Ah guess—yes, he kinda ——"

Ellie suddenly began to cry. "Oh, I wish I never had any money if it was going to cause all this trouble! Frank, be sensible—call the state police. At least report the kid is missing. He could be lost up there for days or he could break his arm or his leg ——"

"But if the police come here, they'll find out about the money being stolen."

"Don't do anything until we look ourselves!" cried Ma. "Frank, quick, have this cup of coffee and then come on. Use your jeep. We'll all have to go. In case he's not at the shack, we'll have to spread out —— Ellie, stop your blubberin'. You an' the two girls stay here an' stave off Harry Bannister in case we're not back in time."

"There's no use your coming along!" Frank was expostulating to Ma; she started to put on her jacket.

"Why not? I'm going!" Ma replied firmly, leading the way out the door.

Ma, with assistance from the boys, managed to climb up into the back of the jeep, and as Frank took his place behind the wheel, wasn't there, just for a second deep in Ma's heart, a sudden awakening, a thrill of excitement such as she hadn't known since the old bootlegging days? Before she could decide, they drove off with a leap.

THEY raced up the mountain road, up through the cool morning shadows and drafts. At about where they thought the shack was, they stopped, got down off the road and plunged first into the waist-high bushes and then beyond into the cathedrallike silence and shadow under the trees. Beams of sunlight filtered down here and there, the birds twittered, and there was a swift little spring gurgling and splashing down over a rock.

"There's the shack down there. Hey!"

"No!" Frank cautioned sharply. "Don't shout! Don't do anything to frighten him. We'll just walk up to the door, easy ——"

"Hey, Frank, the door's open!"

Ma's head was pounding from the excitement and the unaccustomed exertion. Frank stepped inside the shack, and summoning her courage, Ma followed with the boys behind her. There was a musty smoky smell to the place, and a heavy cobweb closed over Ma's forehead and eyes.

"He's not here," Frank said, and then, his voice picking up: "But he was here! Isn't that some of his stuff?"

"Yes! That's his! That's his rucksack—and his other shirt!"

"Hey, Frank, look! He had a fire here! Looka these sticks—they're still hot!"

"And he remembered to pour dirt over them like I said. . . . Come on. Fan out! Stay in a line, don't get lost from each other. One guy lost is enough. And start calling. Hey, Arthur! Come on back! We're your friends!"

From the woods, from the hills and giant rocks, an echo of Frank's voice came back and soon a mingling of voices was calling and echoing: "Hey, Ar-thur! C'mon back! We're not gonna do nuthin' to you! Come on back!"

They were climbing up nearer and nearer the deep pool and its high semicircle of smooth gray boulders. Panting for breath, Ma paused, a hand over her racing heart. Most of the others were above her now, calling and calling, but for some time she had been aware of little Wilbur hanging back. At first she thought he was solicitous for her; he glanced all about him, then ran swiftly over to her and said as if the words had been pent up inside him, "Ma, Arthur didn't steal no money. Ah know he didn't! Arthur wouldn't never steal! That's not why he run away." He swallowed and gave another quick frightened look around him. "He ran away because las' night, late, after you all wen' to bed, Robbie—he held a kangaroo court. That's what he calls it. He question everybody an' make 'em all swear in blood. An' he says Arthur or me has that money hid away someplace an' he's gonna make us confess, so he twis' my arm up behin' my back—that's why Ah cain hardly lift it now."

"What?" cried Ma, bewildered. "What kind of a court is this you said ——"

THE little boy was trembling, chattering nervously. "Well, see, that's what he always does to us. All the time. 'Cause he's the king. On'y he says he'll kill us fo' sure if we tell on him. Specially he'd come after Arthur an' me. 'Cause we're the lowest, he says." The eyes dropped for a second, then he looked up again. "So don't tell him Ah told. But that's what he's always doin' when you or Frank's not there. He can preten' better'n anyone in the world—that's why everyone's afraid of him. An' when he couldn't make me confess about that money—'cause I didn't take it!—then he says it's Arthur. 'Cause Arthur admit bein' upstairs. He says he's gonna have Arthur locked up in prison, an' he'll never see his mother an' father no more. He says they'll come an' lock up his father too. He kept twistin' his arm up an' scarin' him so that Arthur, he was cryin' when he wakes me up an' asks can he loan my twenty-five cents 'cause he goin' to run away from Robbie where no one can find him."

Sickened, thunderstruck, Ma turned her head at a sudden movement and there, framed by two saplings, stood Robbie, breathing hard, watching them. Wilbur, taking fright, broke and scrambled away. For a long moment in the muted greenish sunlight under the trees Ma and the handsome half-smiling boy surveyed each other, then Ma walked across the uneven ground, seized Robbie by the shirt collar and before she knew what she was doing, she struck him a loud smash across the face with her open hand.

"Rotten nasty thing, you!" She released him, shaking violently. "Pickin' on—on someone not—not even half your size! Abusin' everyone's ——" Ma could hardly find words for the revulsion that was tearing up from within her. "Bullying little kids, frightenin' them half to death—and I thought they was havin' a good time here! That's all the thanks you had inside you: you couldn't be as decent to the next one as someone was to you!"

He cried hoarsely, "I was only tryin' to get the money back for you!"

"I wouldn't take any help from you! An' I wasn't talkin' about the money—the hell with the money! It's what you been doin' behind our backs! Me lettin' you drive my car ——"

Robbie had burst into tears. "I on'y thought I was helpin' Frank ——"

"Frank wouldn't want your help either. He'd despise the likes of you!"

The boy's crying became louder. "Well, I don't want—I'm not goin' to be that way any more! I'm sorry I ever done it!"

Ma was surprised to find that an audience had silently formed. Mac had dropped back and Allie was there at a distance, listening.

"All you can do," Ma said, still shaking, "is to go an' find that little boy now and tell him you're sorry. Go on! Get out of my Summer takes a lickin'!

ARROW Cotton Coolers for boys!

Arrow Cotton Coolers—we can't think of a better way to give your son and yourself frosty summer days.

Cool as a cone, these sturdy plissés look wonderful and wear almost forever. They're "just like Dad's," too—easy to wash and, best of all, need no ironing.

Choose from the original colorfast patterns you see here, and many others like them. Short sleeves. Junior sizes 4-12, $2.50. Grad sizes 12-20, $2.95.

ARROW

SHIRTS FOR BOYS

by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

opens easier!
works faster!

Try the new Sani-Flush
today!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

NEW! EASY-OPENING TOP

Press thumb under tab. Off it snaps. Snaps back on to close. Spill proof, too!

NEW! IMPROVED NEW FORMULA

Fast-acting. Kills many harmful toilet bowl germs quicker. No mopping, no scrubbing! No work for you! Leaves bathroom atmosphere refreshed with mild fragrance. Safe with septic tank systems.

Sani-Flush

The Hygienic Products Company, Canton 2, Ohio

he IMPROVED LITTER
CAT COMFORT with CHLOROPHYL

's odorless, less dusty, ore absorbent. Requires fewer replacements, so lasts longer. eep your cat's "comort station" drier, more nitary, sweeter smelling with this new chlophyl-treated litter. et at your Pet Shop in 5, 10, 25 or 50-lb. sack.

Write for circular

ENNESSEE ABSORBENT CLAY CO., Paris, Tenn.

allouses, Tenderness, Pain, Burning at Ball of Foot?

NEW! Dr Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion

QUICK RELIEF BEYOND BELIEF!

Made of soft LATEX FOAM and NYLON

You Actually WALK ON CUSHIONS!

's entirely NEW! Never before anything like it r relieving painful callouses, tenderness, burning ball of foot! The cushion—not you—absorbs ock of each step. Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT ushion loops over toe. No adhesive. Flesh color. Washable. Worn invisibly. $1.00 pair at Drug, Shoe, ept., 5-10¢ Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort ops. If not obtainable locally, order direct, enclosg $1.00 and state if for woman or man.

R. SCHOLL'S, INC., Dept. 58B, Chicago 10, Ill.

sight! The rest of you"—she raised her voice—"don't just stand there! Go on, help Frank! Don't wait for me!"

Robbie had turned and run up the trail. The others, too, started to climb and now their calls and cries joined the voices that were still higher. Ma, realizing she should never have come on so strenuous an expedition, clambered up the footpath to within sight of the shaded deep pool and its crescent-shaped ring of high gray boulders. There she was forced to drop out, too breathless to go any farther. Just as she was about to lower herself to the ground, there was a shout: "There's Arthur! Hey, head him off down there!" From a distance Ma caught the flash of a familiar blue-and-white-striped Basque shirt. It was little Arthur running swiftly in among the trees and bushes, and then she saw Robbie racing after him. She lost sight of them in the greenery and then the little boy, in terror, ran out onto one of the high rocks and realized too late that his escape was cut short. As Ma screamed a warning, he either fell or plunged off into the pool. It seemed to take forever before his small body, sailing and turning through the air, struck the water with a loud splash. The next moment Robbie ran out breathless onto the same high boulder. Neither of the boys had learned how to swim; Robbie particularly feared and hated the water, and Ma saw him, agonized, look around and shout for help, then, eyes tight shut, he jumped in to save his victim. And now, all about Ma, slashing through the green leaves, converging, running down different paths, came the thudding of feet.

"Where is he?"

Ma tried to scream at her loudest and heard her voice emerge as nothing more than a cracked whisper: "There . . . over—over there . . . pool!" She tried again, conscious that she wasn't being understood by the boys. "Pool! . . . Can't swim!"

Far off at the shaded base of the high boulder, the two figures had appeared thrashing on the surface of the water. They remained in sight only a few moments, then, clinging tightly together, they disappeared. Mac shouted incoherently and started to run, but at the same time Frank raced out onto the rocks, bent over excitedly to rip off his shoes, gave up the attempt and dived in after the boys.

The whole scene—diving figure, pool, rocks, trees and terrified boys—all brightened, grew lurid, unreal, rushed at Ma and she felt herself falling backward in a faint.

She came to, stretched out flat, with mud water being liberally sprinkled on her; and when she opened her eyes, it was to see the frightened faces of Allie and little Wilbur bending over her. As soon as her whirling brain remembered, she tried to sit up.

"—— all right? Are they all right?" she finally managed to whisper.

"WE don't know! They're out of the pool. Frank kept them up, an' Mac helped him with a big branch. . . . Robbie's just frightened an' he swallowed a lot of water, but we don't know about Arthur—Frank almost couldn't get him. He had to keep divin'."

Supported by Allie and little Wilbur, Ma made her trembling way over to the muddy edge of the pool. Frank was kneeling over the limp figure of little Arthur, administering artificial respiration. Coughing, crying, dripping water, Robbie was crouched nearby, half in the mud, shuddering and tearful, watching the slow process. The other boys had gathered in a terrified little knot. From Robbie, beating the wet ground with his fist, came the repeated cry: "I didn't mean it! I didn't mean it! Honest I didn't!" He put his head down and wept.

Frank, with his dripping hair and wet clothes, was a figure of endless patience and determination, rising and pushing forward, sinking back; but the minutes dragged past and there was no sign of life in the small figure. No one spoke. The sun shone down in a nightmare world. Hardly breathing, Ma watched Frank's slow-spaced efforts and then hope drained all away from her and she began to cry. I should never have tried it, she thought; I should never have taken them in. I wasn't able to look after them right ——

Little Wilbur, standing over Robbie, started to wail, "He's daid! He's daid and you done it! Always pickin' on him an' hurtin' him an' twis'n' his arm ——"

But at that moment there came a change in the limp little figure. Some water poured out of the mouth and a faint exhalation, like a sigh, went through him.

"He's coming around!" Frank spoke tensely without looking up or changing the rhythm of his movements. "He's alive! It's all right! W-we're—we're all right." It was only in the shakiness of his voice that Ma realized he had been as frightened as the rest of them.

WHEN Arthur finally regained consciousness, Frank sat back, shaking with relief, and put his head in his arms; and it was Robbie who now bent over the shivering little boy and held him, chafing his hands, who insisted a few minutes later on carrying him all the way down to the jeep.

"Here, you better let me do that," Frank said." It's quite a distance and you're not——"

"No, let me!" Robbie begged. "I can do it. I want to!"

At the jeep, recalling what he had heard and paid scant attention to at the time, Frank turned to Robbie. "What was all this stuff you were saying a while back about 'not meaning' it? What was it you 'didn't mean'? What were you begging his pardon about?"

When a man comes to me for advice, I find out the kind of advice he wants and I give it to him.

—JOSH BILLINGS

Robbie hesitated only a split second for his answer. He was smiling, innocent-looking. "It was just a little argument we had about something," he said then. "Nuthin' important—I shouted at him one day for runnin' out in the road. It's all over now anyways; we're all friends again."

Yes, Ma thought, I can see where, if you weren't careful, he could put it all over you. Her concern, however, was to get home before Harry Bannister and the supervisors arrived at the farm. They were about to drive off when Frank turned around and said, "Listen, Arthur—before we go back, we're not leaving the sixty-eight dollars up here, are we?"

Arthur, with Robbie's arm slung protectively around him, tried to sit up. He shook his head. "Ah never took that money, Frank. Hones'! Swear Ah didn't!"

"Then what'd you run away for?" Frank twisted farther around.

Ma saw Robbie's arm tighten about the boy, but his face remained deceptively clear and open. Arthur picked his words with care.

"'Cause Ah—Ah thought maybe you'd all blame me. Even though Ah didn't take it."

"Then who did take it?"

"Frank, for mercy sake," cried Ma, "get us home before Harry Bannister shows up an' before you all catch your death in those wet clothes. Arthur's in no condition to be sittin' here answerin' a lot of fool questions!"

The back of Frank's neck looked angry and at Ma's driveway he came to a halt.

"I'm going to leave you off here," he said. "And as soon as I get some dry clothes on, I'm coming back, and there's a lot of things I'm going to find out. For one thing, I'm going to find out who took that money, and I'm going to find out why Arthur got scared and ran away."

Ma and the boys got down onto the road and turned to the driveway.

"No, wait!" Robbie suddenly cried as Frank was about to drive off. "I can't—I mean I got to tell you this." He put his hands on the door of the jeep. "I don't know who's got the money, but I was the one that made Arthur run away. Because I . . . I threatened him an' I twisted his arm up to make him tell ——" His voice went hoarse. "I thought I was helpin' you! I know what I done was wrong. I know it now. You said, 'For fair and honest treatment,' an' you let me be squad leader an' drive the car, but I—I didn't do what I promised. I never did." He was almost crying. "I didn't give them fair an' honest treatment. I cuffed them around. I treated

Carefree, Inexpensive Vacation Clothes

Tough, Sanforized
Lee Riders

Don't spoil your vacation fussing with the family's clothes. Let 'em wear Lee Riders, authentic western style blue jeans. Sanforized for permanent fit, Lee Riders are easy to wash, need no ironing. Tough as nails, comfortable to wear. Snug-fitting sizes for boys and girls. Sizes for men and women, too. Outfit the family inexpensively in Lee Riders for a really carefree vacation (especially for you!). Lee Dealers everywhere.

Lee

COPYRIGHT 1955

The H. D. LEE CO., Kansas City 8, Mo.

them lousy, I made them eat dirt. I told them all I'd kill them if they told you."

Frank, his black hair tousled, the khaki shirt and pants drying on him in the sunlight, sat in his jeep stunned by these revelations.

"But what—what'd you do that for?"

Robbie said, "I don't know why. Because I always done like that. Because I was big an' I thought it was smart, because I knew a guy like that—I don't know why. I was stoppin', though. I was goin' to be like you, honest, only then I heard about the money bein' missin' an' I thought ——"

Still unable to believe it, Frank said, "So what you're trying to say is that all—all the while I thought everything was going so swell, you were ——" He looked around at the others. "What was the matter with the rest of you?" His voice rang out. "Why didn't you tell me what was going on? What's the idea of letting him frighten a little kid?"

"Because he'd git us when we go back home." It was little Whitey who spoke up. "An' it wasn't only Arthur. He was that way to all of us, to Allie an' me too. He made us give him everything we had. An' one day, on the way out to the woods, 'cause Allie disobeyed him answerin' him back, he tied him to a tree an' told him we were all gonna go away an' never come back, an' he wouldn't let us come back an' untie him until late, an' Allie was afraid of bears all that time ——"

Cursing a blue streak, Frank leaped over the side of the jeep and grabbed Robbie by the front of his shirt. "What'd you do that for? What's the matter with you?"

"I don't know! But I—I'd never do it again! I swear! I won't never do anything like that again! I'm gonna be like you!"

"I don't want you to be! I don't want anything to do with you!" Frank cried in a fury. "You're no good. You're a no-good through and through." Ma saw Frank suddenly turn sick with disgust and give up. "I don't know which one of you's the thief," he said, his face going slack, "but whoever it is, I'd rather have him than the sort of rotten louse you are, Robbie. If I'd known what you're like I wouldn't have tried so hard to fish you out of the pool up there. For that matter, I wouldn't give two cents for the whole bunch of you. I'm through. I'm finished, finished bothering with the whole crowd."

He got back into the jeep and drove off, leaving them standing on the road in silence.

"Now see what you done?" Mac said bitterly and accusingly to Robbie. "Spoiled it for everybody." The group, separate from one another, low in spirits, started up the driveway. Crushed by a heavy sense of oppression, Ma saw the entire vacation coming to pieces before her eyes. It was an effort for her to keep walking, and she must have hurt herself in fainting, for one elbow was sore and swollen and her hip pained her as well. Worst of all, she was still plagued by the thought of the missing money. Maybe I just ought to go in and call up the police an' tell them what's happened here; let them handle it. And yet, when she came right down to it, Ma hated to give up and admit she was defeated. I don't much admire Frank for gettin' sore an' quittin' at a time like this, Ma thought, so I can't very well throw in the sponge myself.

Far off in the distance she heard the clear double toot of a car horn; the horn sounded again, somewhat nearer, and she cried, "That's Harry Bannister an' them people on their way here! Quick! Up the path!" Ma's breath came fast. Her heart fluttered and her brain started to whirl and yet, just as in the old days in her clashes with the prohibition agents, from deep within her she could feel the strength gathering itself to resist. At the side door, Ma said, "All of you listen to me! I done the best I could to give you boys a good vacation—you do somethin' for me in return. Just one thing. Don't let me down in front of the mayor an' these snoopers. Just tell 'em everything's fine if they ask, an' when they go, we'll settle our own troubles in our own way. Run! Down to the tents! And you two was in the water, Robbie an' Arthur, git into some dry clothes if you got time, otherwise say you was playin' and you fell in the creek."

Ma burst into the house, panting, just as the station wagon swung slowly up the drive.

"It's Harry Bannister an' the city people!" Ma cried to Ellie. "Get outside an' talk to them, hold them there while I get a clean dress on me; I got mud all over me an' there's a big rip ——" Ma scuttled for the staircase.

"Listen!" Ellie cried. "Did you find the kid? Was he all right? And did you get my money back? That's the important thing—did he have my sixty-eight dollars?"

At the bottom of the staircase Ma turned around and drew a breath. She had not come this far along the way to be stopped by Ellie at the last minute, and instinctively seizing the attack, she said, "No, he didn't! He didn't have it 'cause he never took it, an' if you—if you say one word about that money in front of these people, I'll horsewhip you to within an inch of your life, big as you are! You caused enough trouble around here as it is!"

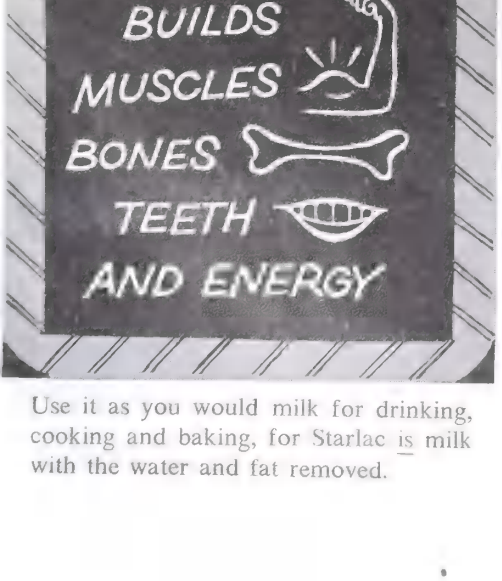
Ellie was not Ma's grandniece for nothing. Raising her voice, she cried, "No one's going to make me shut up if I want ——"

"Ellie! Ellie, please, can't you see I'm—I'm nearly —— Give me an hour. Just an hour. Don't say anything about it for an hour an' I'll—I'll have your money back or I'll call in the police myself!" Ma could hear the station wagon doors opening and slamming just outside the dining room and she pulled her hurried, painful way up the stairs.

Now quick, hurry up an' dress yourself an' get downstairs again before Ellie ruins everything by blabbing the whole story. Over at the washstand, she splashed one end of the towel in the pitcher of water and hastily scrubbed at her face and neck where the boys had doused her with mud water. Outside she could hear Harry Bannister pointing out the barn, the creek, the tents. Ma struggled into the blue checked house dress, freshly ironed for the occasion by Diane. The screen door had opened downstairs and there was the tramp of feet. Harry Bannister's voice, after greeting Ellie, called, "Ma, can you come down? Some people here I'd like you to meet."

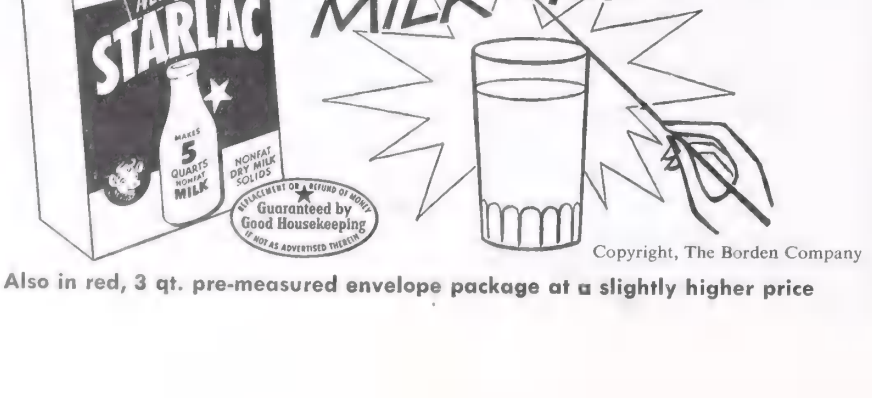
You'll call it "milk magic"

NEW INSTANT STARLAC®



FROM BORDEN'S, GREATEST NAME IN MILK

Mixes instantly Yes, even in ice water, new Instant Starlac dissolves swish! just by stirring or gentle shaking. No lumps. You get the same amount of proteins, B vitamins, and calcium found in Borden's finest pasteurized milk. Cost? 8¢ a quart!



Tastes so good . . . so milk-sweet you'll enjoy it the way you do milk. Women say it tastes better than any other "instant." They can hardly believe it's made from a powder. You'd expect that. Only the finest comes from Borden's, famous name in milk.

Use it as you would milk for drinking, cooking and baking, for Starlac is milk with the water and fat removed.

In blue economy package for . . .

ABOUT 8¢ A QUART!

Copyright, The Borden Company

Also in red, 3 qt. pre-measured envelope package at a slightly higher price

"What? Oh! I —— Why, I'll be right down, Harry!" If I don't have a stroke or a heart attack first, Ma thought. Before the wavy mirror of her bureau she was frantically trying to tug a comb through her new tough white curls. Abandoning the attempt, she quickly picked out by hand some dead little leaves and a twig or two, then, with flushed cheeks and a racing heart, she went down the narrow staircase. The mayor, two tall youngish men with brief cases and a woman with heavy horn-rimmed glasses were standing in the dining room at the entrance to the kitchen.

"Ma, I'd like you to meet Miss Novak, Mr. Kerr and Mr. Frederickson. We just thought we'd drop in to see how you were making out with the kids from the big city."

"WHY, I—I'm real glad to meet you." Ma was trembling so she could scarcely talk. "Why, w—I—we're makin' out just fine, j-just perfect, Harry. Won't you all come this way an'—an' have a seat?" Trying to keep the visitors as far away from Ellie as possible, Ma nervously started to lead the way to her parlor, but Harry Bannister said:

"No need putting on airs for us, Ma. We'll all be more comfortable out here. Come on, folks," and before Ma could head them off, he led the way out to the kitchen and pulled out chairs at the round, oilcloth-covered table. "Won't bother you if we sit in your nice clean kitchen, will it, Ellie? You got any coffee there you could heat up for us? We've been on the go since eight-thirty this morning. And you know, it's wonderful. We get nothing but good reports. At every house. The people are crazy about the kids, and the kids are having a swell time in the country."

"It's true," one of the men said, lighting a cigarette. "There hasn't been one tiny complaint of any kind."

Ellie's face was a storm as she set the coffeepot on to heat with a noisy slam.

"Ellie," the mayor said, turning to her, "I hear they made you chief cook and bottle washer for the whole crowd."

"Yeah, I got the job without even asking for it," she replied with a sour smile.

"Well, don't worry. You'll get your reward in heaven one of these days."

"That's about where it'll be, too," she answered bitterly, but Ma was grateful Ellie said no more than that.

The atmosphere gradually relaxed, and sitting around the table having a cup of coffee, the snoopers, as Ma first termed them, proved to be friendly, likable and understanding. The girl, tall, nice-looking, a little tired behind her glasses, told Ma she had grown up in farm country very much like this.

"On these visits around to the different houses, whenever I see something like your stove or the pump or the roller towel there, I—I could almost break down and cry with homesickness thinking of my mother and father, and yet—mainly for that reason—I wouldn't have missed coming here for anything."

After talking to her a while longer, Ma felt emboldened to ask, "Would you like to—to inspect anything an' see like where the girls' room is? Or see anything else?"

"Well, we're supposed to, really, but we've already heard so much about the kind and wonderful thing you did in taking this whole crowd in—eight, you know, sets the record for this vicinity—that I wouldn't have to inspect' anything. We inspect more to see that the children are well treated and in turn that they're well behaved."

Plucking up courage, Diane and Florence, who evidently had been eavesdropping, came in the back door, and in response to the question put to her, Diane asserted that she was having a far better time in the country than she ever had expected. "That's because I'm here and not in that first place where the lady had the two stuck-up kids. I wouldn't 'a' stayed there, but here it's more like bein' home. Only better because they treat you right here. We all got to be friends; and Ellie's the best cook I ever saw. An' Ma's always good to us an' lets us do what we want." Really layin' it on thick for us, Ma thought with a welling up of gratitude toward Diane. Florence Beebe, shy, frightened by the audience, kept her eyes down and replied that she, too, was enjoying her vacation very much.

"Did you learn anything about a farm? Or the country?" the mayor asked.

"Yes," Florence replied painfully, still without looking up.

"She takes care of all the flowers an' stuff like that," Diane added to cover for Florence's nervousness. "The kittens too. She knows all about taking care of them."

"And one day I found two eggs," Florence unexpectedly added, turning scarlet in an effort to build up her story. "I brought them in and gave them to Ma."

And there was so little, Ma thought, so little I've been able to do for her. . . . Yes, Florence was saying, she would be very sorry to be going home.

"O.K.," the mayor said, "then what do you say we take a look at the gym out there in the barn, and then we drop down and see the wild Indians. The fellow in back I was telling you about was teaching them how to swim the last time I stopped by ——"

Ma accompanied them, and down in the sun-dappled shade, the boys, standing outside their tents, came almost to attention. Robbie and Arthur were in clean dry clothing.

"All right, men, at ease," the mayor said. "These are people from the fund—I guess you know them. We just stopped by to see what sort of a vacation you're having."

Mac answered promptly for all. "Good vacation, sir!"

"Having a good time? All of you?"

"Yes, sir!" . . . "Swell time!" . . . "Havin' good fun!" . . . "Bes' time we ever had!"

"How about you two? You're not letting any of these older boys push you around?"

"NO, suh!" came the quick smiling response from little Wilbur and Arthur. "We all good friends here." Ma felt the sting of tears in her eyes. She could have thrown her arms around the two little boys and kissed them.

"They all good boys, Ma?"

"Th—the best boys in the world." Her voice was unsteady. "Couldn't think more of them if they—if they was my own."

"I understand Frank Manning's been over here every day, working with you fellows. What's your opinion of him?"

"Good, sir!" . . . "Good guy." . . . "Like to have someone like that back home."

"You feel that way too?" The question was put to Robbie. "I notice you haven't been saying anything."

His answer came a little choked. "He—he's the best guy I ever knew."

"Well, I guess no one could ask for a better recommendation than that. We'll get along then, and thanks very much, fellows."

The visitors made their departure with cordial handshakes, with good wishes, thanks and congratulations for Ma, Ellie and Frank. Ma

TO A MARIE LAURENÇIN GIRL

By ELIZABETH COATSWORTH

Nonsensical nothings is all that you're good for
And singing small songs that nobody hears,
And staring at flowers when others are busy,
And talking to cats and rubbing their ears.

It's a workaday world with alackaday leanings
And how are you fitted for taking your place,
With your moon-gazing eyes and your woolgathering fancies
And your white-pigeon hands and your fairy-tale face?

Weight watchers!
Enjoy tempting desserts again!
Only 12 calories per serving!

Jell-O and D-Zerta are registered trade-marks of General Foods Corporation

Once more you can enjoy delicious desserts! D-Zerta Gelatin contains only 12 calories per serving! Specially made for you who love desserts, but just can't have lots of sugar calories in the diet. D-Zerta is delightfully sweetened with saccharin. You get all of the flavor . . . none of the sugar!

D-Zerta's easy to make, too! Costs only about 4 pennies a serving. So pick up D-Zerta in your grocery store tomorrow!

D-ZERTA

All of the flavor...none of the sugar!

Made by the makers of JELL-O desserts . . . for those who must watch their sugar intake.

tood waving and smiling until the station vagon disappeared from view, and then all at once reaction set in. Ma wanted to cry; her knees began to tremble and she could barely make her way back into the house.

The kitchen was empty and hot; she could hear Ellie and Diane upstairs, talking. The hands of the alarm clock pointed to twenty-five after eleven. Ma went over to the ice chest and she drew out three cans of beer. Pledge or no pledge, she said, hobbling to her chair, after a morning like this, I got to have somethin' to comfort me an' brace me up.

She punctured the first can and there was a familiar dying hiss in the warm stillness. Ah! she thought pleasurably, but her hand raising the can of beer came to a halt. Her eyes were staring in disbelief. She blinked and shook her head, but it was no mirage: there, right on the table before her, was an open cardboard shoe box and in it Ma saw Ellie's mother's little gold watchcase, the half-polished napkin ring, the glass paperweight from the whatnot, a tie box covered with holly paper, a white shell with fluted edges, some colored buttons Ma had long since forgotten, and the tin cocoa box with the lid removed and the sixty-eight dollars within.

For a long moment Ma sat staring, then following a sudden hunch, she put down the beer untasted, worked her feet back into her shoes, hid the shoe box and its contents temporarily in the pantry and then made her painful way out to the barn where, as she had expected, she found stout, eyeglassed little Florence Beebe, kneeling over the kittens, crying her eyes out.

"You didn't have to come out here all by yourself," Ma said, compassionate. "You could have come to me."

"I didn't steal the things," Florence wept, brokenhearted. "At least I didn't mean to steal them. I wasn't going to keep them; I just took them to—to have for a little while because they—because they were pretty and I wanted to have them all safe, all in one place. I had them here in—in this box, this little house I made for the kittens. But I didn't know there was any money. I wouldn't take Ellie's money!" Her crying overcame her as Ma tried to lift her gently to her feet. "I wouldn't d-do anything against Ellie! I didn't know about the money until this morning when—when you and everyone drove away. Then I—then—then Ellie said Arthur stole her money and when she said it was up in her bureau in a tin cocoa box, I—I —— That was when I knew I did it. I wanted to put it back—I didn't know how!"

"Didn't you ever open the box? The cocoa box?"

"No, because when I—when I took it, I didn't want anyone, any of the boys to see I had it, so I just took it and I went out quick and put it in the little house here with all the other things, then we went down to the fire to eat—I didn't know when I took it there was money! I thought Ellie wouldn't want it. I don't know what made me take the things. When the boys were all in, making a big noise—I don't know, I'd be afraid of something—I know you shouldn't steal—but it wasn't like stealing! So please, please, don't have me arrested—don't let the police take me away ——"

"Good heavens, no, child! What would I do that for?"

"Oh, please, please don't," Florence was begging, and then, growing half hysterical and choked with tears, she cried out as if the word could be held back no longer, "Oh, I want my mother! Mother! Mother! I can't—I want to see my mother!"

Here. This was it, Ma thought in a flash of intuition. This desire, this longing for her mother, this was the cause, the root, the reason for everything. This and not living in her own home or with her own kind of folks. Even coming here, being sent here, being half speechless with fright at the strangeness of everything and being abandoned that first day ——

"Of course you want to see your mamma, but you know she's away sick an' trying her best to get better—an' she is goin' to be all better soon—poor mamma, you don't want to worry her; you been such a good girl all along ——"

FLORENCE's arms went tight about Ma's neck. "I don't want to go back to my aunt. Please let me stay here with you and Ellie. I don't like it there," she wept. "My aunt shouts at me and I—I'm afraid of my uncle —— I won't be any trouble. I'll do all the dishes, I'll find all the eggs—please ——"

"No, no, child. Ma couldn't do that ——"

"Please, please let me stay here with you," Florence begged. Her warm tears were soaking into Ma's dress.

"Well, we'll—I don't know; we'll have to see," Ma temporized, wincing with arthritic pain as she tried to straighten up. "Come on now like a good girl, dry your eyes and come back to the house with me, an' we'll see." It wouldn't bother me an awful lot, at least for the summer, Ma thought, yet of all the children, Florence was the least attractive to her. The one I cotton to the least—and yet, maybe that's just the one who needs help the most. One thing sure, Ma decided on the way up to the house, the other children were not to hear a thing about this. I'll just tell them Ellie put her money in a trunk or someplace an' found it a little while ago. But what was she to do about Florence Beebe? Send her back to the city to a foster home the child did not like? I wonder if I couldn't get Ellie to write me a good long letter to —— No, wait, maybe that girl, that Miss Novak—if I went in this afternoon an' had a good long talk with her, told her the whole thing—yes, she'd know better what steps to take.

As they approached the house, Ma said, "Now I'm goin' to take Ellie aside an' explain everything to her; you won't have to say a word, but if you like, when you do see her, just go over an' give her a big hug an' a kiss an' then she'll know you didn't mean to take anything that belonged to her. An' you don't have to say anything to Diane or anyone else about this either. I'm goin' to tell them Ellie found the money where she put it someplace an' it was all a big mistake."

The Best Cooks way to QUICK MEALS

2 QUICK-TO-MAKE DISHES made more delicious with

Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

Grilled cheese and tomato with Van Camp's Pork and Beans—ready to HEAT . . . EAT . . . ENJOY.

Van Camp's Pork and Beans—rich with secret, savory sauce—in individual casseroles with onion rings.

VAN CAMP'S • THE LARGEST SELLING BEANS IN ALL THE WORLD

"And can I stay here with you when they all go home?"

Ma looked down at the plump, tear-stained little girl. "If they'll let you, an' you think you'd like it, yes. I'll see this afternoon. I'll do my best."

After Ma climbed upstairs and had a private talk with Ellie, she came out of the house and walked down over the uneven ground to tell the boys that Ellie had found her money. The boys were sitting quietly in the shade, a little apart from one another, Robbie alone absent in his tent. They seemed gratified but not curious or excited about the return of the money.

"So," said Ma, smiling, lightheaded with tiredness, "we had a lot of fuss an' trouble an' suspectin' people around here for nuthin'. Robbie, can you hear what I'm tellin' them?"

"Yes." The answer came muffled through the canvas.

"Well, now that we have that settled"—Ma was on the point of leaving—"what are you all plannin' to do after you have your lunch?"

They had nothing planned, they replied, lapsing back into despondent silence. Ma asked them if they'd like to cook their lunch outdoors, but even this failed to rouse them from their apathy; and looking at them, Ma knew there was one more thing she had to do that morning. She had known it all along, but because of her tiredness she had been hoping in some fashion to postpone it. Requesting Robbie and little Arthur to accompany her, she went back, climbed stiffly into the car and drove with them up the side road to Frank Manning's farm.

There on the knoll that crowned his property, guided by the sound of sawing to one side of the small house, they came upon Frank standing high up in a tree, lopping off a dead branch.

"Frank"—Ma tipped her head back and raised one hand to shield her eyes from the sun—"Frank —— Oh, I didn't know whether you could see us down here or not. Frank, we come over to tell you the good news: Ellie's found her money!"

"Yeah?" Almost at once he went on sawing.

"She found it up in her trunk!" Ma had to shout to make herself heard above the rasp of the saw. "It wasn't none of the boys that took it at all!"

High up in the greenery the saw became still for a moment, then its ripping sound continued. A few leaves sailed down.

"Harry Bannister's just been over to my place an' gone. I didn't say nuthin' to him about the money. I say Harry Bannister's been over to my ——"

"I heard you," he called down gruffly. "I'm not interested."

"Oh. Well, I —— You got some visitors—Robbie an' little Arthur here—they come over with me. They just wanted to say hello to you." She turned to them and urged in a low voice, "Go ahead an' say somethin' to him!" But in the face of his unfriendliness an embarrassment held them both tongue-tied. "They want you to come on back, Frank."

"Well, I'm not coming back." His tone was rough, bothered. "I got a lot of stuff to do around here. I'm not gonna have any time ——"

"What's the matter, Frank? You givin' up? Soon as the goin' starts gettin' a little bit rough?"

"What do you mean?" He was defensive. "I did plenty ——"

"WELL—yes, you did; an' I ain't takin' that way from you. Long as things went your way, you done a good job, but then soon's you found out that kids aren't perfect, that they're just like all the rest of us grownups, with all of the same ways an' traits an' failings, you didn't want to have nuthin' more to do with them. But, Frank, your own common sense tells you if you want to work around kids, that's no time to quit. That's the time when you really pitch in an' see if you can't do somethin' to change 'em if they're wrong or help 'em out if they're in a fix. Otherwise they don't need you! Perfect kids—I don't know where you'll find 'em—they don't need anyone to help them! As for helpin' the other kind—that's not always gonna be easy or pleasant, you got to make up your mind to that right from the start. You got to work with them an' bear with their frailties. See, if you don't mind my sayin' so, I think all along you might have had the wrong idea about kids—even about helpin' them out. You were always feelin' sorry for them an' sort of pityin' them—bein' what you might call sentimental about them—like you were toward them orphan kids you saw in the war without ever gettin' close enough or knowin' them long enough to find out what they're really like. An' then like in this case, when you did find out, when something happened that made them really need you most—then you get sore. You walk out on them. You throw up the job just like you done with all the other jobs you tried ——"

"That's a lot of bunk!"

MA did not argue the point. Instead she said, "Now here's someone done something that ain't easy: he come all the way over here to see you, to thank you for savin' his life, an' as long as you did that, to ask you to give him another chance; an' if you ask me, the least thing you can do is quit actin' like a sorehead, an' come down out of that tree an' shake hands —— An' see, here's little Arthur: he's big enough to come over here an' ask you to overlook what Robbie done to him. An' Frank, when someone's willin' to turn over a new leaf, they need an awful lot of help right around that time ——"

"Look outta the way," Frank said roughly.

"What?" Ma's neck was growing stiff from tipping it back so far. "What did you say?"

"Look outta the way. I—I'm—I'm throwin' the saw down."

They stepped back and the saw came hurtling down, tearing through the leaves, striking one of the lower boughs, landing with a bounce and a silver quiver on the grass. Frank swung down quickly and easily and dropped with a light spring onto the ground. He picked up his saw. "That was a stupid thing to do, but I guess it didn't hurt it." His back to them, he stood looking down at it, absorbed, his head bent, and then after a long while he managed to turn around; he looked at Robbie and put out his hand.

"All right, Robbie, let's shake, and—and what d'you say? We try it again? All of us?"

The last few days of the vacation went smoothly, perfectly, slipped away all too fast. On the night before the children were to leave the mayor telephoned with instructions for Ma to have her crowd down at the station at five o'clock. "And there's a change in plans here for one of your kids. You know the one you came down to see the supervisor about? Florence Beebe? She's to get on the train with the others, but she's not to get off with them. One of the supervisors is to continue on with her. You can tell her she's going up to join her mother, and in a couple of weeks more the both of them are going back to the mother's family in California."

At ten minutes to five the following day, Ma's overcrowded old car drove up to the station, but to her dismay and fright, the platform was empty. "He said five o'clock! Could the train have gone already?" When she looked a second time, she saw the mayor in a white linen suit, standing alone on the platform, smiling at her.

"All right, Ma, and kids. I have a little surprise in store for you. Come on along. Follow behind in your car. It's not far ——"

"What's goin' on?" Ma asked. "Where is everybody? Didn't you say five o'clock?"

"Yes, but I said that just to make sure you'd be early."

Bewildered, expecting at any moment to come upon the other Sunshine Fund children

Human nature is the same all over the world; but its operations are so varied by education and habit, that one must see it in all its dresses.

—LORD CHESTERFIELD

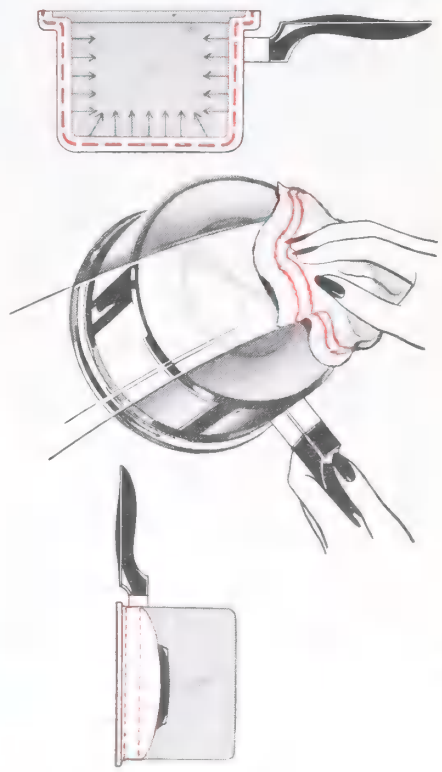
See for Yourself Why

FLINT-WARE

Makes All Other Cookware Old Fashioned!

The Only Cookware with the invisible

Radiant Heat Core



Flint-Ware is triple-layer steel – and its middle layer is an amazing Radiant Heat Core that spreads heat not just across the bottom, but up and around the sides, too. Cooks everything faster and more evenly!

Vanadium Stainless Steel . . .
Washes Clean Easy as Dishes

Flint-Ware's wonderful Radiant Heat Core is sandwiched between two layers of vanadium stainless steel that cleans with no scouring . . . gleams with no polishing! Flint-Ware skillets and saucepans are as easy to wash as a dish!

"Store-Away" Covers!

One of many new convenient Flint-Ware features! Just flip covers over and store right in your Flint-Ware! See the complete Flint-Ware line wherever fine housewares are sold in the United States and Canada. See for yourself why Flint-Ware is the only cookware so good it's guaranteed for 15 years!

EKCO ...the greatest names

FLINT in housewares!

Ekco Products Company, Chicago 39, Illinois

FOR FREEZER OR FREEZER COMPARTMENT

Save ALL the juicy, tenderness this proven low-cost way

Freezing can't harm your meats if you protect against freezerburn and drying out with KVP Freezer paper. It's easy to use . . . fits snugly . . . strips freely. KVP originated Freezer paper and keeps it the leader in low-cost protection. Sold by locker plants, supermarkets, houseware, hardware, department stores. Keep a box on hand, ready for special meat bargains.

Your Guarantee of Quality

KVP

Save time, Save work, with these KVP household papers.
Shelf papers—Freezer papers—Heavy and Fancy Waxed—KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers—Pie Tape—Baking Cups—Cookery Parchment—Gift Wrapping

THE KVP COMPANY, Kalamazoo, Michigan
In Canada buy KVP-APPLEFORD Paper Products

3 out of 4 call for it!

Most salad dressings need tang and zest. That's why so many recipes call for Lea & Perrins Worcestershire Sauce. To make sure your salads have that unique, can't-be-copied flavor, always ask for the original.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

FREE! Recipe Book, DISHES MEN LIKE
• 168 easy recipes
• 84 'good go-togethers'
• 7 pages carving diagrams
Write LEA & PERRINS, Inc.
241 West St., New York, N.Y., Dept. J-6

A SURE SEAL—JAR AFTER JAR!

Kerr LIDS GIVE 22% GREATER SEALING SURFACE!

Every home canner knows—the seal is all important! And now laboratory tests prove Kerr Lids give 22% greater sealing surface. Exclusive thick sealing composition makes a 3-way seal—top, inside and outside edge of jar.

Only Kerr Lids have the golden finish—acid resistant. And Kerr Lids give you a seal you can test three ways—hear, see or feel the seal. Buy Kerr Jars, Caps and Lids for your home canning—extra protection at no extra cost!

GOLDEN FINISH — ACID RESISTANT

"SELF SEALING"* BRAND
*TRADEMARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

USE KERR JARS FOR FREEZING, TOO!

gathered nearby, Ma and her entourage drove behind him away from the station, back to High Street and along to the Williams House, the town's only hotel. There they got out and, in growing wonder, followed him up the wide steps. Ma had never before been inside its imposing entrance. She expected to see the lobby crowded with children, but its cool, pale, palm-decorated expanse was empty, and in growing mystification Ma followed Harry Bannister past the desk into the hotel's main dining room. That, too, was cool and empty save for a few waiters in white jackets. As soon as they saw the mayor and his party advancing, they came to attention, smiled, bowed; the headwaiter hurried forward to lead the procession to a large round table set for ten, bearing before each place a small American flag.

"Now I'm going to let you in on a secret," the mayor said before he sat down beside Ma. "The train's not coming in for another hour and a half. Still and all, we're not going to have any long-winded speeches. This is a little farewell dinner that I ordered specially for you. We're the only ones going to be here. It's a sort of testimonial dinner of thanks to Ma Baggley for looking after all of you these past two weeks, and besides that it's a—well, it's like a gesture to you eight kids, to make up for the cool reception you got that first rainy day in Turnersville. I want you to know we loved having you here. All you kids. And you're all welcome to come back next summer." Applause broke out, sending chills down Ma's spine. "Yes," he laughed. "To Ma's place if you want. Frank Manning will be around to greet you. He and Ellie will both be here; I'll be mighty surprised if they're not married before long. I was just talking to Frank this morning. He'll have the summer off from his coaching job, and he and I are going to get together on a plan for a camp, a great big camp, but that's off in the future. I just want to repeat: you're all welcome to come back next summer. And now, what d'you say, boys and girls, let's eat."

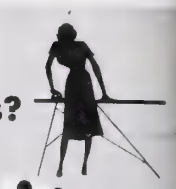
At the very last minute on the crowded station, with the townsfolk waving to the New York children inside the train, Frank and Ellie drove up at breakneck speed. Ellie had done up a supper for each of her departing charges to eat on the train and there was just time to toss the packages in the open windows, to call out good-bys and to promise to be on hand next summer. The train began to move.

"'By, Ellie—'by, Frank—good-by, Ma, and thanks! Thanks, Ma!" And there they were being borne away from her in the lighted train: Diane in her gray sweater and Florence Beebe, ecstatic-looking, with one of the kittens, and then Robbie and Mac leaning far out to wave, and Allie with the hair in his eyes, and Whitey, and finally little Wilbur and Arthur. "Thanks, Ma! . . . Ma! Send ya a card, Ma. . . . See you next year, Ma ——"

And just when Ma, in happy tears, was thinking she would need a year to get herself in shape again, the mayor informed her that on Monday—in another two days—Turnersville was expecting a whole new batch of underprivileged children and he had already put her down for six of them. END

NEXT MONTH

"Sinclair Lewis and I were never properly introduced—he picked me up in a freight elevator. . . .



"He walked with me three blocks to the subway, talking steadily, telling me I was the most exciting person he'd seen in New York, would I lunch with him soon, tomorrow, where was I born, he was writing a novel, he couldn't dance, he wished he had a mustache, couldn't grow more than seven hairs simultaneously, how about a noble square beard like a French gourmay—was that the way to pronounce it? He lived in Greenwich Village. . . ."

■ Thus begins Grace Hegger Lewis' revealing picture of the shy, gangling young genius she married—the "Minnesota tumbleweed" who became the first American to win the Nobel Prize for literature.

WITH LOVE FROM GRACIE

Complete in the July JOURNAL, condensed from the book soon to be published by Harcourt, Brace & Co.

why do you stand for this?

"it's so restful to sit down and iron"

Cream City MET·L·TOP
The World's Most Comfortable IRONING TABLE

At last it has happened. Women are going on a sitdown strike against ironing board drudgery. Why stand in a back-straining position when you can sit relaxed and iron in comfort? The new MET-L-TOP "floats" the ironing table right over your lap, leaves plenty of room for knees and legs, adjusts instantly for the height that's right for you. It's built to give you a lifetime of ironing ease and energy-saving efficiency. Ask your dealer to show you the MET-L-TOP Model C-690.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Instantly adjustable for sit-or-stand ironing, at the height that's just right for you.

AT ALL GOOD STORES
$13.95
in decorator colors

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
MILWAUKEE 1, WISCONSIN

Cream City MET-L-TOP PADS AND COVERS
Made right to fit tight over back and nose of MET-L-TOP, and all standard ironing tables. Sanforized cover. Strong elastic edge.

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43

ores in that region or elsewhere, which are the ommon symptoms of newly acquired syphlitic infection. Sometimes these symptoms are mall and do not attract attention, or they disppear promptly. Yet the disease remains in he blood stream and it can appear later with erious manifestations, such as heart disease, nsanity, blindness or paralysis."

"Oh, how dreadful! I wish I hadn't started ll this."

"In my opinion it was a very sensible thing o do. I only wish everyone could be required o have these tests. In this state it is necessary or everyone applying for a marriage license to roduce evidence of a negative test for syphilis. lso, the test must be made in the case of evry pregnant woman, so that, if it should be ositive, she may be treated in the interests of er unborn child as well as herself. If every an and woman in the country were required o undergo such a test, the latent cases could e discovered, properly treated and cured. hen syphilis could be wiped out permanently ist as smallpox has been."

"Do you mean that venereal diseases posively can be cured?"

"Every case of gonorrhea can be cured with enicillin. It often requires but a single injecon and rarely more than three, although in omen larger doses over longer periods of me may be needed than in men, since the onococcus is less accessible in the female rgans. Syphilis also is curable by penicillin, specially in the early stages. However, it kes more time to eradicate than gonorrhea, ith a number of daily treatments followed by onthly checkups for a year and at longer inrvals for a further period. Venereal diseases are highly contagious and dangerous, and if neglected may lead to terrible complications. They could be eradicated if all infected persons took prompt and adequate treatment."

"I should think that anyone with such a horrible infection would be begging for these treatments."

"You forget that there are many ignorant persons in the world, and there are even some who are malicious. Society has to protect itself against both classes, and that is why these cases are reportable to health departments."

"Do you mean that if you had found gonorrhea you would have reported it publicly?"

"I would have been obliged by law to report it. No, not publicly, but with the utmost degree of privacy, also assured by law. It is necessary to make certain that all such cases are treated until permanently cured, in order to protect others. The health department accomplishes this, either independently or in cooperation with the patient's doctor. Local health boards provide free treatment for those who cannot afford their own physician."

"Are you going to give me a dose of penicillin to cure this trich—this infection of mine?"

"Penicillin would be of no use at all in treating a trichomonas infection."

"Do you mean to say that penicillin will cure syphilis and gonorrhea and still not touch a simple little ——"

"It isn't so simple, and it is an infection caused by quite a different sort of microorganism which reacts very differently to treatment. It will probably require longer to cure than any case of gonorrhea. However, we shall start the treatment immediately."

"That is exactly what I want to do."

NURSES . . . A MAJOR NATIONAL NEED

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 32

ut has many repetitive tasks, perhaps shelling eas and making gelatin in the diet kitchen for four-week period or giving patient care for nother six weeks in the medical ward. The rls' mother was pleased that Betty was asgned to clinical work just four weeks after e beginning of the first-year term. Alice, she xplains, had two years of prenursing with no inical work.

In addition to the varied assignments at untington Hospital, pilots also have the opportunity for study and experience with other ospitals and organizations in the city. In the st year, the girls learn about Pasadena comunity services by visiting agencies such as the ed Cross and the Chamber of Commerce and ake home calls with visiting nurses. In the cond year they spend four weeks in classes d in wards caring for tubercular patients at ity of Hope Hospital and eight weeks at a overnment hospital getting experience for ychiatric nursing.

The Pasadena program is part of a research oject in two-year nursing education conucted by the Nursing Education Division of olumbia University Teachers College, New ork City. Other schools participating include range County Community College, Middlewn, New York, and Fairleigh Dickinson ollege, Rutherford, New Jersey, whose proams started in September, 1952; Henry rd Community College, Dearborn, Michin; and Weber College, Ogden, Utah, which pened programs in 1953. Last year Virginia termont College, Bristol, Virginia, joined e project. Research at Columbia University carried on under a grant of $110,000 from a tizen active in volunteer hospital work (who efers to remain anonymous), but each colge program is financed locally. All have comunity advisory committees to work out plans r co-operation with nursing and hospital oups.

If its present popularity with nurses-to-be ntinues, Pasadena City College won't be le to keep up with the demand. Miss Vosloh d Dr. William Langsdorf, college president, ve been conferring about adding new classes d faculty members, for the program is atacting housewives and mothers and college graduates, as well as brand-new high-school graduates.

Watching second-year pilot, peppy Mrs. Kathryn Rodriguez, whose own 20-year-old Carole is in the first-year class, at work in the surgical ward, you can understand why Pasadena City College is eager to have these mature women as nursing students. Mrs. Rodriguez bustles about to make her patient as comfortable as possible. After the morning bath, she fluffs the pillows, places the electric-light cord within easy reach of Mrs. Brown, sets out her writing paper and two novels.

The younger girls share this concern for their patients. Mary Schuster, who could easily be a model or beauty contestant if she wanted to, finished up her final high-school term in summer so she could become a pilot by September. Working in the surgical ward, Mary takes great care to stop a patient's oscillating bed at the most comfortable position. The woman, who must be rocked at short intervals during the day to increase her circulation, chats merrily about her six-year-old granddaughter, pointing out that the crayon drawing on the wall is the child's best art work to date. Mary enjoys this postoperative care, decided after her experience as a "scrub nurse"—handing sterile instruments to the operating surgeon—that she wanted to be a surgical nurse.

Ann Smith, 18, freckled and blond, is going to school on a loan fund from the P.E.O. organization and earns her dinner money with Saturday work at the hospital. Her tender care of an 80-year-old man brought forth impulsive and touching praise: "I wish I could adopt you." Ann, whose home is beyond commuting distance, is one of the most popular girls at the nurses' residence, where the others tell you she gives "terrific" back rubs. But Ann really prefers taking care of elderly people.

Supervising nurses, watching the girls intently studying patients' charts, writing down their own comments in record books, sometimes find new inspiration in their own jobs. "These girls have such real feeling for their patients," says Helen Hancock, surgical-nursing supervisor, "that I'm buoyed up whenever I work with them." END

NEW! CAN'T FAIL!

FLUFFY FROSTING SENSATION

MAKES LUSCIOUS FLUFFY FROSTING WITHOUT COOKING!

At last, you can whip up fluffy frosting without a doubt of success!

You just can't fail with this new Minute-man Instant Frosting Mix!

No guessing—no cooking! Simply add mix to cold water and beat. Get more than enough fluffy, glossy frosting for two 9-inch layers.

Smooth, easy to spread—it tastes like the best homemade. Stays fluffy and glossy—won't get "sugary" or soak into the layers.

"Delicious fluffy frosting you can always count on!" says FRANCES BARTON, Consumer Service Department, General Foods Corporation.

Product of General Foods

No cooking! Nothing to boil. Just add to cold water and beat.

Foolproof! It turns out perfect every time—and stays perfect.

Better than homemade! Always smooth, fluffy. Doesn't get "sugary." Won't soak into cake.

Today try this newest time-saver from the makers of Minute Rice, Jell-O Instant Pudding, Instant Maxwell House Coffee

Assigned to West Point for three years, Anne and Pat enjoy "feeling permanent for a while."

Anne met Pat on blind date, thought him "stiff."

Victory . . . ten years after

After war, separation and hectic moves, the Pattons are "home again" at West Point—where their story first began.

Graduation Parade, West Point Academy, June, 1955. The Corps of Cadets is forming for retreat on the Plain. Slowly the flag is lowered; as the band crashes into The Star-Spangled Banner, the grandstand crowd surges up, the cadets stand motionless. A breeze lifts the flag, stirs the bright dresses of mothers, sisters, sweethearts. Now the flag is down, the last echo of the National Anthem dies, the spectators resume their seats.

A slender, smartly dressed young woman turns to her tall, uniformed companion. "My third June Week," she says wonderingly. "My tenth fantastic year in the Army!"

"Do you remember that first June Week?" asks Maj. Oliver Beirne Patton.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

"ON June 6, 1944," wrote Anne Connors to a friend, "a cadet I was most fond of graduated in a class of 474 men who went wild with excitement when General Somervell opened his address with the news that American troops were at that moment landing on Normandy beaches. White caps flew into the air, everyone screamed, mothers wept;

BY JEAN TODD FREEMAN
PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Wedding came three months after Pat's return from war.

"In Germany we dressed for warmth, not style."

In Korea Pat learned of new child.

In Germany, 2 nurses!

When weather's good, the children play outside all day. Shelby and Barnes adore parades; Beirne prefers "cowboys."

"Today's Army is family-minded. As Army parents, our goal is to keep a tight, secure domestic circle, no matter how "Schloss Patton" has 10 rooms, 6 fireplaces, large grounds. "We were lucky to get it!"

Swimming at Delafield pool attracts cadets, officers, wives, children. "Perfect vacation spot."

try not to let housework pile up. West Point is a show place; you have to keep up house, grounds, yourself."

Pat built a cedar table, matching benches, kitchen cabinet. "Already Beirne shows a knack with tools."

I understood dimly, but my thoughts did not rise much above the tremendous excitement of the occasion."

Anne Connors, nineteen and attractive, was very "unserious" in those days. "I didn't believe in going steady, was having wonderful fun in New York—and ate, breathed, slept music." About her career in musical comedy Anne was serious. Born into a musical family in Danbury, Connecticut, she had gone straight from high school to the Juilliard School of Music in New York. To support herself, she cared for her landlady's children, worked in B. Altman's college shop, was a Conover model. One memorable day, she auditioned for The Vagabond King. "Out of four hundred girls," she remembers, "only twelve were to be chosen. I was too tired to be scared. I sang two songs, then they told me I was in—in the chorus!" During her four months with the show, Anne was understudy for the comedienne, "but unlike the movies, she didn't break a leg and give me my Big Chance!" Early in 1944, there was a chance Anne might go to Hollywood. "Pat and I were having Sunday brunch at the Madison Hotel when I told him I might miss June Week because I might be in Hollywood. He was so crushed he couldn't eat—that was the first gleam that he was serious about me."

Pat—or "Ollie," as he was called at West Point—disliked Anne the first time he met her, on a blind date for an Easter hop in 1942. "It was a typical dull plebe weekend,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 134

To earn extra money, Anne played for dancing classes. Teas, receptions, volunteer work necessitate baby sitters. "Sometimes you just go and go and go!"

Anne and Pat agree, "Children are fun. The best tonic in the world is just watching a child grow." After bedtime, the parents read, listen to records.

Patton children are disciplined by "common sense." Anne feels that Pat's too strict; he claims she spoils them. "With four kids, you have to have rules."

ften we move. To a child, home is where he's happy, regardless of place."

"There is no happier home on earth than one with a baby." Ellen, six months old now, is second Patton child to be born in this country!

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

At tenth reunion, Pattons had party for 100 guests; next morning Pat cooked corn-meal battercakes for 30.

On picnic, Class of '44 compares notes: 95% are married, average 2½ children per family; 22% own their own homes.

"Most moving of all were the simple moments when we visited the graves of dead classmates."

Members of the Class of '44 agree: "These have been fantastic years!"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 132 replete with organ recital, movie and hop—I thought Anne was a cold fish." And all Anne can remember is "sitting at a ghastly horse show for hours, bored to death; dancing, and hearing Pat count one-two-three under his breath! A numbing experience." If Pat hadn't hurt his knee in spring football practice, they might never have met again. But Anne heard of the mishap, sent him a bag of jelly beans. He responded with "the cutest letter I'd ever read. I began to think maybe I'd missed something."

Eventually, Pat came to New York to see her (Anne refused to go to West Point) and gradually she learned more about this tall likable cadet (the shortest man in the tallest company) who wrote such amusing letters. Pat was an "Army brat"—a term Anne, from a more or less "settled" Connecticut family, could hardly understand. Born Christmas Eve, 1920, in an Army hospital CONTINUED ON PAGE 142

Pat and two former roommates check: "Only 50% of our class admit they've gained weight, lost hair."

Anne wears pretty frock, velvet hat. As a model, she learned "all about make-up and clothes."

Snappy cadets contrast markedly with more casual officers. "Ten years bring more changes than posture!"

New Frigidaire Imperial 2-Door COLD-PANTRY

Stores Food The Way You Buy It and the way you use it, too!

We followed you shopping—then designed this food freezer-refrigerator with the open-shelf convenience, easy reach and full view you enjoy in supermarkets! More space for favorite foods. Most-used food at most comfortable heights. All foods in plain sight. A giant food freezer, with its own door, to hold as much frozen food as many a freezer you'd buy separately!

Huge Refrigerator with Flowing Cold—on top. No squatting! Full-size Roll-to-You Shelves roll out all the way. New Flowing Cold bathes all items in just-right cold. Defrosting in the refrigerator section is automatic—no buttons to push, no pans to empty.

Huge "Picture Window" Hydrator—in the door. No stooping! 24.5 qts. of fresh foods swing down to counter height. Stay crisp and on display. New deep-set Pantry Door stores butter, cheese, bottles, left-overs.

Huge Separate Food Freezer—at the bottom. Stores 169 lbs. of frozen food in full view, at finger tip. Two wide baskets roll to you. 8 lbs. of cubes and new Cubelets. Maintains zero zone temperatures—defrosting is seldom necessary.

In color! . . . Sherwood Green, Stratford Yellow and Snowy White. Costs only $5.51 weekly after minimum down payment. Ask a Frigidaire Dealer for exact terms on all appliances Arthur Godfrey recommends!

Frigidaire

Built and backed by General Motors

TOM PALUMBO

Anne Patton, busy wife and mother of four children, looks as pretty as a picture (above), because she devotes intelligent planning to every aspect of her life.

Fresh accessories, a perfume you love, help create a party mood.

Prescription for Beauty:

a husband who helps; well-behaved children

Try a leisurely breakfast to help you start the day cheerfully.

Do your vegetable preparing or mending out in the sunshine.

Regular exercise will keep your body fit and firm, your spirits high.

When papa helps he's rewarded with a more appreciative mate.

DRAWINGS BY MC CULLOUGH

Ten minutes in a tub of warm water and suds soothes, scents and relaxes.

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN Beauty Editor of the Journal

"THERE are plenty of things to frazzle and exhaust you when you have four children under the age of eight to care for," says pretty Anne Patton. "I know, for instance, that irritable, won't-help children can break a mother's spirits as well as her back—that there's nothing more frustrating than to have six things to do all at once. I'm lucky to have a husband who understands this, and who pitches in when I reach a bottleneck so I won't always be running a three-ring circus!

"Pat helps master our morning situation by fixing breakfast for the children," says Anne, "and (I told you I was lucky!) he brings me mine on a tray. At that early hour I'm apt to be changing six-month-old Ellen's diaper or sorting socks. But eating breakfast upstairs where I have a chance to relax and enjoy it is a peaceful way to start the day. Later, when Pat comes home from work, he gives me a hand with the children. And he's cheerful about doing it. He doesn't make me feel he's taking over my job!"

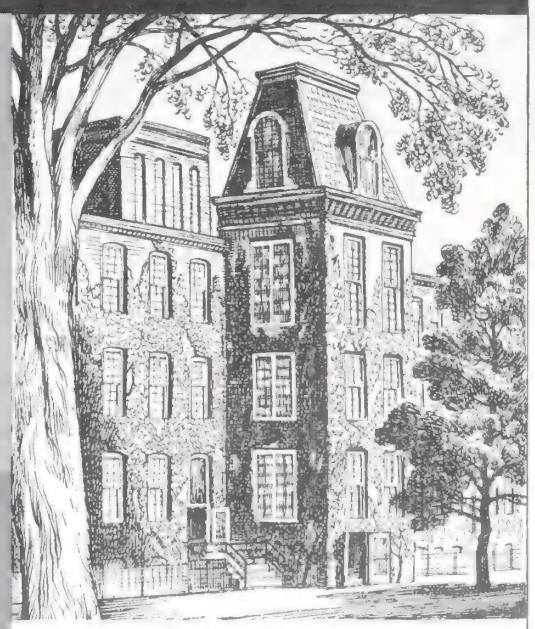
Irritable, balky children who haven't learned to help themselves can shatter a mother's nerves and cause her real fatigue. This is a situation the Pattons rarely come up against, but not by chance. "Pat is the main provider of the kind of consistent, firm-but-gentle discipline that sinks into little heads!

"All the children are being trained to pick up after themselves and keep their rooms tidy. These chores don't always go off without a hitch. But by encouraging (or insisting when necessary) that they carry out their jobs, Pat and I believe the children are getting an invaluable lesson in self-sufficiency. And their efforts lighten my work."

Even the busiest household schedule should allow time for a mother to get some rest. Five-minute periods of complete relaxation at odd times during the day can work wonders in renewing strength and brightening your outlook! Anne Patton considers her hour's nap each day her biggest beauty treatment. "It's CONTINUED ON PAGE 161

The Tōwle Touch

From our drawing boards... sterling design that is authentic, elegant, correct.



From the traditional charm of Towle's Old Colonial to the contemporary grace of Towle's Contour, Towle designers are guided by one idea—artistic perfection. No detail that can enhance a pattern's beauty...proportion...balance...is overlooked. Special treatment of fork tines and bowls is a typical Towle Touch. We call it "tip-to-toe" design. Note how the unusual fluted bowl of the Old Colonial spoon, and the bowl of Towle's modern classic, Contour, are part of the pattern. Towle "tip-to-toe" design adds subtle individuality to every pattern...piece...and table.

THERE ARE MANY TOWLE TOUCHES... practical touches—such as the Towle Solid Metal Seal on knives—that make Towle Sterling so very usable...artistic touches—like the Towle "deep burnish" finish—that make Towle so much more beautiful, so distinctively sterling on your table.

Pieces illustrated: Craftsman cream ladle, Rambler Rose lemon fork, Rose Solitaire nut spoon, Southwind butter serving knife, Old Master jelly server. Prices for 6-piece place settings begin at $29.75. Towle Sterling is sold only at selected stores best qualified to serve you.

Visit us in historic Newburyport—just north of Boston, home of Towle Silversmiths and their predecessors for over 260 years. See the Towle craftsmen at work and The Towle Gallery exhibits of antique American silver. Towle Silversmiths of Newburyport, Massachusetts.

The specially designed quilted spread by Marion Cheever Whiteside features a Victorian ribbon bowknot with an appliqued flower bouquet. Combined with keepsake accessories, the quilt adds that romantic touch which gives Victorian rooms their charm. For this Victorian Quilt pattern send 25c to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania. Ask for No. 2629.

HAROLD FOWLER

VICTORIAN BEDROOM

Some things old,
some things new combine to make a livable room in the Pattons' Victorian house

LIKE many other Army and Navy couples, the Pattons never feel "furnished." Every change of quarters presents a new set of problems, fitting in, making do, wishing each time they could start all over again. This last move, to West Point, found the Pattons in an 1890 house with plenty of precious bedroom space, but an embarrassing lack of furniture and few pieces of the right kind.

Anne Patton studied the tall problem windows and had an inspiration. We could have a cozy Victorian bedroom, she thought, with a canopied bed, a flowered rug and my old walnut chest. The idea grew into the charming room photographed above, the first really rounded-out scheme the Pattons have had.

No type of decoration, by the way, adapts itself so easily both to the budget and to the limited skills of the amateur decorator as does Victorian. You may already own one or more original Victorian pieces—a rocker, a lady's chair, a footstool or a chest. Then just a few keepsakes or nostalgic treasures such as an old valentine or pincushion, quaint fashion prints or a flower-sprayed vase lend the mellowing touch of authenticity.

The all-important bed came first, a simple four-poster, ruffled with dotted Swiss and spread with one of Marion Cheever Whiteside's romantic quilts specially designed for the room. Its appliquéd bouquet of old-fashioned flowers in soft pastels is tied with a turquoise ribbon bowknot, also sewed on. Scalloped edges and fine quilting give it the true Victorian touch. CONTINUED ON PAGE 154

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

NEW HOOVER® Constellation†

(with exclusive double-stretch hose)

cleans twice the area of any other cleaner

Less than 12 inches from swivel top to easy-glide base—yet it's the world's most powerful cleaner!

Actual photo! Look at the reach of the Constellation!

xclusive nozzle takes fewer rokes because suction is effective ear across nozzle. And there's a ll horsepower motor! Actually, you et more dirt with ⅓ less work!

Exclusive throwaway bag holds more dirt than any tank or canister cleaner. Lightning bag change, too—easiest of all to remove and replace. Your hands never touch dirt!

Exclusive telescoping wand—use it short or use it long. Doubles in length—no need for extensions. New beveled brushes reach into any nook—never leave streaks!

Complete with Strato-Tools for all cleaning jobs.
Attractive trade-ins. Easiest terms.
Also available in Canada at slightly higher prices.

$97.50

Now you can clean a 30-foot circle—clean from one room into another, or clean all the way upstairs, without moving your cleaner.

New double-stretch hose goes in and out and roundabout—no tote, no tangle, no twist. Most flexible hose ever put on a vacuum cleaner—and the only stretchable hose. It actually doubles its length, yet takes no more storage space.

Let your Hoover dealer show you why this "spherical miracle" cleans faster, cleans farther, cleans easier.

The Hoover Company
North Canton, Ohio

Summer's the Time to Sew

There's a world of fashion for very few dollars on this page. Anne Patton, whose figure is as pretty as it was in her modeling days ten years and four children ago, loves gay summer dresses that can be laundered. She knows that in an afternoon or two of sewing she can turn out a dress pretty enough to wear to any of the June Week festivities . . . gay enough for one of her own "basket suppers." The prices range from an unbelievable $2.66 for the basic white piqué dress to $11.53 for an all-wool felt coat.

BY NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

For summer parties, Anne's felt coat is just enough cover, blends with print.

This pretty print, whose skirt has eleven-yard sweep, costs about $8. Vogue's E.T.M. Design No. 83

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

A Bright Felt Summer Coat Goes Anywhere, Any Time

A felt coat adds a gay note to any summer wardrobe. This bright blue one cost under $12.00 in all-wool felt, about $8.00 for a wool-and-rayon blend. Vogue E.T.M. Design No. S-4545. A white piqué dress is a summer basic . . . can be made for under $3.00. V.E.T.M. Design No. 8523.*

BLACK STRAW HAT BY ADOLFO, PINK STRAW BY AMY, POLKA DOT HAT BY MARION UNGER

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on page 166. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

©VOGUE

JOSEPH SANTORO

Choose a Print That Can be Appliquéd

This gay print cost only 59c a yard and you need about four yards. Cutouts of the strawberries and grapes edged with a zigzag stitch decorate the neckline of Anne's Orlon cardigan. Skirt, Vogue V.E.T.M. Design No. 8644.*

Black-and-White Checks, Cool and Crisp

Costs under $6.00 to make this easy-to-get-into gingham. The FOUR-piece pattern is Vogue's V.E.T.M. Design No. 8572. For contrasting collar, 1 yard piqué. Add sheer black bow.*

Pale Pink is Feminine, Flattering

Pale pink rayon linen can be made for under $5.00. The slim wrap-around pattern has only THREE pieces and is Vogue's V.E.T.M. Design No. 8583. Rows of stitching (about ten) give a pretty finished edge down sleeves and on front.*

* "Very Easy-to-Make"

 "Easy-to-Make"

Enjoy a Seven-Up "Float"!

● Just put one scoop of ice cream in a glass. Tilt the glass and pour chilled 7-Up gently down the side. Then . . . enjoy the appealing, unusual taste of the 7-Up "Float." The 7-Up flavor does something for the ice cream to make a special treat.

Any time you're thirsty, open a chilled bottle of sparkling 7-Up. Take a sip. Hold it in your mouth a moment and really taste that very special flavor you find nowhere else.

If you want a real thirst-quencher . . . nothing does it like 7-Up!

New 7-Up TV Show! For exciting adventure, see "Soldiers of Fortune" every week.

Copyright 1955 by The Seven-Up Company

Peach and 7-Up Strawberry and 7-Up Orange Ice and 7-Up Lime Sherbet and 7-Up

VICTORY 10 YEARS AFTER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 134

near Washington, D.C., Pat had lived at three different Army camps before he even started to school! His father, Col. Milton Humes Patton (U.S. Cavalry, retired) and his mother, Anne Richardson Patton (daughter of an Alabama congressman), had both been previously married; were in their forties when Pat was born. His two half sisters were years older than he; one lived with an aunt in Washington. Pat's education included two years at Fort Huachuca, Arizona; four years in public schools in Savannah, Georgia; a year at Benedictine prep school; three years at Baylor School in Tennessee. In 1938, he entered an Army prep school, but had no congressional appointment to West Point and failed to obtain a presidential appointment in the highly competitive examination. After two months with the Tennessee National Guard, he was honorably discharged to attend West Virginia University.

At West Virginia, Pat helped edit the college magazine, did AP and UP work, sold corsages, waited tables, dug ditches. "But I still wanted to get into West Point—and at the end of my sophomore year was given a second-alternate appointment by a lame-duck congressman who had failed to be re-elected."

When Pat learned of his acceptance less than a week before time to report for "Beast Barracks," he was driving a beer truck in Georgia. "Dropped everything and ran," he says. "At last I was in the Army, and one of the fortunate ones who really wanted to be there!"

One Sunday during his plebe year, Pat stepped out of a quiet movie into a jumble of wild excitement, broken phrases: Pearl Harbor . . . war! From then on, life at the Academy speeded up. "They rushed us through in three years instead of four," he says. "We had more tactical training, more maneuvers. And we were all restless—wanted to get out and into the fight." But there was still time for Pat to worry over math, relax over his favorite English and history courses, work on the Pointer magazine and Howitzer yearbook staffs. And there was time for New York and Anne Connors.

"Nobody ever had such fun in New York as we did!" Anne says. "Sundays, Pat would meet me at the Church of the Epiphany where I sang in the choir, and take me to brunch at the Madison Hotel. We took the Staten Island ferry, strolled through the Bronx zoo, rode in hansom cabs through Central Park. There was nothing about our friendship that wasn't wonderful."

BUT Pat says, "By June Week, we hadn't progressed very far." And Anne's keenest memory of that weekend (a confusion of parades, speeches, parties; of dancing to Glenn Miller's music with her white-coated cadet) was the moment when Colonel Patton whispered to her, "Thank you for making my son's years at West Point so pleasant"—and the echo of her own mother's warning: "Unless you really love this boy, don't lead him on."

A roll of drums, a quick staccato marching beat. Now the band is passing in review before the corps. A roll-off, a flash of instruments raised, and the music of Graduation March fills the Plain. A medley of nostalgic tunes: Home Sweet Home, The Wedding March, Auld Lang Syne, The Dashing White Sergeant, The West Point March.

"I'll never forget," says Major Patton to his wife, "the morning I heard the West Point Alma Mater sung in German. It was while I was prisoner of war."

After graduation, Pat went to Infantry School at Fort Benning for ten weeks, then joined the 106th Infantry Division at Camp Atterbury, where he was assigned as a platoon leader and alerted for overseas. Scheduled to sail from Camp Standish, in Boston, Pat went to see a friend of Anne's at Wellesley. "I had just twenty-four hours," he says, "and couldn't let anyone know by wire or phone what was happening. So I got the Wellesley girl to send a wire asking Anne to come visit her." But somehow the telegram was delayed; Anne never arrived; on October 18, 1944, Pat sailed for England.

After a short training program in England, things happened fast. "On December ninth, our division moved into combat on the Belgian-German border—just in time to be overrun by the German offensive in Ardennes." On December seventeenth, Pat was wounded in the hands and arms by grenade fragments, but continued to command. Next day, he was shot through both legs by a German sniper. When the regiment withdrew, Pat was left in an aid station, with another wounded officer, two enlisted men and a medic. The following day, the Germans took over. "For the rest of the war," Pat says resignedly, "I was a prisoner."

In a battered copy of the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyam, Pat kept a rough record of his experiences: the wagon trip to Coblentz, the bombing by American planes and the subsequent hasty departure by boxcar, the strafing of the train, the eventual arrival at a hospital near Frankfurt. Here, for the first time in over a month, Pat received medical treatment.

It was at another hospital in Obermaasfeld that Pat managed to get two letters smuggled out—one to his mother, one to Anne. "Somehow," he says, "they got scrabbled around so that each got the wrong letter!" When Pat could walk, he was sent to a convalescent camp, later to a prison camp at Nürnberg. One day Pat, who was unaccountably in a compound with Serb prisoners, heard someone say, "Hey, Ollie, got a match?" Leaning over the wire of the next compound was one of Pat's classmates! "When the march to Moosburg started [American troops were getting close, and prisoners were evacuated] I sneaked around and joined him—found three more

Bounty on a budget

Herewith, some of the special budget favorites of the Patton family, planned with a view to simplicity and hot-weather easiness.

By ANNE PATTON

Mealtime means excitement at our house. Rounding up the children and getting them scrubbed and settled down at the table requires a certain amount of concentration too. Fortunately, the children have good appetites, and good taste in food—which they don't hesitate to express! They are sensible about what they like and don't like, and it's really a big help to me.

This cold ham aspic is summery and delicious, as well as a budget saver. With it we like hot buttered fresh asparagus, when it's plentiful and in season. And a bowl of cold apples.

HAM ASPIC: Add 1 cup finely chopped dill pickle, 1 cup finely chopped celery and ¼ cup minced onion to 3 cups cooked ground ham. Season with 2 teaspoons prepared mustard, 3 tablespoons prepared horse-radish and 1 cup mayonnaise. Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Dissolve in ½ cup boiling water. Add to ham mixture and pour into a pretty 5-cup mold. Chill until set. (It's a good idea to make it the day before, and leave in the refrigerator overnight.) Makes 6 servings.

"Choucroute"—it's a name I love. This really inexpensive sauerkraut-and-frankfurter dish is one which we discovered while living in Europe, and I have added a few variations of my own which make it simpler to prepare. It is practically a meal in itself, which is a short cut that makes the three-meals-a-day routine much easier. Sometimes we have cold consommé first, seasoned with lemon juice; and lots of hot buttered French bread with the "choucroute". Usually we have fresh fruit, or perhaps ice cream, for dessert.

CHOUCROUTE: In a large deep skillet brown ¼ pound bacon slices which have been cut into short, thin strips. Drain on paper toweling. Slice 3 medium onions and sauté in 2 tablespoons of the bacon fat. Add one 1-pound-11-ounce can sauerkraut. Cover and cook until heated throughout. Add the cooked bacon, 8 frankfurters which have been cut into 1″ pieces, and 1 pound small new potatoes which have been peeled and boiled in salted water until tender. Cover and simmer 15 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

West Pointers! Fine sight we made, five dirty, starving lieutenants from the Class of Forty-four, tramping behind a German officer who didn't know where he was going!"

Pat remembers that march only vaguely: dawn at a country farmhouse, when they learned of Roosevelt's death; the day they swiped a chicken, patched up an old pot, cooked the chicken by degrees on ten-minute halts—"by night it was nearly done!" And the strange, disorienting experience of hearing the West Point Alma Mater sung on German soil, with German words: Ach, Wie ist's möglich dann. "I didn't know until later that the melody of our Alma Mater was derived from an old German folk song," Pat says. "It confused me—was the war over? had we lost?"

On April 29, 1945, Pat was liberated and sailed from Le Havre for home. He was now a first lieutenant, having been promoted in March; had earned two Purple Hearts and a Bronze Star medal for meritorious service; had what Anne described as "an interesting limp." When she saw him, after his trip to Huntsville to visit his parents, Anne thought, I'll have to make him smile again.

On the Plain, the Graduation March is almost finished. In the stands, Anne Patton is looking for a missing child. The baby, Ellen, is safely asleep in her arms. Shelby, seven, is standing straight and sturdy beside her mother. Beirne, with his homemade, carefully sanded saber at his belt, has his father's hand. But little Barnes, in a flyaway blue cotton dress, has danced down onto the grass and is clapping her hands in time to the music.

"Shelby," Anne whispers, "could you go get your sister?"

"Barnes thinks she's a cadet, doesn't she?" Shelby says, with low precise enunciation.

Once Shelby spoke nothing but German. When she was born in Germany, very nearly in a Wicklesgreuth turnip patch, no one was more surprised than her mother. "I had no idea what I was getting into when I married Pat," Anne says now. "Why, my family life had been so remote from anything connected with the Army that my dad still calls West Point a camp!"

At first it seemed that they never would get married. Pat's visit to Connecticut, the summer after his return from the war, was highly unsuccessful. "Annie's Catholic," says Pat, "and I had wild ideas about Catholics." Anne says, "Of eighteen first cousins, I was the only one who had even dated a Protestant!" Fortunately, both Anne and Pat possessed sympathetic and persuasive aunts. "You two must get together," said Anne's aunt. "Go talk to a priest," advised Pat's. Once convinced, once engaged, they were married within seven days—on August 9, 1945, in St. Peter's Church in Danbury.

"DANBURY will never be the same!" Anne sighs. Pat's two West Point roommates flipped a coin to see who would be best man. There were three wedding cakes and three rounds of parties—in Danbury, in Washington (where they stayed with Pat's aunt), and in Huntsville, Alabama. The two roommates, who had gleefully followed them to Washington, were finally shaken off when they left for Alabama, where they stayed at the Pattons' "lovely home on a mountaintop."

Two weeks later, they drove to Miami, where Pat had to report for a rest-and-recuperation program at the Shelburne Hotel. Next, to Fort McClellan, where they couldn't find anyplace to live—until they convinced the town's grande dame of their excellent Southern connections in Huntsville, and were promptly granted an apartment in her garage, swept into a lively social whirl. November started five wonderful months at Camp Holabird, Maryland; Anne, who had "never had any interest in cooking," suddenly found her Baltimore apartment crowded with Pat's bachelor-officer friends who ate "buckets" of spaghetti. "But Pat helped me," she admits. "We sort of learned together. Only he kept slipping fat back into the vegetables when I wasn't looking. I was determined to make him give up hot breads, overcooked meat, grits and gravy; he tried to make me like eggs, and gain ten pounds!"

After dinner, Anne liked to curl up in a corner and listen to the men exchange war stories. "Pat could always bring out the humorous side," Anne recalls. "He must have been a big morale booster to the other prisoners." (At an Army-Navy game in Philadelphia, Anne was startled to hear amazed shouts: "Ollie Patton! Are you a ghost?" Only then did she learn what friends had thoughtfully kept from her while Pat was overseas—that he had been rumored dead.)

In late March the Pattons faced their first separation: Pat was assigned to occupation duty in Germany, Anne returned to Danbury to wait out the long months until she could join him. She sailed with an early group of dependents on August 26, 1946 ("in a cabin with fifty-six other women!") and landed at Bremerhaven. "Pat was to meet me in Frankfurt," she says, "and that train ride I shall never forget. Mile after mile of rubble and mud, of bombed-flat desolate towns; glimpses of begging children and ragged women—and me with nothing more than a trunkful of pretty clothes to worry about. I think I grew up then and there."

After a cold winter in Frankfurt, the Pattons moved south to the charming old Bavarian town of Ansbach. "In the Army," Pat and Anne agree, "it's heartbreaking to fall in love with a house"—but this one, clinging to a hill overlooking the ancient rooftops of the town, surrounded by gardens with blossoming fruit trees, was impossible to forget. "In the mornings, we woke to the many-toned village church bells," says Anne. "At dusk, we looked down over ducal palaces—the old seat of Franconia. And while we lived there, Shelby was born."

Pat clearly remembers that awful night when he staggered home with acute indigestion, wanting only to collapse into bed. "But Anne wouldn't let me; she said we were having a baby!" Their frenzied race for the hospital in Nürnberg was dramatically ended by an auto-

DI PIETRO

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

"We are so lucky," says Anne, "to have a nice roomy house, with a kitchen big enough to dance in!" Buying food at the West Point commissary keeps bills below average. "And Anne is a good manager," says Pat.

NOODLE RING WITH TUNA AND PEAS: Combine 4 slightly beaten eggs with 2 cups milk and 1½ cups grated sharp Cheddar cheese. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ¼ teaspoon Tabasco. Cook one 8-ounce package egg noodles according to directions on the package. Drain. Add noodles to milk mixture. Mix well and pour into a 6½-cup greased ring mold. Set ring mold in a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 45 to 50 minutes. For the filling, prepare 2 cups medium cream sauce, seasoning with 1½ teaspoons salt, 1¼ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon Tabasco, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Add to the cream sauce two 7-ounce cans flaked tuna, ⅓ cup minced onion, sautéed in 1 teaspoon butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon minced canned pimiento and 1 package frozen peas, cooked. Simmer 10 minutes. Unmold noodle ring and fill center with tuna sauce. Makes 6 servings.

Meat loaf is probably the best-known meat stretcher; I like to add bacon to ours, which gives it an individual flavor. We serve it with an easy creamy mushroom sauce and a big garden salad.

BEEF-AND-BACON LOAF: Mix together in a large bowl 1½ pounds ground beef, ¼ cup milk, 1½ cups soft bread crumbs, ¼ cup chili sauce, 3 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, 1 unbeaten egg, 5 slices cooked crumbled bacon, 3 tablespoons finely chopped onion, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ¼ teaspoon thyme. Pack into an 8½″x4½″x2½″ loaf pan. Lay raw bacon slices over the top. Bake 1 hour in a moderate oven, 350° F. Serve with mushroom sauce. Makes 6 servings.

MUSHROOM SAUCE: Season 1 cup thin cream sauce with ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon paprika, ½ small clove garlic, crushed, and 1 beef-bouillon cube dissolved in 2 tablespoons hot water. Add ¼ pound chopped mushrooms which have been sautéed in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Simmer 5 minutes, stirring constantly. Makes 6 servings.

Not 1, but 2 ovens -in this 36-inch gas range!

Only Universal gives you so much gas range for so little money!

Just a yard wide, but this gleaming new Universal beauty has all the convenience and cooking performance you'd expect only in larger ranges at a far higher price.

The two generous, separately-controlled Universal ovens give you a full 30 inches of oven space. You can bake at one temperature, roast at another. A full-size smokeproof broiler and four big lifetime guaranteed top burners give you the newest and finest features in cooking. And for additional convenience, there are automatic controls, easy-to-clean removable burner bowls, and many other Universal extras.

Can you believe all this costs only about the same as most ordinary single oven ranges? Your Universal gas range dealer will prove it—with 1955 models for city or bottled gas. See him today.

Universal

GAS RANGES

Cribben & Sexton Co. • Chicago 12, Illinois

Gas gives the easiest, cleanest, coolest cooking of all—for less. You bake best, roast best, broil best, cook best with gas on a Universal Gas Range.

mobile breakdown—"right in the middle of a turnip patch near the tiny hamlet of Wicklesgreuth." Eventually rescued by a passing UNRRA ambulance, Pat and Anne both landed in the hospital; Shelby Katherine was a whole day old before her father revived enough to learn the news. (Later, to atone for his shortcomings, Pat ordered Anne a Ceil Chapman evening gown direct from New York!) Anne's first comment on seeing her baby: "All she needs is a big black cigar to look just like her daddy."

Shelby was just six months old when they left their "dream house" in Ansbach, moved to Nürnberg, where they found a house "with a seventy-five-millimeter shell hole through the kitchen, and no furnace." Pat, after having proudly constructed a furnace with a set of German instructions, discovered he'd hooked the furnace to the hot-water pipes. "If we wanted hot water, we had to light the furnace," he admits sadly. "By winter, all our coal supply was gone."

However, domestic problems never clouded the Pattons' delight in Europe and travel. "We took trips whenever Pat had leave," Anne says. Even after Beirne was born, in late fall of 1948, they could "get away without worrying. A most reliable woman—she'd been nursemaid at the German Embassy in Ankara, Turkey—took wonderful care of the children." These excursions into nearby countries left keen mental images.

Anne remembers "Paris in September. Europe was sick in those days, even Paris, but the romance was there. We went to a café where twenty-five violinists came around to our table and played for us. . . . Italy, hot sun and bright water. A busload of Vassar girls scribbling in notebooks. St. Peter's church, the marvelous paintings and architecture of Rome, the sense of history. . . . Driving to Spain through the lovely Loire Valley, seeing the beautiful cathedrals, the dramatic Pyrenees, Madrid. . . . Nice, the French Riviera, the Ballet Russe in the Monte Carlo casino. I'll never forget the faces in the game rooms: women, in dresses, in the style of 1910, tight lips in masks of concentration; the croupier, with eyes that had seen everything—I was like a child of ten."

And Pat likes to tell about the time they toured Italy by third-class railroad compartment: "A carnival of confusion! The train starts, the Italians break out the wineskins and the picnic hampers. We made many mistakes because Anne and I don't speak Italian—once we forgot to get off the train at Milan, were thrown off at the next stop, a place called Rho. Leaped on the first train headed back to Milan, tried to explain to the conductor, who was all for throwing us off again. The whole car was in an uproar, all the passengers took sides. All the way to Milan the argument raged; then, as the train drew into the station, the conductor swept off his cap, bowed low, said, 'Signore, you have won!' The crowd cheered."

Pat also loved to hunt—Hirsch, boar, Rehbock and, in the Bavarian Alps, chamois; Anne often went along "as retriever." But she adored it, especially the long tramps. "I walked all over Germany," she says. "And Shelby, too—she spent most of her days wandering through the Nürnberg zoo, where her favorite animal was Gretel the hippopotamus."

Shelby was two and a half and stranger to the English language when, in the fall of 1949, her whole life was disrupted. Swept off the lap of her German nurse, scooped up by a frightening airplane—it was no wonder she cried. When the homing Patton family landed at Westover Field in Massachusetts, eager relatives first saw "a little girl with a terrible cold, looking like a DP in her father's gray turtleneck sweater."

In all the excitement, Uncle Gus piled the whole family into his car and abstractedly drove north instead of south—they were almost at the New Hampshire border before anyone noticed. By then, Shelby was so upset by the torrent of foreign words that she howled all the way back to Danbury. Once there, she was far less pleased than her mother to see the elderly relative, a nun, who had come to welcome Anne back. Brought up on European fairy tales, Shelby screamed in German, "Ay-eee, the old black witch!"—and fled in terror.

As she makes her way through the crowd, Shelby Patton's blond head bobs up and down. Three-year-old Barnes, with her seraphic smile, trails behind. Barnes is a minx. One day she carefully placed worms on each pew of the Catholic chapel—"tho people would be thurprised," she explained in her sweet lisp. Now, sidling close to her father, she whispers placatingly:

"Daddy, you look so pretty."

Major Patton gives his wife a helpless look. "My most spoiled child," he says, "and all because you had her to yourself for ten months."

Anne began to feel "bitter" toward the Army soon after their return from Germany. On December eighth, Pat was assigned to the G-2 staff of the Third Infantry Division at Fort Benning—and had scarcely settled his family in a small apartment when he was sent on Puerto Rican maneuvers for three months. In late March, 1950, he was off again—this time for one month's air-borne maneuvers at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. And even when he returned to Benning, he had little time with Anne and the children, working from

HOW THE PATTON FAMILY SPENDS ITS MONEY EACH MONTH

The Pattons figure total monthly income at $501.28, an average worked out over the period November, '53, to October, '54. Average monthly military pay (including a $47.88 monthly rations allowance) comes to $470.87. Since housing is provided, there is no quarters allowance. Average monthly income from all other sources comes to $30.41 a month ($289.96 was obtained by converting all insurance policies to straight life last year, and $75 was received from sale of an article for publication). Total outgo takes it all up:

Food	$125.16	Child care and help in house	23.66
Insurance (total coverage, $46,500)	58.67	Children's school expenses	7.70
Taxes	26.53	Clubs	13.44
Clothing and uniforms	48.50	Magazines and newspapers	2.90
Telephone	7.68	Tobacco	3.16
Dental and medical (for certain care not provided by the Army)	7.33	Automobile (includes licenses and insurance)	17.81
Recreation and entertainment	28.50	Christmas club	8.33
Church and charities	5.58	Savings	8.23
Furniture and appliances	64.83	Miscellaneous	36.75
Laundry and dry cleaning	6.52	Total	$501.28

M. to 7 P.M. "I was upset and angry," e says. "Shelby needed attention, our rtment needed lots of work—and I was nant. Then we leaped into a far more seri- crisis—Korea. Fort Benning became a tmare of rumbling trucks and confusion; ach man left I thought, This can't happen e! But it did."

he whole year was a nightmare. Pat left for ea in August, Barnes was born in October, e then moved to Huntsville near Pat's nts and waited for the letters which told of lian misery, the depression of constant drawal before an overwhelming enemy." last day of June, 1951, Pat returned, with hird Purple Heart and a Bronze Star with V" for personal : the citation reads, art, ". . . Captain on's heroic perform- of the mission re- great credit upon elf and the military ce . . ."

Where's daddy's l?" asked young e, disappointed.

ER nine months of bling in the In- y Officers' Advance se at Fort Ben- "where we lived yers in a small ment and had fun being a family," eceived good news. was to take his r's degree in Eng- t the University of sylvania in prepa- n for a three-year nment at West as an English in- or. "It was any r's dream—return- West Point is like ng home; living means receiving st housing, school nedical facilities in untry!"

Philadelphia, ped on the civilian my, we found it to survive! The en lived on au- ycin, our Drexel apartment cost than the Army ed, food prices buying from com- ries] were a bitter !" Anne, having bated the concerts, and "cultural ad- ges" of a big city, herself juggling ses and "whoop- ith joy when and books balanced!"

une, 1953, Pat re- his M.A. and the ns (now experts in packing and moving) off again—this time for a "comparatively nent residence." Three years seemed like r. Pat, in his elation, went to the annual ng of quarters and emerged with a ten- house. "We were darned lucky," he told dazed. "That's a lieutenant colonel's at the very least." They soon learned no lieutenant colonel had wanted the : it was heated by an old coal furnace, ninsulated, its paint cracking—and was vailable until September!

er "camping out" all summer (which moving into and out of temporarily va- quarters) the Patton family settled into ivy-covered, hilltop "Schloss Patton." ent straight to the cellar to bolt down the ng machine, Anne hung the beloved o clock (from Germany's Black Forest) hall. "Wherever we move," she says, aborhood children appear like magic to the little cuckoo—which Barnes ex- isn't a really bird!"

t Point very soon seemed like home. The painted the house throughout; an oil furnace was installed ("Again we were lucky," says Pat. "The oil heat was an experiment; they picked our house to experiment on!"); in the side yard Pat planted a gourd vine. One day, a friendly basset hound came trotting up the road. "There's Sherlock," cried Beirne, and ran outside, followed by his sisters. "There's Sherlock's mommy and daddy!" cried Barnes—so Pat and Anne went out, too, to greet their new neighbors. "It's as easy as that to meet friends on an Army post," says Anne.

Before long, the phone was "ringing off its hook." A huge calendar, posted above the phone, was scribbled full of duties and engagements. Anne joined the Women's Club ("A wonderful organization that sponsors various educational programs, considers problems of Army wives"); sang with the church choir; helped at the Child Care Center (a cooperative nursery); cast her lot with the West Point Players. "Pat was enchanted when I got the role of Honeychile Wainwright, a Southern ghost—he coached me tirelessly on my accent; people still call me Sugah!"

In addition to club work, Anne found herself dizzy with parties, teas luncheons, department dinners and class picnics. "If you get too involved, it can be chaotic," Anne says. "The spirit is willing—but oh, the flesh!"

PAT was busy too. His schedule includes four sections of plebe English, faculty conferences every other day for exchange of teaching ideas, special work with cadets who feel they need extra help.

"I liked teaching immediately," he says. "It's like selling—you have something you're convinced is good, and you want to convince others. Grammar and literature are vital to everyone, no matter what his field. Reading poetry teaches clearer, more intense expression; reading good literature gives insight into human behavior and problems, both past and present."

In addition to teaching, Pat was assistant adviser, then head adviser to the staff of the Pointer, the cadets' magazine. He also helped edit Encore '44—the tenth-reunion yearbook of the Class of '44. Before either Pat or Anne realized it, a whole year had passed; it was June Week and classmates were gathering from all over the country to compare notes of the past ten years.

Shelby, Beirne and Barnes were packed off to Danbury, while Pat and Anne prepared for the first onslaught of guests. "We had ten people staying with us," Anne recalls, "and it seemed that Pat was eternally in the kitchen, in a black-and-white-striped apron, flipping corn-meal battercakes!" With another couple, the Pattons gave a tremendous outdoor supper for nearly a hundred people: "All afternoon reluctant guests were slicing onions and weeping. We had tons of bologna and eight pounds of ham, a case of lettuce, millions of tomatoes, thirty-eight loaves of bread and twenty-five quarts of lemonade!"

After the party, the weekend moved into the same rush of confusion that Anne remembered from her first June Week, the wonderful

SUMMER CAPE SONG

BY KATHERINE GARRISON CHAPIN

Day, new day, burns clear and clearer,
Bell of light hangs over the hills,
Enclosing valleys, near and nearer,
Nothing is lost where light distills.

This is a day to forgive your enemies:
Little teeth that nibble your fruit,
Thieving catbird who pecks your berries,
Mouse in the kitchen, mole at the root.

Forgive leaves which die too early,
Scatter in silver on springing green.
Humming and chirping sounds that merrily
Suck and nibble and scratch unseen.

Forgive foolish love, and sound of bitter
Words that come from a petulant heart.
Winds enough for grief to scatter
Will rush to tear summer apart.

Out of the sea a day has risen,
Into the wave it falls at night,
Luminous hours blest and shriven
Have no more to ask of light.

NOW... DISCOVER HOW GOOD really fresh tea

CAN BE!

Tea fresh as a mountain lake...

Yes, Tender Leaf is kept so amazingly fresh—it fills your iced tea glass with brighter color,
finer fragrance,
richer flavor than any other tea
you ever tried!

TENDER LEAF BRAND TEA—FRESHEST MOST FLAVORFUL TEA YOU CAN BUY!

Nothing shines aluminum like BRILLO Soap Pads

No soaking, no hard scrubbing! Sturdy, metal-fiber Brillo® Soap Pads whisk off scorch and crust. No need for scouring powders, brushes, dishrags . . . Brillo polishes as it cleans. One quick swish and aluminum gleams!

Brillo Soap Pads (red box) Soap-filled pads
Brillo Cleanser (green box) Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap in every BRILLO Soap Pad

THRIFTIER!
5 and 12 pad boxes

whirl of parties, presentations, dinner parties, dances, concerts and picnics that characterizes every June Week at West Point. And finally, there was Graduation Parade.

"Graduation Class, front and center!" And, at this sharp command, the graduates fall out, forming a single line facing the grandstand. Six hundred strong, they march forward as the band plays and the crowd surges up again, applauding madly.

This is the Class of 1955. But it might be any class.

Anne, watching Beirne clutch his saber, is wondering about the classes of the future; Pat, remembering the thirty-nine men missing from his class, is thinking of the Class of '44. The uniforms are the same—the faces, as they come nearer the cheering people, might almost be the same faces.

At the foot of the grandstand, the Class of '55 breaks, re-forms and stands at attention while the Corps and the band pass in review in its honor.

All at once, the parade is over.

"Schloss Patton" is only a short walk from the Plain. Set on top of a steep hill, against a background of thick woods where the children play at cowboys and Indians, surrounded by spruce and oak, it is tall, dignified, ivy covered. As the Pattons walk into the front hall, the cuckoo clock is striking six. "Supper-time!" Anne calls to the already disappearing children. "Don't go far!" She hurries upstairs to put Ellen into her crib, then heads for the spacious kitchen. Digging into the small but "vital" freezer for chops, peas, potatoes, she decides, since it is rather a special day, to have ice cream for dessert.

Pat, in his den, lights his pipe, notices a worn leather copy of Browning on the arm of a chair, begins to read. Over the fireplace hang mounted horns of Rehbock and chamois; on another wall is a rack with three generations of sabers—Pat's, his father's, his grandfather's. Over the large desk (supporting a typewriter "held together with paper clips and rubber bands") is a large, rather sophisticated photograph of Anne in a wide-brimmed hat.

"WE'RE put-together, slap-together people," Pat once said; and Anne complains that "We don't have really good furniture—with our barely balanced budget we can't buy much." Yet the house contrives to look both comfortable and individual. In the living room a brown sofa and two easy chairs group about an enormous round coffee table (a regular dining table which Pat cleverly lowered); the tea wagon, painted with flowers and used as an end table, was once a German potato cart; the cradle (used also as a lamp table) is a copy of a fifteenth-century cradle Anne saw in a Nürnberg museum and described to an interested German artisan.

This is the room famous for the Pattons' "sack suppers"—fried shrimp and potatoes stuffed in individual bags and put in the oven to heat. "Afterward the bags go into wicker baskets with bright bandannas; everyone sits cross-legged as close as possible to the huge salad bowl on the coffee table. Later, we play pencil-and-paper games."

In the dining room, a china cupboard decorated with the crests of Ansbach and Nürnberg vies for attention with the nine-dollar piano painted yellow to match the walls. "When we opened the top," Pat says, "we found a box of marshmallows, a pack of cigarettes and three ivory keys—none of which fit this piano! And such tone—the D above middle C sounds like a string quartet!"

Upstairs is the domain of the children. When Anne mentions "decorating" the upstairs, Pat reminds her of the herds of kids and dogs who tear about on rainy or cold days, playing in the attic, putting on "shows," arguing and settling arguments with vigor. "We have a system," Pat says. "They don't crawl on the furniture downstairs; we leave their rooms alone." (Actually, the children are quite neat: Shelby, once careless of her clothes, speedily reformed after being sent to school, as punishment, in blue jeans!)

ALMOST all meals are eaten in the kitchen. Now, as Anne sets dinner on the table, Barnes scampers in with an armful of hydrangeas; Shelby follows with a bouquet of snapdragons and petunias. Anne, pleased, exhibits the flowers to Pat before arranging them in a vase. Beirne stands shyly behind his chair. "Would you like to hear me sing a song?" Shelby, who has her mother's true ear, cries, "But you're not singing, you're talking it!" Nevertheless, Beirne sings seventeen verses before he is persuaded to sit down and eat.

All the children have good appetities, but Barnes, unless prodded, may dawdle happily at the table for hours. Sometimes the Pattons argue about eating habits, Anne contending you can't force children to eat, Pat insisting, "I've seen too many people starve—including myself!"

After dinner, Anne puts the children to bed while Pat washes the dishes. ("Certainly I help Anne," he says. "I want a companion, not a servant.") Then, with a cup of coffee, they retire to the living room. Later tonight, friends may stop in for coffee and Anne's chocolate icebox cake; until then, it's good to talk, read, or simply listen to music—probably Mozart.

A boat whistles on the Hudson; Anne looks up. "One of the first things I noticed about West Point," she says, "were the nice sounds. Boats on the river, the band practicing, the fife-and-drum at parades."

"I was thinking at the parade today," Pat says, "where will we be headed after next June Week?"

In another year, Pat's assignment at West Point will be over. But wherever they go—to Europe again, to Fort Leavenworth for advanced training, to some other unguessed-at place—the Pattons will go willingly. "Anne talks about being a home-loving Connecticut type," Pat teases, "but she's restless like me." Anne agrees: "I'd be frightfully lost behind a white picket fence. And home, to a child, is where his family is, regardless of place."

Last June Week, at a traditional Coffee honoring the brides-to-be of graduating cadets, Anne found herself beside a young, helpless-looking girl who said she and her prospective husband would be going straight to Fort Benning.

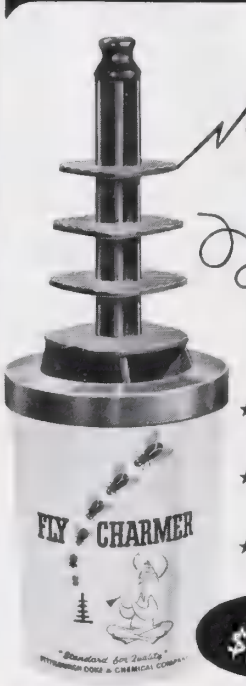
"Of course I knew all about Fort Benning," Anne says, "so I proceeded to tell her about it—for half an hour. Then discovered, to my horror, the girl was daughter of a major general, had a brother in the Army, knew more about Fort Benning than I did!"

After this experience, Anne is understandably shy about offering advice. But her ten years in the Army have taught her "the important thing is always to remember your role as a wife and as an American. The service, like marriage, is not to be entered into 'unadvisedly or lightly; but reverently, discreetly . . . soberly and in the fear of God.'"

Pat adds, "The road may be long and is frequently rough—but never dull!" END

NEXT MONTH

Five attractive war brides—from Italy, France, Belgium, Japan and England—after a decade of marriage to American husbands, agree to answer some candid questions.



You won't want to miss what our new sister Americans have to say on child raising, family life, morals, finances, and adjustments they made to the U.S.A. Settle down for a provocative session!

WAR BRIDES TEN YEARS LATER

By VANNA PHILLIPS

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the July JOURNAL

KILL FLIES THIS AMAZING NEW WAY WITH FLY-CHARMER

Lures Flies Kills Flies!
Works 24 Hours A Day!
★ Clean, Easy to Use!
★ No Irritating Spray!
★ No Unpleasant Odor!
ONLY $1.98

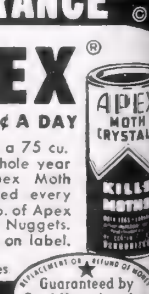
FLY-CHARMER
At Retailers Everywhere!

Charmer Dept., Pittsburgh Coke & Chemical Co.
210 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N.Y.
Sold in Canada by Green Cross Products

AMAZE YOUR FRIENDS
tie BOWS like this
Create exciting gift wrappings. Follow instructions in this book.
Send only 10¢ for your copy
RIPPL-TIE Products Company
2725 WEST ARMITAGE ▪ CHICAGO 47, ILLINOIS

"WHERE'LL I GET THE CASH?"

HOW many times have you asked yourself that question when you are faced with household expenses that have to be met? We would like to suggest an answer that can mean increased income for you.



By selling magazine subscriptions, you can earn generous commissions. Many of our representatives earn more than $1.50 an hour in their spare time—and you can do the same! Just send us your name and address on a postal, and you will receive our offer and easy-to-follow instructions.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
920 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

You Get ALL-YEAR "MOTH INSURANCE"*

WITH APEX®
FOR LESS THAN 1¢ A DAY
*You can protect a 75 cu. ft. closet for a whole year with only 1 Apex Moth Vaporizer, refilled every 3 months with 1 lb. of Apex Moth Crystals or Nuggets. Use as directed on label.

APEX MOTH CAKE—2 sizes
NO MOTH HOLES WHEN YOU USE APEX!
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CAN WOMEN BE LADIES?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 17

spect her virtue; if she is beautiful, they l try to annex her as an asset to their own sition; if she has executive abilities, they l fear her dominance. If she was originally ated out of Adam's rib, Adam's successors ve been making her up out of their heads r since.

There is a myth that women never displayed pacity for governing, and were never edu- ed, until the nineteenth century, when they gan to be emancipated.

I hate to bring the matter up—it seems tless to men—but the first emancipation of men was effected in the early Middle Ages, en some women emancipated themselves m sex and children and went into religious ventual orders. There some of them, elected a secret vote of the sisters, became abbesses, erning very large communities, self- ficient in every detail; commanding vast anized charities, hospitals and primary and ondary educational activities. Sometimes y presided over joint houses of monks and ns, as at Whitby in England, and Fonte- ult in France. These abbesses were great cutives and as learned theologians as the ops. In England they attended the eccle- tical councils. An abbess in the thirteenth tury had great power. And it was devoted rely to the service of "Our Lady," her , and the poor.

think that today if woman desires for her n sake to be a lady—gentle, considerate, and kind—she will have to be so by her n efforts, without the aid of the gentlemen, o can manage to be gentlemen and still fer blondes.

For, alas, great gentlemen have often dallied n, and sometimes married, women who were no ladies; though in the long run, if they can stick it out, the ladies often hold or get back their gentlemen.

And if for a change the gentlemen tend to prefer ladies in the first place—and I would think it a pleasant change—women, whatever their natural predilections, will oblige. They will wear shiningly washed hair, simply dressed; they will throw out the musky perfumes and return to mignonette and Parma violets; they will enhance their charms by the most subtle concealment of them; they will lower their voices; they will retreat from advances; they will assume a mien of gentle pride, mind their manners, and be known for their sexual morality and their good works.

For whatever gentlemen may prefer, women prefer men—gentlemen, if possible, but anyhow men. They aim to please. For most of them the object—yes, even in these emancipated days—is matrimony.

There is no lady whose eye does not gleam, however discreetly, in the presence of an eligible man.

For women are always on their way about the race, especially when men seem so hell-bent to decimate or destroy it. It is not a bad thing to be on one's way about. The function gives them the name.

"Woman—a far nobler name than Lady," said the medieval minnesinger, Walther von der Vogelweide.

"What are you going to be when you grow up?" I once asked a little girl of seven.

"I am going to be a lady with a baby," she said with great dignity.

Now she is grown; she is a lady, and has a baby. But I think the baby always had the priority over the lady.

THEY LET US TALK TO THE RUSSIANS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

Well," he said, "what's his wife's name how many children does he have?"

.: Why did they ask those questions?

ED: Because it was prepared, you see. d looked it up in the Congressional ord.

AY: They were quite an interesting group they were so mixed. Some of them were -fledged communists. You can't get them certain subjects. It really takes a lot of dding and we were tired; we didn't have energy that day to get them to stop talk- about the Korean war or the school em.

.: About how old were these boys and s?

ED: About the same age—twenty, twenty- , twenty-two.

.: Were they from a rather privileged up since they were in college?

AY: No. Not necessarily. There was one ng student we met later—Ganya—who different from the rest. He didn't speak lish, but he had been studying about the ted States, just as we have been studying ut Russia.

ED: His father is an ambassador, and he nts to go into diplomatic work, although 's not the usual school—the Institute of eign Languages. They have a special insti- for training foreign-service officials.

.: Did he discuss the Communist Party n you?

AY: A little bit. I think it usually is a nality.

.: Had any of them met an American ore?

AY: I don't remember asking them that, I think that they may have met one or

.: Did they show curiosity about you ot?

AY: I think that this particular group was ng a service to the state to entertain us, they really didn't want to give up their afternoon. Some of them were very inter- d and very curious, but a large number of n were really, I thought, just doing their It was a very funny feeling, because we were so interested in getting to know them, to talk to them.

Q.: Did you feel you got very close to them or not—any of them?

GAY: In this particular group, no, but with Ganya, yes.

Q.: What sort of questions did he ask about the United States?

TED: He knew a great deal about American cars—brand names and so on. He asked, "What sort of car do you have? A Booick, a Cadeelak or a Fordt? My father has a Booick," he said. "It was given him for his service to the state. American cars are wonderful. I sometimes drive my father's. How many horsepower do the new Booicks have?" He was delighted to hear what we could tell him about the new cars.

GAY: Ganya was the one who asked us about Tarzan too. They've had Tarzan movies—the Johnny Weissmuller ones—in Moscow since they were captured from the Germans at the end of the last war. Ganya had seen each of them at least twice, and considered them very exciting. He asked us, "Do you have jungles and people like that in America?" and was obviously disappointed to find we didn't. We asked why Tarzan was so popular, and Ganya said, "Because he's so different. All the children went around imitating him for a while. The girls would pretend they were Jane and the boys would beat on their chests." He dropped his sophisticated pose then to do a very plausible imitation of an ape. For that matter, his haircut looked a lot like Tarzan's too.

TED: A lot of young people in Russia have a very stereotyped opinion about the United States—a lot of wild ideas—and they are anxious to find out whether they are true. They get part of it from the selected movies—Tobacco Road and the like—they are allowed to see, but mostly, I have a feeling, from their own government's propaganda. For example, they would ask you whether you'd ever seen a lynching.

Q.: If you said no, do you think they believed you?

CONTINUED ON PAGE 149

'At Home' in Every Home!

Where there's beauty and gracious warmth in everyday home life, you'll find handmade Candlewick Crystal, the tableware that lends sparkling brilliance to every dining occasion. Its ball-edge-highlights enhance your tasty menus, welcome family and guests. A pleasure to give, a treasure to own, Candlewick is priced for all-occasion service; open stock everywhere.

IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION ▪ BELLAIRE, OHIO

"Over Fifty Years of Handcrafting in Glass"

Sculptured BLACK METAL DINING FURNITURE WITH BRASS Accents

A thrilling new standard of elegance, quality and easier living! Rich wood grain Micalite tops . . . decorator textures and colors in chairs . . . Subtle brass accents and modern, black metal.

VIRTUE BROS. MFG. CO. Los Angeles 45, California · Send 10¢ for informative booklet on style trends, furniture arrangement, table settings, etc. Ask for booklet "O."

"ETERNAL VIGILANCE IS THE PRICE OF LIBERTY"... DEFEND THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES!

SPARERIBS WITH PINEAPPLE CHUNKS

While spareribs bake, sauté drained Pineapple Chunks, adding brown sugar; stir about 15 minutes to glaze. Add the Chunks toward end of baking Chill and shake Pineapple Juice before serving to taste all the flavor!

Taste the surprise you add with

Nature's most refreshing flavor

tropic-fresh in Canned Pineapple

It's fun to make your favorite dishes extra inviting with canned Pineapple. Everyone enjoys the eating more . . . and you'll like the convenience. With salads as with meats—with desserts and bakings, fruit servings too—you can count on canned Pineapple for easy-to-fix mealtime surprises. Check now and make sure you have all 5 forms of this tropic fruit on your kitchen "PINEAPPLE SHELF." Reach often for the pleasure flavor stored by Nature in canned Pineapple!

TIDBITS of canned Pineapple are favorites for salads, fruit cups, to sprinkle on puddings and cereals

CRUSHED
canned Pineapple, good to eat "as is", also helps you make delicious pies, cookies, puddings, icings, sundaes and sauces

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Francisco

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 147

TED: The most effective rebuttal to these estions was laughter. On another occasion, e of the girls asked whether Chiang Kai-ek really had a plantation in the South with gro slaves, and we laughed and said, "Of urse not." And she said, "Well, I didn't lly believe it anyway."

GAY: One of the boys asked us, "How'd ur government let you out?" We explained t we had passports to travel for educational sons. Then they asked why we'd picked Soviet Union, and we said frankly that wanted to see what thirty years of commu-m had done for Russia.

TED: Ganya thought it must be quite a nge to visit a land where "the worker was g and he who did not work did not eat." is was pretty funny, because he'd already d us that while school was not in session, and his buddies spent most of their time ing on the post-office steps, and I couldn't st asking him how he got away with that. looked sheepish, but then he grinned and d, "Well, we intellectuals, you know. We e to have some time for meditation."

GAY: They wanted to know what it is like New York. We described it as well as we ld, and finally told them they really ought come for a visit. Ganya looked pleased all the others seemed alarmed. They fed nervously on the American cigarettes d given them and stared straight ahead. Ganya said, "Someday I will come—haps when our governments have a better tionship. The United States authorities uld never give me a visa now. But I should e to see your country." He sounded almost tful.

.: Were they curious about your clothes? re they interested in what you wore?

GAY: Yes, they had sort of funny reactions hem. They all would point and whisper so didn't know whether they liked them at . And you'd always get the feeling that didn't—they thought you were over-ssed or not properly dressed.

.: You were probably dressed simply, en't you?

GAY: Oh, yes. We'd deliberately tried not be conspicuous. We had just simple things would pack. But even the worst clothes owned were much better than theirs. A we grew to be good friends with later, asha Smirnov, told us we were "much too avagantly dressed for daytime." I don't k it was really a disapproving reaction—e a sort of inferiority complex. They real-the difference, but didn't want to admit et I think underneath it all, they were very rested. Natasha considered our cotton ses "elegant," and was very curious about nylon underwear. One day after we knew better she confessed that she knew Rus-styles weren't fashionable. "That will e with time," she said, and added quickly, r fabrics are good, though."

.: Do Russian women use cosmetics? Do have lipsticks?

AY: The more smartly dressed women e lipstick as a general rule, but Natasha med cosmetics: "I do not need to paint lips and face to make me look healthy." she did have a perfectly lovely complex-However, she was greatly interested in ching Jeri and me apply lipstick and cara. And the maids—I would come back my hotel room and find that my lip-ks had been screwed up to the top, and the cover put back on, and they were al-s squashed.

.: How about their hair; do they have it rt?

AY: In some places they are getting the e Western cut, but mostly the girls, the ng girls, wear pigtails until they're mar-—well, even if they are married too.

.: Did you see any national dress, the old e of things we think of as Russian?

AY: Yes, you see some of that, not very rful and usually quite shabby. A lot of ple do wear boots all the time.

.: Of course it was rather warm, wasn't it, he summer?

ED: It was ninety degrees in the summer Moscow, but by September it was getting e cold. In Central Asia the temperature t up to a hundred and twenty.

Q.: What were most of the students you met going to do when they got through school?

GAY: Well, they never can tell. They are assigned positions by the government.

Q.: Do they have any choice? Can they decide they want to teach and then take such a course?

GAY: If your grades are good and there are enough openings in the field you want, then you stand a good chance of getting into it. But even if your grades are good enough and there are no openings, you can't get in.

We would say to them, "Now, then, don't you dislike being assigned someplace and having to become an engineer whether you want to or not?" And we said, "In our country, you can choose what you want to do, and then when you finish college you can go around and look for a job." And this horrified them, because they thought it meant that there was no security, that you couldn't find a job. And nowhere could we get across, anywhere we went. We tried everywhere to put this idea across that the freedom of choice was more important than the security of the job, but they never understood that.

Q.: How could you get that across, except by living it?

TED: You can't. The feeling on their part was that there was a lot of waste involved in our system, that a lot of people would be competing. But their government could say, "We need ten engineers," and put them in. It reinforces their feeling of security.

A young person cannot judge what is allegorical and what is literal; and anything that he receives into his mind at that age is likely to become indelible and unalterable; and therefore it is most important that the tales which the young first hear should be models of virtuous thoughts.

—SOCRATES

Q.: You really feel that they are happy to be told—that security is a terribly important thing to the Russians?

TED: Yes, increasingly.

GAY: The collectivist society does offer them a certain sense of belonging, and I think it explains in large part why, when they come over here, they think that life must be chaotic, because they can't see how they fit in.

Q.: And there wasn't anybody who seemed to be chafing at the restrictions, trying to be independent?

GAY: No, not at all, at least no one we spoke to. We were very interested in it because we thought this was one point that we'd really make, we'd prove it to them. Because obviously if a man doesn't like his work and is obliged to keep at it, he wants to do something else. But we just couldn't get this concept across.

Q.: Did you spend most of your time in Moscow?

GAY: Oh, no. We spent two weeks in Moscow, but we traveled in all about six thousand miles through the Soviet Union. Samarkand was fabulous—just like the Arabian Nights. Gleaming mosques, mysterious veiled women, dusty camel caravans, people looking much the same way as they must have in Tamerlane's time five centuries ago. It was hard to realize that it was part of Russia. You just couldn't believe your eyes. But of course there have been changes there, too, as we realized when we heard Russian spoken everywhere. Tartars, Khirgiz, Uzbeks, Mongols, Slavs, all speaking Russian. In the bazaar a stately Uzbek, Makmet Mirza, who was sitting cross-legged on a table, asked us to join him in a glass of tea. We accepted with pleasure, and climbed up onto the next table.

TED: By Oriental standards, the girls should have remained standing. In Samarkand women do not sit in public places. That's one privilege reserved for men. We ate almond cakes and sipped tea with Makmet and listened as he discussed the history of Samarkand, its traditions, and the wonders of irrigation ditches. Makmet was very proud of his city. We didn't bring up political matters, but they must have been in his mind, for as we were about to leave he said pointedly, "What is capitalism?" Gay said, "Do you like to make money?" and he smiled and replied, "Who doesn't?" "Well," she told him, "a capitalist country is a place where everyone likes to make money and has a chance to do so." "That is not such a bad system," Makmet said.

GAY: We had some other political discussions in Samarkand, and from a surprising source. As we were leaving the bazaar two little twelve-year-old girls came up and boldly asked us to take their pictures, please. Zhina and Shala were wearing the colorful Tajik costume, so we were glad to. Then we asked them to lead us to the animal market—we wanted to see the camels. It was about a mile and a half away, and as we walked through the dusty streets the girls chattered freely. There was a clay-walled structure by the road, with an open courtyard where some donkeys and mules and a goat were grazing. Several men, all in quilted coats, were asleep under a shade tree in the corner. It reminded me of the Sunday-school pictures of ancient Jerusalem. Shala tugged at my hand and pointed. "Do you have hotels like that in the United States?" she asked. "This is a serai for our travelers. I'll bet you don't have anything like that in the United States!" I agreed that we didn't, but before I could tell her anything about our hotels, she went on, "Now it's socialism and next it will be communism here. We are making great progress. What is wrong with you people in America?" she asked very seriously, twisting her long black pigtail around her finger. "Why aren't you preparing for your revolution?"

TED: It was really amazing to hear twelve-year-olds spouting Soviet political theory so fluently. I told Shala, "We've already had our revolution—two hundred years ago." Then Zhina spoke up: "That was your bourgeois revolution. We mean your socialist revolution. It should be coming soon." I told them I didn't think there would ever be a socialist revolution in the United States—that we were enjoying democracy and didn't need a revolution to improve living conditions. Shala thought about that for a minute and said, "What a shame. Think of what you will miss. When communism comes it will be wonderful. You really should work toward it." Their sympathy for us seemed quite genuine. To them we were poor Americans who were missing out on the joys of communism.

GAY: We walked along and suddenly Zhina said, "You're pretty—both of you," and she touched my lips to see if the red was natural. My lipstick came off on her thumb, and she rubbed it on her own and Shala's lips, giggling all the time. "How far is it to America?" she asked. "A long, long way," Ted told her, "but you can fly there in four days. Wouldn't you like to come to America, even if we don't have socialism?" He was teasing her. "Oh, I wouldn't like to stay," Zhina said quickly. "I just want to go and buy one of those beautiful lipsticks!"

Q.: Did any of the older girls talk at all on marriage? Do they plan to have a job as well as a home?

GAY: Well, most of the girls we spoke to were students and they, of course, would be getting jobs. But women in Russia generally do go to work before they get married. However, a vast number of them, after they become married, give up their jobs, and there is sort of a funny attitude toward these women who just stay home and take care of their children. The women who work and have families, too, tend to look down on them. You could hear it in the tone of voice when they'd say, "She stays home all day." They'd always set these women off differently from the rest.

Q.: Did they ask questions about our wonderful laborsaving devices; did they know anything about them?

GAY: No.

Q.: They didn't know about electric refrigerators?

GAY: They really are convinced, I think, that their efforts at mechanization have given them one of the most advanced modern societies in the world.

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! 10 NEW RECIPES FOR BAKING WITH BUTTERMILK

Golden Corn Muffins
Boston Brown Bread
Lemon Coffee Cake
Spicy Sugar Cookies
Fluffy Gold Cake
Tropical Banana Cake
Spice Cup Cakes
Devil's Food Loaf Cake
Peanut Loaf Cake
Velvet Fudge Cake

Know what buttermilk does for baking? Just try my 10 newest recipes and see! This tangy dairy food gives cakes, cookies—everything you bake—a moist, tender texture. And a different taste appeal. Just be sure you use Meadow Gold Buttermilk, as I do. It's always fresh and full-flavored! If you have a freezer, why not bake a batch of these buttermilk treats soon? Then store them for easy summer entertaining.

Recipe for Golden Corn Muffins

¾ cup corn meal
1 cup sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
2 Meadow Gold Eggs, beaten
¾ cup cream-style corn
¾ cup Meadow Gold Buttermilk
¼ cup Meadow Gold Butter, melted

Mix together corn meal and sifted dry ingredients. Combine eggs, corn, buttermilk and butter; add to dry ingredients, stirring only until thoroughly moistened. Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full. Bake at 425° for 20-25 minutes. Makes 1 dozen muffins.

Dieting? Drink Meadow Gold Buttermilk often! High in proteins, low in calories.

HOW TO GET YOUR FREE RECIPES

Each recipe printed on a 3 x 5" file card. Write to: Beatrice Foods Co., Dept. LHJ-65, 120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3, Ill.

© 1955, BEATRICE FOODS CO.

IT'S LOVE, AT FIRST WIPE!

Wonderful, new Dish Towel

It's not linen . . . not just cotton . . . it's nothing like anything you ever used before. The happy-go-drying Kendall Dish Towel is made of a wonderful new fabric*specially developed to do a better drying job!

That it does — in no uncertain fashion. These towels dry twice as many dishes in just about half the usual time. They're soft . . . absolutely lintless . . . generous jumbo size. And so easy to use. A light wipe and your china, pottery, glassware and silver is shining, sparkling dry! That's the way they act their whole life through, and that's a good long time.

Choice of red, green, blue or yellow border stripes. Sold in all leading stores, or mail the coupon for sample towel. *Rayon-Cotton

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

By the makers of Curity Diapers

KENDALL Dish Towel — PATENT APPLIED FOR

Introductory Offer

KENDALL MILLS—Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. KJ65

Enclosed is 50c in coin for Kendall Dish Towel. (Only one towel to a family.) Print clearly.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Favorite Store_____

Good only in Continental United States and Hawaii

Q.: Do they see American movies at all?

GAY: Well, just a few that are very carefully selected and present a very biased view. Grapes of Wrath was one, and Tobacco Road, and Tarzan, and I think there is a Humphrey Bogart picture.

TED: And Deanna Durbin too.

GAY: And Charlie Chaplin. But the Humphrey Bogart picture was about a man who came out of the Army after the First World War and couldn't find a job, a creature of our depression; so that they don't get very accurate pictures of our society.

Q.: Do they ever listen to the Western radio?

TED: Yes, we asked whether they'd heard the Voice of America, wondering whether ordinary people could hear it, and this person said, "Yes, I've heard it. It's certainly nice music, but the rest of it's a big bore." Some people have radios in their homes, but the ones that can receive short-wave broadcasts are hard to get. In the first place, they're very expensive; in the second place, they are so rare that if you had one all your neighbors would know it. Anybody who has a radio like that is probably politically responsible and the propaganda being beamed at them probably doesn't have much effect.

Q.: Did you see boys and girls having dates? What do they do? Do they go to the movies or give parties, or what?

GAY: We never went to a party, but we saw them at one of their night clubs. But the people there were older—in their late twenties probably.

Q.: Would they have to have a good deal of money to be there?

GAY: Most of them were having dinner and I don't see how they could have gotten away under fifty rubles (that's five dollars) for dinner.

TED: No. More. That's too conservative an estimate, I think.

GAY: They had an orchestra playing sort of swing music, and they danced beautifully.

Q.: Danced to swing?

GAY: Beautifully.

TED: Polkas, a lot of polkas.

Q.: Did you dance with any Russian boys?

GAY: Well, they would come over and ask us to dance, but the minute they found out we were Americans they would be worried.

Q.: And do you think they felt that way about talking to you?

GAY: No, no. They came right over most of the time and talked to us. Every now and then, you'd find somebody who wouldn't want to appear too interested in you, even before he knew you were an American; just was antiforeigner.

Q.: Did you find any other foreigners—English, French or other people—around?

GAY: Oh, yes, quite a few.

TED: And a lot of Chinese.

GAY: I don't suppose they'd ever seen an American girl. There had been a few boys before, and there's one other American student, an American girl editor, who went over there and was very carefully shuttled around, so I don't think they've ever seen young American women wandering around. They were very curious about us.

Q.: And they immediately started talking the party line—isn't Russia wonderful, and that sort of thing?

GAY: I think they had quite varied reactions to us, but they do think in these stereotypes. The minute they found out we were students, they would want to know what we were studying, and then they'd say, "Well, you know about our education system, don't you?" And then they would explain to us about their education system. They are very proud of it, because they give so many scholarships so almost everybody can go to college and university.

Q.: Is there absolute equality among men and women?

GAY: I wouldn't say so. There are differences; not in the large Russian areas, but certainly in the Oriental and in the Georgian areas. And I think it's not so much government policy as the people's own idea of women not being equal; women do not go into certain professions.

Q.: But they do clean the streets, don't they? Did you see that?

TED: Yes. This is probably the only sort of equality where they can work, but the higher type of equality, I don't think, has come yet.

Q.: But you don't have the feeling they are protected particularly, do you?

GAY: Oh, yes, in Georgia, and in Asia also, the women are quite sheltered.

Q.: Did you go to some parks?

TED: We almost engendered a riot because we went to a park one night; went to see an exhibition of folk dancing of some kind. It was a lovely dance. And then we heard American jazz being played, and wandered on until we came to a big dance floor, where a whole group of Russians were dancing, not only students but older people too. We thought, "Oh, what fun, we'll walk on too." But when we got on the floor, people looked at us and the dancing just stopped. The orchestra went on but the people stopped dancing and they stared fixedly. Just stopped and they surrounded us and talked about us.

GAY: They didn't think that we would understand them.

Q.: What did they say?

GAY: They said, "Look, what a skinny girl, and so tall."

Q.: Aren't Russians tall?

TED: No, they're rather small. Most of the Russian men were about five feet six or seven inches and we expected great big people. Oh, another time when we were down in Georgia, we had a driver, Shavshi Shavshashvili—Georgian is a very difficult language, and we could talk with him only because he also spoke Russian—who was very pleasant. He listened when we told him about America, but never asked questions or volunteered information. One day I asked him in a joking way what he thought of American women. Of course the only ones he'd ever seen were Gay and Jeri. He obviously didn't want to comment, but finally said, "Georgian women are shorter and fuller than American women." "Oh, come on, Shavshi," I persisted; "what do you really think? Don't you think American women are too skinny? You don't find them at all attractive, do you?" Shavshi let his driving take care of itself, and turned around to grin at me. "On the contrary!"

GAY: Being able to speak to them was a wonderful thing, because they immediately felt, "Well, they know Russian. They must like us." And they were flattered by it. We probably had a warmer reception than anyone would have had with an interpreter. They were thrilled that we could talk, and then they'd ask us questions, because they had been told that no Americans would ever be taught Russian, and this was, I think, a very good thing to prove to them that we learn Russian in the United States.

Q.: When you got off the floor did they go back and dance some more?

TED: Oh, no. They left with us. The whole place practically en masse; one group followed Gay, and one group followed me.

Q.: Did they want to talk with you?

GAY: Oh, yes, they wanted to know, "Do you like the Soviet Union better than the United States? Isn't Tashkent better than New York?" And I said, "Well, I've only been here a short time; I can't say," but they wanted me to say, "Of course." And they started walking us back to our hotel. Our fourth traveler, Frank, is just a walking book. He's a very intelligent boy and has a photographic memory and knows a great many facts and figures. So when they asked us, "Tell us about the lynchings in the South," I'd say, "Frank, when was the last lynching?" "The last lynching was in Georgia in 1949," he'd reply. And I'd reel this off in Russian to them.

"Well, how many people are unemployed in the United States?" they'd come back. The whole thing was on sort of a belligerent level.

TED: "What about the workers starving to death on Times Square?"

GAY: And they asked us about migrant labor.

Q.: Did you feel they believed or did not believe your answers?

GAY: It was the first time they'd ever gotten an answer. I don't know whether they believed them or not, but they seemed to make some impression.

More of the meal's on Baby than in. Mom has the answer—to see her grin. Du Pont Sponges mop spills with ease, Rinse out fresh with just a squeeze!

So handy for spills . . .

LONG-WEARING

DU PONT SPONGES

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

REAL FRUIT JUICE REFRESHMENT . . .

REAL GOLD

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Just mix with water . . . Ready-to-Drink, Instantly. Each economical 6 oz. can makes a big family quart of . . . Wonderful refreshment plus . . . Energy Rebound.

KEEP BURGLARS OUT KEEP CHILDREN IN—WITH WINDOW GUARDS

Wrought Iron Grilles, Attractive Scroll Design

Adjustable Design Makes Installation Easy

Instruction folder with each shipment

Ideal for home or apartment! ⅜" wrought-steel bars. Securely locked in place with special key—no holes to drill. Fits under top sash—can be removed from inside for cleaning, painting, moving. When ordering, be sure to give WIDTH and HEIGHT of bottom sash. Price slightly higher West Coast and Canada.

$6.50 EACH Prepaid (No C.O.D.)

WINDOW GUARD CO.
Box W. E. 3741
Birmingham, Ala.

Q.: Did they say anything about Korea?

GAY: Oh, yes. Everybody talked about Korea. They couldn't understand how we ould like a country like ours that is "always ying to make war"; and when we insisted hat we want peace, they would look at us as they pitied our stupidity. Most of the udents firmly believe that South Korea avaded North Korea and the North Koreans ad to act in self-defense. And of course they elieve the UN is a puppet of the Wall Street mperialists, and always does as the United tates says. They really believe all that, and m afraid we didn't succeed in changing their onvictions.

TED: The Korean war was the most pro-ocative subject. The strongest feelings against merica were always expressed on that sub-ct.

Q.: They certainly have a very wrong pic-re of this country, haven't they? I suppose ey know it's big and that's about it; almost complete misconception, would you say?

GAY: That is testimony to the effectiveness f the Iron Curtain, that they have been able keep out an accurate idea.

Q.: Did you talk with anyone who had een in the United States?

GAY: No. A lot of people had been in ermany during the war.

TED: One fellow I talked to at length was piano player in a restaurant. We walked rough the dining room and he was playing lue Skies and singing it in English.

Q.: Is it all right for them to play Amer-an songs?

TED: Apparently. I said to him, "Do you peak English?" And it turned out he had udied in Oxford. He had had a very check-ed career and we thought e was one of the people escribed as a "stetsii"; in ther words, he was sort of olitically unreliable.

Q.: They didn't put him Siberia; they let him go round?

TED: Oh, yes, but there is certain amount of dis-race.

GAY: It seemed strange, a man with his ackground to be just playing ——

TED: He was about thirty-five and he'd een in the Polish army, had been captured the Germans, recaptured by the Russians, en shuttled back into the Soviet Union gain. This type of person, they think, is rticularly dangerous because they have been xposed so widely to the West.

GAY: They're outstandingly different from e rest of the people. We'd see them every ow and then. You could recognize them om the way they spoke foreign languages. heir carriage would be better and you could ck them out; for instance, in this ballroom, is outdoor dancing place in Tashkent, we et a girl who spoke beautiful English, and as obviously different from the rest, and we ould tell that, had it been her choice, she ould never choose to live in Central Asia. he was a sophisticated person, who would ve in big cities.

TED: She was brought up abroad, and had een educated in a Catholic school.

GAY: You could tell in this little bit of a own, Tashkent, she was very unhappy.

Q.: Did she have any hunger to know about he United States, or not?

GAY: Well, she was mostly interested in the ngth of women's dresses.

Q.: Who was the most interesting girl you et?

TED: I think Natasha—the girl Gay men-oned earlier. She was a guide in Moscow ho accompanied us on the Kremlin tour. Ve were the first Russian-speaking Americans he'd ever met, and she liked us because we ould talk to her in her language. She spoke eautiful English and French, but we always oke Russian with her.

Q.: What would she have to do to get that b?

TED: She would probably be appointed.

Q.: Did she wear a uniform?

GAY: No. Just ordinary clothes. Her best ress was a black silk her mother had made or her when she graduated from the univer-ty. Then she had another silk—a print— and a four-year-old wool suit. It had heavily padded shoulders and a short tight skirt. She had a pleated skirt and a blouse and sweater, and a winter coat, and that was her whole wardrobe. Oh, and three pairs of stockings made of a new Russian substance called kapron. But at that, she had much better clothes than other people.

TED: She was one of the really attractive women we saw in Russia—very slender, graceful, and after she got over her original shyness, she seemed full of the merriment and sensitivity that characterize the Russians in Tolstoi's novels.

Q.: Did you learn anything about her family?

GAY: They were workers. Her father was a factory worker outside town. She had lived there, too, until she came in to go to the university. She was living with an aunt in a two-room apartment when we were there, but was planning to move out because her aunt was not a "progressive thinker."

Q.: Natasha was a very convinced communist, I suppose?

GAY: Yes. She spends most of her evenings working in the trade-union and comsomol. That's the Young Communist League. And yet, in spite of her deep communist convictions, I think she believed what I told her about the United States and realized there was a discrepancy.

TED: Natasha is engaged now to Yura. He is also in the comsomol. Yura gave her a special engagement present, a three-ounce bottle of perfume named, "To the Glory of the Red Army." He'd paid fifty rubles for it at the GOOM store.

Q.: Will they be married in church?

TED: Oh, no. They both consider that religion is a matter for old people. They'll just go to the Department for Registering Acts of Civil Status and get an official marriage document.

It's a great kindness to trust people with a secret. They feel as important while telling it.

—ROBERT QUILLEN

GAY: We were fond of Natasha. She was always asking us about the United States, and was puzzled that we could think capitalism was a better way of life than communism. Even though she was intelligent, she still believed the propaganda that workers were starving in Times Square. When we told her about our higher standard of living, she said it was only because we exploit our colonial peoples and quoted Lenin: "Imperialism is the highest form of capitalism." She couldn't understand about Senator McCarthy either. "How is it that a man so high in the Republican Party is allowed to go on doing and saying such silly things? Why does the party permit it? Why isn't he removed?" We explained that freedom in the United States means that everyone has a right to express his own ideas and that you just don't "remove" a man because you disagree with him.

TED: And then she said, "Your government has no direction; it doesn't know where it's going. We know where we are going and we shall get there, because everyone is working for the same thing. Your politicians all pull in different directions. You have no unity. That is what makes it so dangerous to live in the same world with you."

Q.: Did you ever have any feeling at all that anybody was watching you—the police?

GAY: Well, they may have been, but they never prevented us from doing anything we wanted to.

Q.: Did these girls, or the boys, ever talk to you about home life in the United States, and morals and so on? Do they think we are very bad people?

GAY: Yes, they do have the general picture that we are sex-conscious.

Q.: Do you remember any of the things they said?

GAY: They'd heard about our advertising, but no one had ever seen it. They thought there were naked women in all our ads.

Q.: What are Russian advertisements like?

TED: Fairly simple and direct. They tell you to buy this and buy that—no brand names. No competition. There's only one product available, if you can afford to buy it.

GAY: Actually, there were a lot of different factories in different parts of the country pro-

Always ask for REPUBLIC'S

The original
ALL POLYETHYLENE
FOOD CONTAINER

FREEZETTES® are made of all flexible material, and will not break, chip or crack. They are the most economical containers on the market. May be used over again and again—and not just once. Covers provide moisture vapor tight seal. No wrapping or taping necessary.

DEMAND
"FREEZETTES"
for quality and long life
Look for the "FREEZETTE" package
ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES

SIX SIZES

If you cannot buy them at your dealer - write
REPUBLIC MOLDING CORP., 6465 N. Avondale Ave., Chicago 31, Ill.
Guaranteed
UNBREAKABLE
© 1955

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM
glorifies cheese favorites!

Eggs Underwood—hearty family fare! Add delicious Underwood Deviled Ham to stuffed eggs and cheese sauce. Pour sauce on eggs, bake. Underwood's whole-ham goodness glorifies everyday foods!

Wm. Underwood Co., Watertown 72, Mass.

ducing things and there seemed to be a certain amount of competition for quality; but that's just to make all the factories produce the best possible product. It doesn't affect the consumers particularly.

Q.: In the big department store in Moscow, were there exhortations to suggest you buy this or buy that?

GAY: No, there was no need, because the demand was much greater than the supply.

Q.: Do they have lots of everything to sell, or not?

GAY: I think it depends on when the shipments come into the city. The whole time we were there, there was a good supply of merchandise to sell and there were lots of people buying. But they can't buy in some months, because it just isn't available.

Q.: Were you in any farming areas at all? Did you meet any farm people?

GAY: Yes. The people who live and work in Moscow are much more sophisticated, from the Russian point of view, than the farm people, except the administrative personnel in the farm areas.

TED: The officials wear white linen suits.

GAY: We talked with a man from Central Asia named Pavel, who was a livestock farmer. We were the only Americans he'd ever seen, but he wasn't much interested in us. All he wanted to talk about was the prize pig he'd seen at the All-Union Agricultural Fair. He was sure it was the finest pig in the world. The only question he asked us was whether we had pigs in America.

TED: He didn't believe us, either, when we said we did. We told him there were parts of America where there were more pigs and cattle than people, and tried to explain about our tractors, combines, threshers and so on. He didn't believe any part of it. He knew that all Americans are fat businessmen with cigars. "Look," he said, and unfolded his issue of Pravda, "I know what it is like for the working people over there. This newspaper is called the Truth [Pravda] and that means it doesn't tell lies."

GAY: They have a stereotyped picture of an American as a middle-aged businessman—it's very hard for them to believe that young students live in America, or farmers.

Q.: They thought there was nobody young there?

GAY: Everybody is a businessman. It's really fantastic.

TED: England and France never come into comparison with Russia; it's always the United States.

Q.: Did they say anything about China?

GAY: I was very interested to find out how they felt about the Chinese. They'd say, "Well, we've got a good relationship with them now because they are our allies," but I had the feeling that they didn't particularly trust them, don't particularly care for them.

Q.: You didn't see any Chinese ——

TED: Oh, yes, everywhere.

GAY: But an interesting commentary—when we were down in Georgia, people wanted to know where we were from. They asked me if I was Chinese.

TED: They don't realize the Chinese are different from Americans. They are just foreigners.

Q.: Apparently there have been a lot of changes in home life and marriage and divorce in Russia since the early days of communism. Did you talk about that to anybody?

GAY: Since 1935—and that's been twenty years—marriage and the family . . . a sort of bourgeois concept of a good life and happy children has been established. It's been there twenty years, so they don't think in terms of that free-love era which they went through in the twenties.

TED: They vociferously denied it ever existed.

Q.: Then they did talk about it, then—at least to the extent of denying it?

TED: Only because I brought it up.

Q.: Is there much divorce?

TED: No, because divorce is very expensive. They think divorce is very common in this country. They think that we're immoral.

Q.: Did these people whom you talked with know anything about current American authors or books?

GAY: Well, they read Steinbeck and Dos Passos.

Q.: Hemingway?

GAY: Hemingway.

TED: And Mitchell Wilson.

Q.: Who is Mitchell Wilson?

GAY: It was only yesterday that I found out. He wrote a book called Live With Lightning. And they think that he's a great American author.

Q.: But they do not read any books in which America is shown in a favorable light?

GAY: No.

Q.: Do they have much fiction?

TED: Yes, a considerable amount. A lot of it is Horatio Alger, sort of—not quite rags-to-riches, but the worker fulfilling his plan. The young worker has decided he is going to make a goal, and he has a girl friend, perhaps, who is going to help him make the goal. And there is a deviationist in the factory who doesn't want him to make the goal. But in the end he makes the goal and wins the girl.

Q.: Did they talk to you about voting in this country?

GAY: We had several discussions about political parties. We were trying to show them that with one party you can't have the element of choice, you can't have exchange of ideas. But they would come back to the fact that it is possible to write in the name of a candidate. They sincerely feel, I believe, that they do have a choice.

Q.: Did you ever run into anybody who was unhappy with the system, or would say so?

GAY: Well, they all, of course, have complaints about it, but no one who is horribly dissatisfied with it.

Q.: Is there anything in Russia resembling the juvenile delinquent in America?

TED: Oh, yes. They have a great problem; the Young Communists League, the comsomols, are continually being urged—in fact, not so long ago, the Komsomolskaya Pravda came out with an editorial saying that vandals

For a Very Happy Father's Day . . . Swing King®

. . . covered in Elastic Boltaflex

A KENMAR SWING-KING for Father's Day means years of head-to-toe relaxation for Dad—a dream of comfort come true! By Kenmar Mfg. Co., East Palestine, Ohio.

MOTHER'S HAPPY, TOO . . .
because she knows the ELASTIC BOLTAFLEX upholstery will stay new and rich-looking for years—resists scuffing—won't crack, peel or lose its shape. And she never has to worry about spots or stains—they vanish with the swish of a damp cloth.

There's a wonderful selection of beautiful textured patterns and leather-like effects to choose from, too—all in the latest decorator colors. When you buy—be sure it's Boltaflex!

BOLTA PRODUCTS ▪ Lawrence, Mass.
Division of The General Tire & Rubber Co.

hooligans have got to be controlled; y're just too bad.

Q.: What have they been doing?

TED: They talk in class in the university.

GAY: They do much worse than that. They l purses and they attack women and girls.

TED: Mugging at night along the streets.

Q.: This has been going on for a long time, n't it?

GAY: Well, it's been in the official press for r a year now.

Q.: Is there any official explanation of why delinquency started up?

GAY: I have never seen one. The main of- lers seem to be comsomols, these leaders uture society, and a lot of them come from wealthier families. It's just sort of a way assing the time, or they feel they are in a ition where they can get away with it.

Q.: Do you think there's a shortage of eational facilities and recreation in Russia?

TED: Actually, I wouldn't say that is true. ink if you're willing to submit yourself to round of trade-union, comsomol, club of things, you would find something to all the time.

GAY: I think personal relationships prob- y play a more potent role than we give them lit for now, because the Russians visit each er for dinner, or the students get together sing songs, or have parties. These are gs you don't often hear about and to which never invite you. They are very private personal, but I know they have them. For cial entertainment, there are the theater, ballet, sports, and dining out.

Q.: Do you think there is a pleasant, in- nal form of social life, just as there would n an American school?

GAY: I think so. It's probably just a little re edgy than we would be here. You have to careful whom you're seen with, but I don't k they think about it. They become sort utomatically cautious.

Q.: Did you ever hear anything among these ngsters you talked with about their rela- s with their parents? Do they have the e ideas?

GAY: I think there's a split between the erations, definitely. The twenty-year-olds e had quite different training than their ents have. The parents, I think, are more less—well, they're essentially apathetic ut the future.

Q.: Which ones are the more convinced mmunists?

GAY: I think the youths.

Q.: Who was the most interesting boy you ?

TED: I think Ganya, the boy in Moscow talked about motorcars and movies.

Q.: Was he one of these boys who was sus- t, or not?

TED: No, he wouldn't have been suspect ause of his father's high political position.

GAY: Yet he fit the pattern of what the ernment would have been annoyed ut—just loitering around in the afternoon having money to spend, and riding und in his father's car.

Q.: "Dad, can I have the car tonight?" would occur in that family, too, I suppose?

GAY: I don't know because gasoline is so expensive.

Q.: Do they use bicycles a great deal?

TED: Not as much as in Western Europe. Foot; and buses and trolleys were crowded to the doors all the time. Moscow is a madhouse at four o'clock, I think all nine million of the inhabitants start home then.

Q.: How's the taxi service?

TED: It's pretty good.

Q.: Do the taxi drivers talk to you?

GAY: They're a wonderful breed, I think. They are sort of very nonchalant about everything.

TED: Very nice wholesome philosophers.

GAY: And they're very economically minded. They seem to think that they can save gasoline by turning off the motor, so what they'll do is go very fast, even on a straight stretch of land, and then turn off the motor and coast downhill and crawl, and they think they're saving money. They do this all the time. They have no control of the car and they're terribly reckless drivers.

TED: We had a wild ride in Georgia going down to an estate which is now a state wine factory. The driver just drove like a madman all the way. He'd go up the side of a hill beside a truck, and they'd both be laboring up the hill. Another car would come over the peak and do you think anyone slowed up? No.

Q.: Is there lots of traffic?

TED: Not on the open road. In Moscow there's a lot of traffic.

Q.: Are these people, in general—do they seem worried about the future of the world, peace, and so forth?

GAY: They are very much afraid of us. They are afraid we're going to make war on them.

Q.: Is there any talk about the atom bomb?

GAY: They don't know much about it, but they think in terms of war.

TED: This incident occurred under an awning in Moscow. It was during a cloudburst, and after the usual inquiries such as, "Where do you come from?" and so on, one person said, "So you're an American. Why are you trying to drop atom bombs on me?" There was a very personal me-to-him relationship.

GAY: The Russian authorities have just recently explained to their population what the atom bomb is like. I mean, they know there is such a thing—as an atom bomb. They have no conception what a destructive thing it is.

Q.: Don't they know about Hiroshima?

GAY: No, they don't. In Russia, they won that war.

Q.: Well, do they think that this country is endangering them?

GAY: Yes, definitely.

Q.: Is there any way that America, officially or unofficially, can get a different fact across to them, get students over here from Russia?

GAY: I think the only way is through personal contact. I don't think that they would trust any official propaganda line. They're so battered by propaganda.

Q.: Did you feel that though they believe all these derogatory things about the United States, they did like you as individuals?

GAY: Oh, yes. They definitely draw a line between our government and our people. They like the American people.

Q.: They have no idea that they're a threat to us, I suppose?

GAY: No, they say they're interested in peace. Their peace propaganda has been very successful on themselves.

TED: And not only that; whenever the argument gets to be convincing they say, "Oh, well, you're a bourgeois; you're arguing it from another era. And if you'd only become enlightened, you could see you are wrong."

GAY: We gave up hoping for success. We finally decided that if we just could present to them something they hadn't heard before, the other side of the picture, why, then, we might have accomplished something. And they were receptive. We don't expect that we convinced any of them, but if we were able to prove to them that they don't have to hate us, and that we have explanations for our actions, that, I think, can be quite valuable.

Q.: Is there any chance that Russia will let Russian students come to the United States?

TED: Well, several applied last summer, and our Government refused them. But now some have received permission.

Q.: After all your traveling and experience in Russia, where did you discover that some things you had been thinking were incorrect?

GAY: One major fact was that we had fully expected to see some signs of resistance to the government. We didn't expect to find people satisfied, as I think they are—I mean, not completely satisfied, but enough satisfied so that they're not going to do anything about the situation.

TED: And I thought things were a little better than I had expected them to be. I was surprised to see so many cars in the streets and goods in the stores, people buying, eating ice cream, and things like that.

Q.: Did you see anything that could be called a slum section in Moscow?

GAY: Housing is poor everywhere, actually. There is tremendous overcrowding, but you see, that's so general they don't think of it as slums. But they do live very shabbily, compared with the United States.

Q.: Are people assigned a place to live now?

TED: It's a priority-rate system, depending on your job.

GAY: And depending on where you were in 1926. That's when they changed the housing code. If you were living in a certain number of cubic feet in 1926, you are entitled to a comparable number of cubic feet now.

Q.: Suppose you hadn't been born in '26?

GAY: Well, by rights of birth, you could move into the same space in which your father was. And by marriage—and divorce does not take away your living space. Frequently you come across cases where a man who has been divorced remarries and lives in the same house with his former wife. People frequently marry for living space too. If you don't have very satisfactory living quarters, it's perfectly adequate justification for getting married. Some of them do that.

Q.: Did this girl who was getting married have any idea where she and her husband would live?

GAY: Yes, she was going to move into his apartment. He lived alone in a one-room flat.

Q.: That was pretty unusual, wasn't it? He must have been fairly well up in the government.

GAY: Yes. He had an official position, so that would explain it, I think.

Q.: Did he have his own private bath?

GAY: Oh, no, no. No one has his own private bath.

TED: You're lucky to have a bath in the house.

Q.: How about the food you had?

TED: The food in the hotels was quite good, but we ran across some unusual dishes in Central Asia. The best I remember was rice dipped in lamb fat.

Q.: Mostly lamb?

TED: A lot of lamb.

Q.: Are the police conspicuous?

TED: Yes!

THE WIDOW

By ALMA ROBERTS GIORDAN

There you lie dead. You were old, you were sick, you were tired,
And the children grown: they are strong to lean upon:
And glad I should be that the hold of the pain has expired.

Yet I remember a mortal and beautiful swan
Circling above me and cutting the air with his wide Clean wings spread to catch the light of the breaking dawn.

How he landed a distance apart to drift to my side.
His feathers immaculate smooth, his regal neck
bent;
How I rested against his breast that night as his bride.

For the proud-gliding free one, tender and warm and unspent,
Not for you, broken body—for him it is I lament.

"My feet are murdering me!"

Aching feet can put lines in your face!

● When tired, aching feet make every step a stab of pain, your face looks tense and drawn. Even worse, those tiny pain-lines may soon deepen into old-looking wrinkles . . . there to stay!

At the first sign of foot-fatigue, it will pay you to rub your feet with Absorbine Jr.

Soothing relief—fast!

Quickly, gently, Absorbine Jr. soothes and cools those aching spots—helps counter irritation causing the pain—acts at once with wonderful muscle-relaxing relief!

When your feet feel better, you feel better . . . and your face shows it! Get a cooling, soothing bottle of Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold.

W. F. Young Inc., Springfield, Mass.

"Gives fast relief to sore, tired feet!"

Absorbine Jr.

Q.: Did anybody speculate about who actually runs Russia since Stalin's death?

TED: Oh, the group, the Communist Party runs it.

Q.: And the contest for power at the top doesn't interest them?

TED: I don't think they're conscious of it.

Q.: But it's this great feeling of security they have, that they're being taken care of, which means so much to them, and the belief that someday the world will be their way?

GAY: Oh, yes, they are very convinced that they are right, and they seem to feel that they have proof that their system is good. They have become an industrialized country; and that they have helped out these other countries.

"Look at China. All those people have come our way, too," they'll say.

Q.: As far as outside events or trouble at the top, nothing is going to happen to the way Russia is being run now, is there?

GAY: Well, I think there's a process of evolution, too, that will probably take it farther away from the communist ideals a closer to the bourgeois capitalist. They're g ting more things, and they're building up private-property instinct by giving them the consumer goods. And they have the money buy these things; and it's natural to have pri in your own possessions. I think that if thin go on the way they are going, and they g more money and more consumer goods, th should occur. Slowly but surely the pow the prestige positions, are being reinforced giving workers more—if you are a goo worker and you get more money, you get car, for instance. These are instincts that a definitely turning them away from the socia ist point of view.

Q.: Was there any official quizzing of yo when you were about to leave about what yo were going to do, or anything like that?

GAY: No, they just let us come and go.

Q.: Was it hard getting through custom

TED: We had no trouble at all, a big my tery to us. We just rode out of the country o a train.

VICTORIAN BEDROOM

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 138

One of the happy revivals of Victorian is the soft flowery carpeting of the period. It is not expensive and comes in a variety of colorings to suit any variation of the nineteenth-century theme.

Most reclaimed Victorian furniture is picked up in secondhand stores or at auction; or maybe some is hiding away right in your own attic. The period was long, extending over a span of seventy years, so that vast quantities of it were produced in America.

Victorian beds, belonging to suites, were giant affairs, and few of them survived the turn of the century. Canopied beds, however, rightly belong in the period and better suit our taste today. You may buy excellent copies of Victorian pieces in either walnut or mahogany and have them upholstered to suit your scheme.

In the room photographed, the chest was the lower part of a fine Victorian dresser which Anne Patton found in a secondhand shop. Both the lady's chair and the little rocker are original pieces, but the tables, bed, bench an stool are beautifully finished, authentic r productions.

Window treatments, more than anythin else, give a Victorian room its drama. Th was the period of lace or Swiss glass curtain overdraperies, holdbacks and swags. Copi of Victorian lace curtains, made on the ol Nottingham looms, are very reasonably price and all big stores have them. Embroidere net or Swiss gives much the same effect, bu is more expensive. Sateen or cotton popli makes charming overdraperies and swag which you may be surprised to know ar simple to make.

The draped swag is only a half circle pleate at each side and tacked onto a narrow woode strip. The cascades are triangles—just half a square—laid flat and pressed into pleats t suit your taste. If you want more detaile help, pick up one of the little booklets o making draperies, available at counters whe ever drapery fabrics are sold. EN

Scalloped edges and fine quilting give the true Victorian touch.

FOWLER

Never before such complete coverage.
Pacific's superbig bath sheet is a luxurious 36″ by 78″

PACIFIC'S NEW ARABESQUE

with accenting solid-color towel in a Decorator ensemble

Inspired way to lift your bathroom out of the usual . . . the bold flair of Pacific's new Arabesque towels, printed on both sides to be completely reversible. In striking shades of pink, grey, aqua or pineapple-yellow . . . each print is enhanced by a range of solid-color towels . . . to make your decorating easy. And just wait till you feel the lusher, richer caress of Pacific's Supersorb® terry. From bath sheet to face cloths, you'll want a complete ensemble.

PACIFIC
SUPERSORB
TOWELS

Superbig bath sheet about $5. Bath towels about $2. Hand towels and face cloths, too. Available at all fine stores nodded and said nothing. I chewed my r awhile and went back to my books, and n I looked up he was still standing there, ing.

THE FALLEN ANGEL

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 49

Look, my friend," I said, "I am earnestly y there is no opening for you, but ——"

Why not watch me a little?"

am too busy."

t'll take five minutes. Your big top is standing. Just watch me up there for a minutes, that's all."

My friend, what would be the point? I dy have ——"

You can take your books with you. Mr. lins, you will not be sorry."

ooked at him again, and he stared at me ly, and he had a deep, almost blazing way aring that made me believe I would really be sorry if I watched him perform. Be-, I could take the books with me.

All right," I said, "but we're only wasting other's time."

've got all the time in the world," he an-ed.

e went outside, and sure enough the big vas still standing so I bawled out Warren eing so slow to get a show on the road, then this Angeli and I went inside, and oked up at the trapeze, and I very sar-cally asked, "Is that high enough for " shrugged and looked up, and said, "I've higher, my friend. Much higher." He ed his eyes to the ground then, and I hat the net had already been taken down. his exhibition will have to be postponed," rmed him. "There is no net."

don't need a net," he answered.

o?"

o."

o you plan on breaking your neck under f my tops? I am warning you that my ance doesn't cover ——" won't break my neck," Angeli said. "Sit ."

hrugged and sat down, thinking it was eck and not mine, and hoping Doctor y was not drunk as usual. I opened the s on my lap and got to work, and he d across the top and started climbing up trapeze. I got involved with the figures, nally he yelled:

K., you ready?"

n ready," I said.

KED up to where he was sitting on one e, holding the bar of the other trapeze big hands.

ere's the idea," he yelled down. He had because he was a good hundred feet in r. "I'll set the second trapeze swinging, hen I'll put the one I'm on in motion. I'll jump from one trapeze to the other Understand?"

understand," I yelled back. I'm a quiet y nature, and I have never liked yelling. es, he was about to do a very elementary e routine, so there was nothing to get d and yelling about.

pushed out the second trapeze, and it away out in a nice clean arc, and then e back and he shoved it out again and t out farther and higher this time. He own trapeze in motion then, and both es went swinging around up there, back rth, back and forth, higher and higher. ood up on the bar and watched the trapeze, timing himself, and then he ed down, "I'll do a somersault to make resting."

ahead," I said.

re I go," he said.

trapeze came back and started forward, e second trapeze reached the end of its d started back, and I saw him bend a rom the knees, calculating his timing, en he leaped off, and his head ducked and he went into the somersault.

did a nice clean roll, and then he ed out his hands for the bar of the trapeze, but the bar was nowhere near His fingers closed on air, and my eyes d wide open as he sailed past the trapeze en started a nose dive for the ground.

I jumped to my feet with my mouth open, remembering there was no net under him, and thinking of the mess he was going to make all over my tent. I watched him fall like a bullet, and then I closed my eyes as he came closer to the ground. I clenched my fists and waited for the crash, and then the crash came, and there was a deathly silence in the tent afterward. I sighed and opened my eyes.

Sam Angeli got up and casually brushed the sawdust from his clothes. "How'd you like it?" he asked.

I STOOD stiff as a board and stared at him. "You're—you're ——" I stammered.

"How'd you like it?" he repeated.

"Doctor Lipsky!" I shouted. "Doc, come quick!"

"No need for a doctor," Angeli said, smiling and walking over to me. "How'd you like the fall?"

"The—the fall? I—I —— You mean ——"

"The fall," Angeli said, smiling. "Looked like the real McCoy, didn't it?"

"Wh-what do you mean?"

"Well, you don't think I missed that bar accidentally, do you? I mean, after all, that's a kid stunt."

"You—you fell on purpose?" I gulped and stared at him, but all his bones seemed to be in the right places, and there was no blood on him anywhere.

"Sure," he said. "My specialty. I figured it all out, Mr. Mullins. Do you know why people like to watch trapeze acts? Not because there's any skill or art attached. Oh, no." He smiled, and his eyes glowed, and I watched him, still amazed. "They like to watch because they are inherently evil, Mr. Mullins. They watch because they think that fool up there is going to fall and break his neck, and they want to be around when he does it." Angeli nodded. "So I figured it all out."

"You—you did?"

"I did. First I fell out of bed, and then I fell from a first-story window, and then I fell off the roof. And then I took my biggest fall, the fall that —— But I'm boring you. The point is, I can fall from anyplace now. In fact, that trapeze of yours is rather low."

"Rather low," I repeated softly.

"Yes."

"What's up?" Doctor Lipsky shouted, rushing into the tent, his shirt flaps trailing. "What happened, Moon?"

"Nothing," I said, wagging my head. "Nothing, doc."

"Then why'd you ——"

"I wanted to tell you," I said slowly, "that I've just hired a new trapeze artist."

"Huh?" Doctor Lipsky said, drunk as usual.

We rolled on to the next town, and I introduced Angeli to my other trapeze artists: Sue Ellen, Farnings and Edward the Great. I was a younger man at that time, and I have always had an eye for good legs in tights, and Sue Ellen had them all right. She also had blond hair and big blue eyes, and when I introduced her to Angeli those eyes went all over him, and I began to wonder if I hadn't made a mistake hiring him. I told them I wanted Angeli to have exclusive use of the tent that afternoon, and all afternoon I sat and watched him while he jumped for trapezes and missed and went flying down on his nose or his head or his back or whatever he landed on. I kept watching him when he landed, but the sawdust always came up around him like a big cloud, and I never could see what he did inside that cloud. All I know is that he got up every time, and he brushed himself off, and each time I went over to him and expected to find a hundred broken bones and maybe a fractured skull, but each time he just stood up with that handsome smile on his face as if he hadn't just fallen from away up there.

"This is amazing," I told him. "This is almost supernatural!"

the most luxurious sheet
you ever dreamed on . . .

Mercerizing makes Miracale exquisitely silky-smooth!

NEW MIRACALE

210-thread mercerized percale only in famous Pacific Contours

Four box corners hold the Pacific Contour Bottom sheet wrinkle-free. No re-tucking in the morning—sides can't pull out!

Kick-fold gives six inches of extra toe room! . . . two box corners anchor the Pacific Contour Top* sheet to the mattress foot

Heavenly—the first, the only mercerized sheet! Pacific weaves the long strong fibres used for highest quality combed percale . . . 210 threads to the square inch. Then—a special mercerizing bath silkens, lustres, defuzzes, strengthens these fibres—for the finest sheet you can sleep on!

Miracale† Twin Bottom sheet, about $3.95. Twin Top sheet, about $4.29. Also in Double Size. Pillowcases. Sanforized®. White, Rose Pink, Pineapple Gold, Mint Green, Blue. Pacific Contours also in standard qualities. Widest range of sizes.

Pacific Mills, 1407 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.
"Contour" is the registered trademark for Pacific's mattress-fitting sheets *Pat. Pend. †TM Pacific Mills

EVERYBODY'S CHANGING TO PACIFIC Contour® SHEETS

"I know," he said.

"We'll start you tonight," I said, getting excited about it now. "Can you start tonight?"

"I can start any time," he said.

"Sam Angeli," I announced, spreading my hand across the air as if I were spelling it out in lights. "Sam Angeli, the ——" I paused and let my hand drop. "That's terrible," I said.

"I know," Angeli answered. "But I figured that out too."

"What?"

"A name for me. I figured this all out."

"And what's the name?" I asked.

"The Fallen Angel," he said.

There wasn't much of a crowd that night. Sue Ellen, Farnings and Edward the Great went up there and did their routines, but they were playing to cold fish, and you could have put all the applause they got into a sardine can. Except mine. Whenever I saw Sue Ellen, I clapped my heart out, and I never cared what the crowd was doing. I went out after Edward the Great wound up his act, and I said, "Ladieeees and Gen-tulmennnn, it gives me great pleasure to introduce at this time, in his American première, for the first time in this country, the Fallen Angel!"

I don't know what I expected, but no one so much as batted an eyelid. "You will note," I said, "that the nets are now being removed from beneath the trapezes, and that the trapezes are being raised to the uppermost portion of the tent. The Fallen Angel will perform at a height of one hundred and fifty feet above the ground, without benefit of net, performing his death-defying feats skill for your satisfaction."

The crowd rumbled a little, but you cou see they still weren't very excited about it a

"And now," I shouted, "the Fallen Angel

Angeli came into the ring, long and thi muscular in his red tights, the sequins shinin so that they could almost blind you. He bega climbing up to the bars, and everyone watche him, a little bored by now with all the trapeze acts. Angeli hopped aboard and the worked out a little, swinging to and fr leaping from one trapeze to another, doing few difficult stunts. He looked down to th band then, and Charlie started a roll on th drums, and I shouted into my megaphon "And now, a blood-chilling, spine-tinglin double somersault from one moving trape to another at one hundred and fifty fe above the ground—without a net!"

The crowd leaned forward a little, the wa they always will when a snare drum star rolling, and Angeli set the bars in motion, an then he tensed, with all the spotlights on hin The drum kept going, and then Angeli leape into space, and he rolled over once, twic and then his arms came out straight for th bar, and his hands clutched nothing, and h started to fall.

A woman screamed, and then the crow was on its feet, a shocked roar leaping fro four hundred throats all together. Ange dropped and dropped and dropped, an women covered their eyes and screamed, an brave men turned away, and then he hit th sawdust, and the cloud rolled up around hin and an "Ohhhhhhh" went up from the crow They kept standing, shocked, silent, like bunch of pallbearers.

Then slowly, casually, the Fallen Angel g to his feet and brushed off his red-sequine costume. He turned to the crowd and smile a big happy smile, and then he turned to fac the other half of the tent, smiling agai extending his arms and hands to his publi almost as if he were silently saying, "M children! My nice children!"

The crowd cheered and whistled and shoute and stamped, and some men yelled, "Brav Bravolissimo!" or something like that. Su Ellen, standing next to me, sighed and sai "Tony, he's wonderful," and I heard her, an I heard the yells of "Encore!" out there, bu I didn't bring Angeli out again that night. tucked him away and then waited for th landslide.

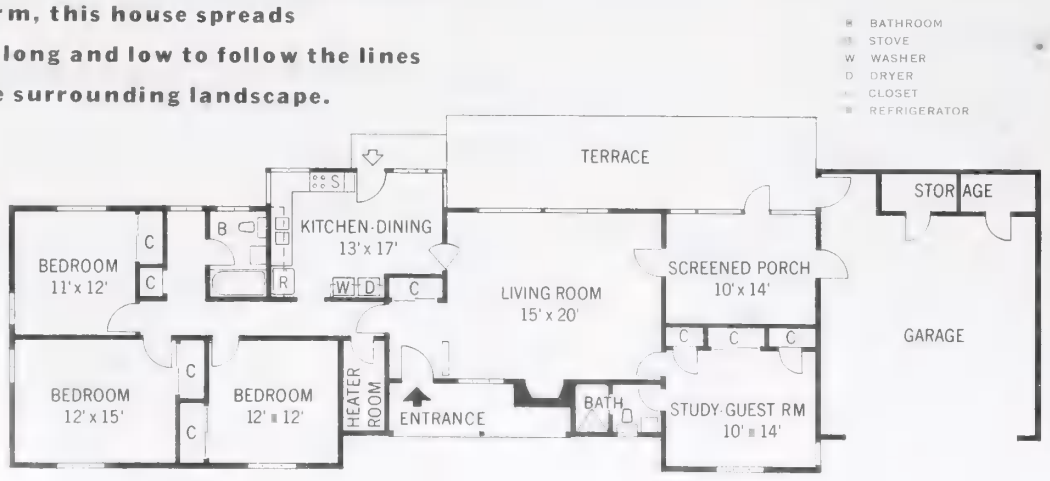
The landslide came the next night. We wer playing in a small town, but I think everyon who could walk turned out for the show They fidgeted through all the acts, crowdin the tent, standing in the back, shoving an pushing. They were bored when my aeria artists went on, but the boredom was goo because they were all waiting for the Falle Angel, all waiting to see if the reports abou him were true.

WHEN I introduced him, there was no ap plause. There was only an awful hush. Ange came out and climbed up to the bars and the began doing his tricks again, and everyon waited, having heard that he took his fa during the double somersault.

But Angeli was a supreme showman, an he realized the value of his trick lay in it surprise element. So he didn't wait for th double somersault this time. He simply swun out one trapeze and then made a leap for it right in the middle of his other routine stunts only this time he missed, and down he droppe with the crowd screaming to their feet.

A lot of people missed the fall, and that wa the idea because those same people came bac the next night, and Angeli never did it th same way twice. He'd fall in the middle of hi act, or at the end, or once he fell the first tim he jumped for the trapeze. Another time, h didn't fall at all during the act and then, as h was coming down the ladder, he missed rung and down he came, and the crow screamed.

And Angeli would come to me after eac performance and his eyes would glow, an he'd say, "Did you hear them, Tony? The want me to fall, they want me to break m neck!"



CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

ARCHITECT: HENRY D. NORRIS, A.I.A.; PHOTOGRAPHER: RODNEY MC KAY MORGAN

LARGE-SCALE LIVABILITY in a three-bedroom house

Small in size, big in comfort and charm, this house spreads long and low to follow the lines of the surrounding landscape.

by CAROL L. MERCADO

Located in Atlanta, Georgia, this attractive home reflects Southern hospitality from its sun-sheltered entry to its privacy-protected terrace. Let's step onto the cool, brick-floored entry porch, through the white-framed doorway, for a tour of inspection.

A large living room is separated from the entryway by free-standing bookshelves; deep roof overhangs shade the window walls in summer, admit the lower rays of the winter sun. The screened porch is designed for year-round use and comfort, too—windows replace the screens, converting the porch to a winter playroom. See how living room, terrace and porch lend themselves to entertaining large or small groups.

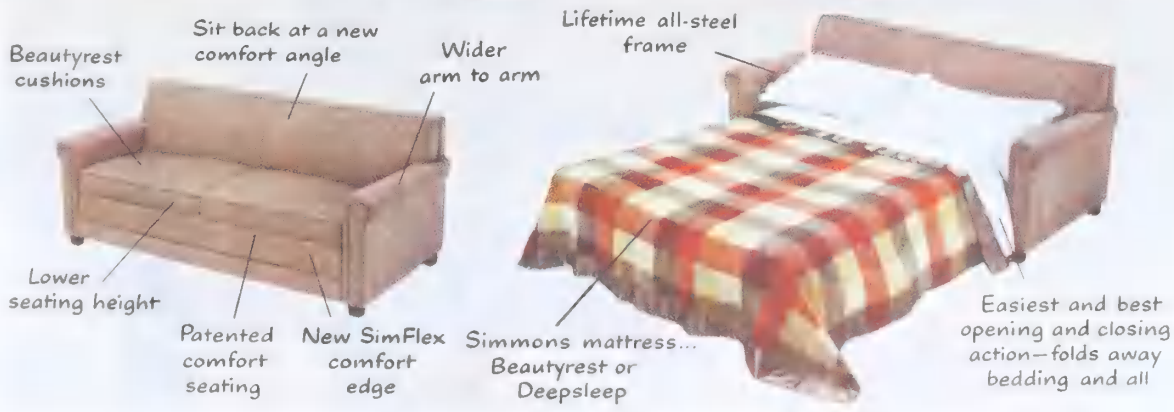
The study-guest room, ideal for quiet homework, is a family game-room too. One closet has shelves above for cards, chess and Scrabble gear; folding tables and chairs fit below. Other closets store guests' clothing and studio-couch bedding.

Outside walls are mottled brick; topped by white marble chips, the built-up roof matches shutters and trim. Turquoise paint covers the front door and the vertical siding of the entry porch, completing a very pleasing color scheme.

Lower, lovelier, more seating comfort than ever. More than 30 sizes and styles. From $199 to $399.

Modern Lawson model shown in toast nylon Jacquard. Also in dark green, persimmon, grey and moss green. Full size, $269.50. Apt. size, $259.50.

See the new luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed®!
As lovely as luxury-priced sofas!



ever before a sofa-bed as smart-looking and comfortable as the new Hide-A-Bed sofa! And side all that sofa beauty is a genuine Simmons ttress for the best in healthful, restful sleep! eautyrest* mattress just $20 extra.)

Choose from more than 100 decorator fabrics. e the luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed today!

eater seating comfort—with lower seating height. autyrest cushions slope back to let you sit back. Soft hion-front "gives" under your knees!

Read about these important features...some new, some exclusive...that make Hide-A-Bed unequalled as a sofa . . . unequalled as a bed!

Only Simmons makes HIDE-A-BED sofas

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office. Copr. 1955 by Simmons Co., Mdse. Mart, Chicago, Ill.

"Time for a lemonade lift!"

Refreshing! Lemonade's the pure fruit-juice beverage that gives you a lift...without letting you down! It's bright...fresh-tasting...rich in Vitamin C...and it really quenches thirst!

Ready in seconds with Frozen Lemonade from sunny California! Just open can...add water, ice...nice! Each 6-oz. can makes a full quart. Costs only about 3¢ a glass.

Tasty because Frozen Lemonade from sunny California contains the fresh-frozen juice of the finest lemons that grow! Buy several cans today. Keep a pitcherful in your refrigerator.

LEMON PRODUCTS ADVISORY BOARD, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The finest brands of FROZEN concentrate for LEMONADE are packed in sunny California where the best lemons grow!

Look for CALIFORNIA on the can!

so easy now with FROZEN LEMONADE from sunny California

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
EVERY KERNEL POPS OR YOUR MONEY BACK

EXTRA INCOME!
Earn extra income in your spare time!
Write today for our commission offer.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 921 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Sexton Samoa Chutnee

SHADES of Robert Louis Stevenson . . . of his classic "Treasure Island". . . of Samoa, where he lived so many years!

He would agree that one treasure of this enchanted island is its luscious mangoes, of the kind that go into Sexton's Samoa Chutnee. An exotic fruit, sliced and subtly blended with raisins, spices and other taste tantalizers, this rare preserve does wondrous things to steaks, roasts and cold cuts.

Look for Sexton Samoa Chutnee along with such Sexton specialties as Strawberry jam, Black Cherry preserves, Plum jelly and other delicacies from the Sexton Sunshine Kitchens. Better grocers have them.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Sexton Quality Foods

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
MEN LOVE . . .
KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
. . . it's the Quality Pack"
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

FINEST HAND FORGED CUTLERY
Ask for Kirk's
SHEFFIELD STAINLESS STEEL
At all Leading Stores
Colorful AGATINE BAR SET in TARTAN Case $8.95
FREE FOLDER ON DINER BEAUTIFUL WIRE SETS
Write to Kirk's Ltd., 59 W. Broadway, N. Y.

Trudy Star says: Ice Cream lasts longer in the Tri-State "FRIGID-BOX"
Crystal-Clear Rigid Plastic Holds ½ gal. pack
Perfect, too, for Vegetables, Fruit, Meats.
At leading hardware and dept. stores or write...Trudy Star, c/o Tri-State, Henderson, Ky.
79¢

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 156

And maybe they did. Or maybe they were just very happy to see him get up after his fall, safe and sound. Whatever it was, it was wonderful. Business was booming, and I began thinking of getting some new tops, and maybe a wild-animal act. I boosted everybody's salary, and I began taking a larger cut myself, and I was finally ready to ask Sue Ellen something I'd wanted to ask her for a long, long time. And Sam Angeli made it all possible. I spoke to her alone one night, over by the stakes where the elephants were tied.

"Sue Ellen," I said, "there's something that's been on my mind for a long time now."

"What is it, Tony?" she said.

"Well, I'm just a small-time circus man, and I never had much money, you know, and so I never had the right. But things have picked up considerably, and ——"

"Don't, Tony," she said.

I opened my eyes wide. "I beg your pardon, Sue Ellen?"

"Don't ask me. Maybe it could have been, and maybe it couldn't. But no more now, Tony. Not since I met Sam. He's everything I want, Tony, can you understand that?"

"I suppose," I said.

"I think I love him, Tony."

I nodded and said nothing.

"I'm awfully sorry," Sue Ellen said.

"If it makes you happy, honey ——" I couldn't think of any way to finish it.

I started working in earnest. Maybe I should have fired Angeli on the spot, but you can't fire love, and that's what I was battling. So instead I worked harder, and I tried not to see Sue Ellen around all the time. I began to figure crowd reactions, and I realized the people would not stand still for my other aerial artists once they got wind of the Fallen Angel. So we worked Farnings and Edward (whose "Great" title we dropped) into an act, and we worked Sue Ellen into Angeli's act. Sue Ellen dressed up the act a lot, and it gave Angeli someone to play around with up there, and it made his stunts before the fall more interesting.

Sue Ellen never did any of the fancy stuff. She just caught Angeli, or was caught by him, all stuff leading up to Angeli's spectacular fall. The beautiful part was that Sue Ellen never had to worry about timing. I mean, if she missed Angeli—so he fell. I thought about his fall a lot, and I tried to figure it out, but I never could, and after a while I stopped figuring. I never stopped thinking about Sue Ellen, though, and it hurt me awful to watch her looking at him with those eyes full of worship, but if she was happy that was all that counted.

And then I began to get bigger ideas. Why fool around with a small-time circus? I wondered. Why not expand? Why not incorporate?

I got off a few letters to the biggest circu I knew of. I told them what I had, and I t them the boy was under exclusive contract me, and I told them he would triple atte ance, and I told them I was interested in jo ing circuses, becoming partners sort of, w the understanding that the Fallen Angel wo come along with me. I guess the word had around because all the big-shot letters w very cordial and very nice, and they all ask me when they could get a look at Angeli cause they would certainly be interested incorporating my fine little outfit on a pa nership basis if my boy were all I claimed h to be, sincerely yours.

I got off a few more letters, asking all big shots to attend our regular Friday-nig performance so that they could judge crowd reaction and see the Fallen An under actual working conditions. All my l ters were answered with telegrams, and set the ball rolling.

That Friday afternoon was pure bedla There're always a million things happeni around a circus anyway, but this Frid everything seemed to pile up at once. Li Fifi, our bareback rider, storming into t tent in her white ruffles.

"My horse!" she yelled, her brown ey flashing. "My horse!"

"Is something wrong with him?" I aske

"Is *some*thing wrong with him?" she rante "Is something wrong with him?"

"Is?" I asked.

"No, nothing's wrong with him," s screamed. "But something's wrong with Jo Esperanza, and I'm going to wring his scraw little neck unless ——"

"Now easy, honey," I said, "leave us ta it easy."

"I told him a bucket of rye. I did not say bucket of oats. JuJu does not eat oats. eats rye, and my safety and health and depend on JuJu, and I will not have h eating some foul-smelling oats when I d tinctly told José ——"

"José!" I bellowed. "José Esperanza, co here."

José was a small Puerto Rican we'd pick up only recently, a nice young kid with brown cow's eyes and a small timid smile. poked his head into the wagon and smile and then he saw Fifi and the smile dropp from his face.

"Is it true you gave JuJu oats, José, wh you were told to give him rye?" I asked.

"Sí, señor," José said, "that ees true."

"But why, José? Why on earth ——"

"I could not do eet, señor."

"You could not do what?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 160

"I'd like to see what she could do with doorbells and telephones ringing, kids running in and out and husbands asking where's this and that."

A bullet sang through her sleeve

AFTER THE BATTLE of Spotsylvania, she wrote. "I have cooked ten dozen eggs, made cracker toast, blanc mange, milk punch, arrow-root, washed hands and faces, put ice on hot heads, mustard on cold feet, written six soldiers' letters home, stood beside three death beds . . . It has been a long day . . ."

But no longer than the day at Antietam, where as Blue and Gray fought to a bloody standstill, a bullet sang through her sleeve and killed the wounded soldier she was caring for.

Or Fredericksburg, where the dying lay frozen to the ground, and a shell fragment tore her clothing but could not frighten her from working while the battle still raged on.

It is not so surprising that after the war's end, this slender determined woman went on to found the American Red Cross, almost singlehanded. For Clara Barton had become an artist and an expert at meeting grim disaster.

Like Clara Barton, today's Americans still meet trouble with skill and resolution. For the qualities that made her great still live in the American people. And the simple fact that these people are the real guarantee standing behind our country's Savings Bonds tells you why U.S. Series E Savings Bonds rank high among the world's finest investments.

If you're not already doing so, why not join the millions of your fellow citizens who are now guarding their futures—and their country's—by investing in, and holding, United States Savings Bonds? Start today!

It's actually easy to save money—when you buy United States Series E Savings Bonds through the automatic Payroll Savings Plan where you work! You just sign an application at your pay office: after that your saving is done for you. And the Bonds you receive will pay you interest at the rate of 3% per year, compounded semiannually, for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish! Sign up today! Or, if you're self-employed, invest in Bonds regularly where you bank.

Safe as America — U.S. Savings Bonds

PUBLIC SERVICE · ADVERTISING COUNCIL ·

The U.S. Government does not pay for this advertisement. It is donated by this publication in cooperation with the Advertising Council and the Magazine Publishers of America.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 158

José lowered his head. "The horse, señor. I like heem. He ees nice horse. He ees always good to me."

"What's that got to do with the bucket of rye?"

"Señor," José said pleadingly, "I did not want to get the horse drunk."

"Drunk? Drunk?"

"Sí, señor. A bucket of rye. Even for a horse, thees ees a lot of wheesky. I did not theenk ——"

"Oh," Fifi wailed, "of all the inexcusably —— I'll feed the horse myself. I'll feed him myself. Never mind!" She stormed out of the wagon, and José smiled sheepishly and said, "I did wrong, señor?"

"No," I said. "You did all right, José. Now run along."

I shook my head and José left, and when I turned around Sam Angeli was standing there. I hadn't heard him come in, and I wondered how long he'd been there, so I said, "A good kid, José."

"If you like good kids," Angeli answered. "He'll go to heaven, that one," I said. "Mark my words."

Angeli smiled. "We'll see," he said. "I wanted to talk to you, Tony."

"Oh? What about?"

"About all these people coming tonight. The big shots, the ones coming to see me."

"What about them?"

"Nothing, Tony. But suppose, just suppose, mind you, suppose I didn't fall?"

"What do you mean?" I said.

"Just that. Suppose I don't fall tonight?"

"That's silly," I said. "You have to fall."

"Do I? Where does it say I have to fall?"

"Your contract. You signed a ——"

"The contract doesn't say anything about my having to fall, Tony. Not a word."

"Well . . . say, what is this? A holdup?"

"No, nothing of the sort. I just got to thinking. If this works out tonight, Tony, you're going to be a big man. But what c get out of it?"

"Do you want a salary boost, is that O.K., you've got a salary boost. Ho that?"

"I don't want a salary boost."

"What then?"

"Something of very little importance. So thing of no value whatever."

"What?" I said. "What is it?"

"Suppose we make a deal, Tony?" An said. "Suppose we shake on it? If I fall night, I get this little something that I wan

"What's this little something you wan

"Is it a deal?"

"I have to know first."

"Well, let's forget it then," Angeli said.

"Now, wait a minute, wait a minute. Is t 'thing' Sue Ellen?"

Angeli smiled. "I don't have to make a d to get her, Tony."

"Well, is it money?"

"No. This thing has no value."

"Then why do you want it?"

"I collect them."

"And I've got one?"

"Yes."

"But it's not worth any money?"

"No, Tony. No money at all."

"Well, what ——"

"Is it a deal, or isn't it?"

"I don't know. I mean, this is a peculi way to ——"

"Believe me, this thing is of no materi value to you. You won't even know it's gon But if I go through with my fall tonight, all ask is that you give it to me. A handshake w be binding as far as I'm concerned."

"You sound as nuts as Fifi does," I said.

"A deal? If I fall, I get what I want."

I shrugged. "All right, all right, a dea Provided you haven't misrepresented th thing, whatever it is. Provided it's not material value to me."

"I haven't misrepresented it. Shall we shak Tony?"

He extended his hand, and I took it, a his eyes glowed, but his skin was very cold the touch. I pulled my hand away.

"Now," I said, "what's this thing you wa from me?"

Angeli smiled. "Your soul."

I was suddenly alone in the wagon. I look around, but Angeli was gone, and then t door opened and Sue Ellen stepped in, and s looked very grave and very upset.

"I heard," she said. "Forgive me. I hear I was listening outside. Tony, what are yo going to do . . . what are we going to do?"

"Can it be?" I said. "Can it be, Sue Elle He looks just like you and me. How'd I g into this?"

"We've got to do something," Sue Ell said. "Tony, we've got to stop him!"

We packed them in that night. They sa and they stood, and they climbed all over t rafters, they were everywhere. And rig down front, I sat with the big shots, a they all watched my small, unimportant sho until it was time for the Fallen Angel to go o

I got up and smiled weakly and said, " you gentlemen will excuse me, I have introduce the next act."

They all smiled back knowingly, and nodd their heads, and their gold stickpins and pin rings winked at me, and they blew out expe sive cigar smoke, and I was thinking, Mullin you can blow out expensive cigar smoke, to but you won't have any soul left.

I introduced the act, and I was surprised see all my aerial artists run out onto the sa dust, Sue Ellen, Farnings, Edward and t Fallen Angel. I watched Angeli as he cross one of the spotlights, and if I'd had any doub they all vanished right then. Angeli cast shadow onto the sawdust.

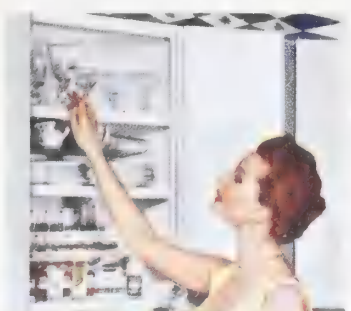
I watched in amazement as the entire trou went up the ladder to the trapezes. There w a smile on Angeli's face, but Sue Ellen and t rest had tight, set mouths.

They did a few stunts, and I watched t big shots, and it was plain they were n impressed at all by these routine aerial acr batics. I signaled the band, according schedule, and I shouted, "And now, ladi and gentlemen, the Fallen Angel in a deat defying, spine-tingling, bloodcurdling trip

Your Republic Steel Kitchens dealer can adapt this lovely kitchen to your home

STEP INTO MY

Take-it-easy Kitchen



...and you'll find a wonderful new world of efficiency and charm!

What makes this Republic kitchen so "easy to take"? First, the plan, which helps you organize your energy. Everything where you want it, when you want it, as you like it. Second, the line of modern cabinets, so varied in size and features you can make your kitchen fit you. Third, counter tops of practical coved Formica on durable steel. Fourth, accessories that ease your kitchen chores. Fifth, color accent on counters and walls—and beautiful fresh-white Perma Finish Enamel that lives happily ever after in any surroundings. Sixth, the low cost of a Republic Steel Kitchen. Here's "beauty and the budget" at its best!

REPUBLIC STEEL Kitchens

You'll find a "cozy corner". This lazy susan cabinet corners every inch of space, swings around at fingertip beckoning. Republic turns the trick, too, with these expertly designed shallow drawers—just the right parking space for cutlery, silverware and linens.

You'll find the "height of convenience"! See how Republic's adjustable shelves cater to your own height, put everything within your "comfort reach." More take-it-easy touches are apparent in this spice shelf and handy cup rack.

You'll find some delightful "inner secrets"! Just open the door, pull up the shelf, and presto! your mixer pops into sight and into use. Flick the release, wave your hand, and it does a disappearing act right under your counter. And, hidden behind the doors of the adjoining cabinet are not just shelves, but inner drawers that slide out magically on quiet nylon glides. Supernatural? Nope—just super!

New planning books: For remodeling, "101 Ways To Make Awkward Kitchens Behave" for new homes, "Praise-Winning Kitchens." Send 25¢ for one, 40¢ for both, with your address to Republic Steel, Berger Division, 1068 Belden, Canton 5, O.

nersault at one hundred and fifty feet above ground, without a net!"

Sue Ellen swung her trapeze out, and Angeli ung his, and then Sue Ellen dropped head vnward and extended her hands, and geli swung back and forth, and the crowd d its breath, waiting for him to take his , and the big shots held their breaths, wait- for the same thing. Only I knew what uld happen if he did take that fall. Only I w about our agreement. Only I—and Sue en, waiting up there for Angeli to jump.

Charlie started the roll on his snare, and n the roll stopped abruptly, and Angeli ased his grip on the bar and he swung out space, and over he went, once, twice, ee times and—slap, Sue Ellen's hands nped around his wrists, and she held on dear life. I couldn't see Angeli's face from ar below, but he seemed to be struggling get away. Sue Ellen held him for just an ant, just long enough for Edward to swing trapeze into position.

he flipped Angeli out then, and over he t and wham, Edward grabbed his ankles. geli flapped his arms and kicked his legs, ng to get free, but Edward—Edward the at!—wouldn't drop him. Instead, he ng his trapeze back, and then gave Angeli p and Farnings grabbed Angeli's wrists. arnings flipped Angeli up, and Sue Ellen ght him, and then Sue Ellen swung her eze all the way back and tossed Angeli to vard, and I began to get the idea of what going on up there.

dward tossed Angeli and Farnings caught , and then Farnings flipped Angeli back to vard and Edward tossed him to Sue Ellen Sue Ellen tossed him right back again. n Farnings climbed onto Sue Ellen's trapeze, and they both swung back to the platform.

Edward took a long swing, and then he tossed Angeli head over heels, right back to the platform, where Sue Ellen and Farnings grabbed him with four eager arms.

I was grinning all over by this time, and the crowd was booing at the top of their lungs, but who cared? The big shots were stirring restlessly, but they'd probably heard that Angeli sometimes fell coming down the ladder, and so they didn't leave their seats.

Only tonight, Angeli wasn't doing any falling coming down any ladder. Because Sue Ellen had one of his wrists and Farnings had one of his ankles, and one was behind him and the other was ahead of him, and even if he pitched himself off into space, he wouldn't have gone far, not with the grips they had on both him and the ladder. I saw the big shots get up and throw away their cigars, and then everybody began booing as if they wanted to tear down the top with their voices. Angeli came over to me, and his face didn't hold a pleasant smile this time. His face was in rage, and it turned red as if he would explode.

"You tricked me!" he screamed. "You tricked me!"

"Oh, go to hell," I told him, and all at once he wasn't there any more.

Well, I'm not John Ringling North, and I don't run the greatest show on earth. I've just got a small unimportant circus, and it gives me a regular small income, but it's also a lot of trouble sometimes.

I still have my soul, though, and what's more I now have a soul mate, and she answers to the name of Sue Ellen Mullins, which is in a way most euphonic, you will agree.

PRESCRIPTION FOR BEAUTY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 136

venly just to be able to kick off my shoes," says, "and s-t-r-e-t-c-h out and r-e-l-a-x the shades drawn and the house quiet. I his in the afternoon when the two older dren are in school and while Ellen and es are napping. I might first put up the of my hair in pin curls, or use this time to little softening cream go to work on my and hands. If my eyes feel tired, I saturate rbent cotton with cool eye lotion and e it over my closed eyelids for a few minutes. riably, when I awaken I feel refreshed clearheaded and much more cheerful!

Another thing," Anne adds: "I try not to do. When I feel fatigue creeping up on me, p work altogether; or at's impossible, I slow n the pace. Even at the t, where most of the s and mothers are ng girls, you can see the rence in those who e themselves beyond physical capacity. The ts show up in drawn s, circles under the eyes, run-down spirits. all for letting the washing or ironing , if it means the difference in happiness good health.

Once a week I give myself a shampoo, set manicure and, if they need it, tweeze my rows. My page-boy requires one deep e on the side, two rows of fat pin curls all nd the head. A manicure, complete with rless polish (the colorless gives a nice gloss can chip away without looking so untidy), s me about fifteen minutes. Rubber gloves ll hands-in-water activities, plus daily use good hand lotion (which I also massage elbows and heels), keeps my skin from ping. Lipstick is my only daytime make-up.

By watching my diet and exercising regu- (particularly after each baby) I have my weight and measurements at what I ider a good minimum for me. I'm 5'6½", h 119 pounds and have a 24" waist. We tons of tossed green salads (with Pat's ial French dressing—I go easy on that), k fruit juice at least twice a day and usu- have raw fresh fruit for dessert. We're all t milk drinkers. If we are having a casse- dish for lunch or dinner, instead of lean meat and vegetables, I serve myself a small portion. My biggest temptation comes when I bake. Cookies, cake, pie. So perhaps once a week I'll have a serving of some special sweet, but for the rest of the week Pat and the children finish up the rich desserts while I go back to my fresh fruit.

"I sandwich my exercises in between household jobs. Here are my favorites:

"Lie on back, spine flat on floor, arms down by sides, knees drawn up and feet flat on floor, as close to the body as possible. Slowly slide the feet down, being sure the spine stays flat on the floor.

The surest way to hit a woman's heart is to take aim kneeling.
—DOUGLAS JERROLD

"Stand with arms outstretched and level with the shoulders. Swing arms back as far as possible, then return to first position, rapidly repeating motion and trying to swing arms farther back each time.

"Lie flat, arms relaxed, toes pointed, with neck and shoulders as relaxed as possible. Raise legs, feet together and knees straight. Slowly lower legs, using stomach muscles to control their movement.

"With knees straight, bend over and touch the floor, keeping hands as flat on floor as possible. Walk around room in this fashion.

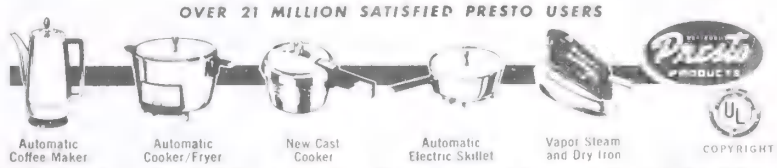
"Blue jeans with a fresh shirt and moccasins are the fashion order of the day for housewives hard at work, here at the Point. If I'm off to school with the children or marketing, a pretty, full skirt with a sweater or blouse, or a simple shirtwaist dress, is my choice. My biggest clothes 'must' is to have fresh accessories on hand always. Immaculate gloves, polished shoes (Pat is the best shoe polisher!), colorful silk or chiffon squares, simple jewelry, hats with veils pressed, a favorite perfume or cologne. I always keep at least two afternoon and evening dresses in perfect readiness for teas and dances—social occasions which are frequent at the Point." END

NEW! Faster! Easier! Better!
Presto® "700" Cooker

Compare! PRESTO COOKS 3 TIMES FASTER!		PRESTO TIME	ORDINARY TIME
	BEEF STEW	10 MINUTES	2 HOURS
	CARROTS	3 MINUTES	25 MINUTES
	POTATOES	10 MINUTES	35 MINUTES
	SWISS STEAK	15 MINUTES	50 MINUTES

Foods cook three times faster with a PRESTO Cooker! Foods look better . . . less expensive cuts of meat become tasty treats. Presto-cooked foods are easily digested . . . all the vitamins and minerals are retained . . . and food colors remain fresh and appetizing.

New Exclusive Features Make Presto More Automatic Than Ever!



NEW AUTOMATIC AIR VENT —Automatically releases air, automatically retains pressure. A PRESTO Exclusive!

NEW PRESSURE REGULATOR —Automatically signals when food is actually cooking. A PRESTO Exclusive!

NEW COOKING GUIDE— Correct timing for most popular dishes right on the handle. Easy to read. A PRESTO Exclusive!

More Presto cookers are sold than all other makes combined!

Presto
OVER 21 MILLION SATISFIED PRESTO USERS

COPYRIGHT NPII 1955

NATIONAL PRESTO INDUSTRIES, INC., EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 68

in a speculative venture, lost every penny and died of a heart attack.

"Our fine house and our swank convertible vanished overnight. Andy had to quit college and get a job. He was terrified of poverty. Since I wasn't, it seemed up to me to love him more than ever. For quite a few years—we had to postpone our family—I moved about with Andy as he changed from job to job. Sometimes he quit; often he was fired. Without meaning to, he would rub his bosses the wrong way. We lived in furnished rooms and cheap hotels; for a while we lived in a tent on the desert. I thought the freedom and casualness had their bright side. Andy fretted about what his friends—two or three, not half as many as he imagines, became ex-friends when the money went—might think.

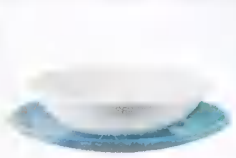
"By the time our second son was five and schooling was definitely a problem, Andy inherited a little money. He then set up in business for himself and we were able to buy our home and settle down. Characteristically, Andy selected the house without consulting me. It has a fine workshop for him, a kitchen that might have passed muster back in the covered-wagon era. The laundry tubs leak, the burned-out oven billows smoke. Always in our marriage Andy's comfort and Andy's wishes have come first. Even so, he was never satisfied. However much I gave, Andy demanded more. That has made it a little rough.

"By choice Andy would have me fill every waking minute thinking thoughts of him, doing things for him. No doubt he doesn't realize it, but he has begrudged the attention I devote to the children. Our daughter, Jean, is ten. She wanted me to be a den mother for he Brownie group; Andy kicked up such a fuss had to resign. Our teen-age sons occasionall ask me to chaperon a party or assist in som function at the school. When I do, And turns into a monument of gloom. A year ag my sister and her husband located in ou neighborhood. Andy objected so strenuousl to Ruth's dropping in—he can't abide my sis ter's laugh and maintains I copy it—that sh and I confine most of our visiting to the tele phone. We try to use the phone when he isn around. If Andy is on the premises and Rut happens to call I say, 'Wrong number,' an hang up. My youngsters think this routine i funny. I have yet to laugh at it.

"All this leads up to the day I first too notice of Mark and Mark took notice of me It was last April, a rainy Saturday. My littl girl and I breakfasted early and I let the boy and Andy sleep. Jean's school was engaged i a landscape-improvement project with prize to be awarded the best gardens in our area She was anxious for her father to replace th palings that blew out of our back-yard fenc in that bad storm two years ago. Andy ha been promising to repair the fence and pain the house—despite his workshop and powe tools, our place is the shabbiest in the com munity—ever since. I was telling Jean I woul broach the subject again when Andy joined us

"One glance at my husband's face," Laur told the counselor, "and I knew the momen was not propitious. Before I could hush ou ten-year-old, she proceeded to ask about th fence. Andy responded with a snarl that woul have done credit to a wounded tiger. Jean ha reached the sensitive age. After she retired i tears, I discovered Andy was extra grouch because he had slept through an importan business appointment. I caught the blame fo his oversleeping, although I hadn't been ad vised of the appointment. Andy tells me prac tically nothing about his business. I once stud ied bookkeeping—I have a good head fo figures—and I've always hankered to keep household budget, a real one. I am obliged t gauge my expenditures by guesswork, crysta gazing and studying Andy's facial expression and incidental sound effects. I tentatively in quired how his business was doing—I was de bating the expense of a beauty-parlor sham poo—and at once was rewarded with th snarl. So I guessed: bad.

"While I was on the phone making excuse for Andy about the broken appointment, ou sons appeared in the dining room. David, wh is seventeen years old, asked to use the car o a date that evening. Andy refused permissio in the tone of a prison warden putting down riot in cell block A. Andy was presented wit his own automobile on his sixteenth birthday as he frequently remarks. Our so-called famil car passes out of Andy's iron control so sel dom that David refers to the rest of us as 'Th last of the pedestrians.' Our younger son go in bad by showing up at the table in his bath robe. I thought Tom looked very cute. And ordered him to go put on clothes. Tom de clined as a matter of principle either to put o his pants or eat a bite of breakfast. He is four teen years old, is thin as a string bean an needs his food. I urged him to reconsider, an Tom was rude to me and Andy jumped int that and David also offered comments an there was a general unpleasantness, with every body arguing.



"By the time Andy finally got away I wa sick and tired of him, fed up with my childre and frantic to escape the house. I grabbed th grocery list and an umbrella and dashed out side, without even bothering to put on fres lipstick. Mark was pulling into our driveway," Laura said slowly. "He had a contract t leave for Andy's signature. But he didn't driv on off. I guess he saw something in my face Mark's marriage has been far from paradise his wife is bossier than Andy. Well, Mark tol me I looked pretty. I knew I looked a mess but the compliment sounded dandy. So dandy that I immediately burst out crying." Laur smiled ruefully at herself. "Mark suggested w drive somewhere for a cup of coffee and I go in his car. Almost before I realized what wa happening—it was as though a dam ha burst—my tale of woe came pouring out. cried on Mark's shoulder and liked it.

You've never known chinaware as versatile as Epicure! It's chinaware you can pop into the oven—then use for serving. It's chinaware that does not just one job for you—but two or even three! Bread and butters are salad plates—casseroles are serving dishes—soups are perfect for cereal or dessert! It's chinaware designed for your casual, modern life!

Epicure's smart lines and sparkling colors will grace your proudest tables . . . or add a flair to a buffet supper or TV dinner. Mix or match colors from four fashion-perfect pastels: Turquoise Blue, Charcoal Gray, Dawn Pink and Snow White.

It's fine-quality chinaware by Homer Laughlin, America's largest maker of chinaware. The sixteen-piece set is only $7.95, slightly higher in the Far West. See Epicure at your favorite store today! You will love it!

SOUPS are right for soup, of course—but Epicure soups do more! They're ideal not only as serving bowls for a beef stew or spaghetti but also breakfast cereal or dessert.

PLATES—10", 8" and 6" are styled for all needs. The 10" size is right for dinner, the 8" plate for lunch or salad and the 6" for bread and butter, pie, cake or cookies.

SUGAR AND CREAMER are smartly styled and full-sized to meet the demands of American coffee drinkers! Handles are specially designed to make gripping sure and easy.

SAUCE BOAT handles easily at the table and in the dishpan. Bowl and base are separate; base is fine for bacon and eggs, TV snacks . . . bowl doubles as fruit or candy dish.

HOMER LAUGHLIN—Smart chinaware that fits your budget.

I knew I was being disloyal to my husband, I simply didn't care. Mark's sympathy and lerstanding, his admiration were irresistiAfter we had coffee I did the marketing he ferried me and my groceries home. On nday I lunched with Mark and sympaed with Mark's marital troubles. And then and I were in it. For the next two months, turned our backs on our responsibilities existed like a couple of teen-age people in ream. We managed to see each other alst every day, if only for half an hour.

SINCE Andy can't afford expensive restaus and dislikes practically everybody, we er entertain and he takes me nowhere. rk and I sat at drugstore counters or ght delicatessen sandwiches and picnicked he beach. Or we skipped lunch and waned through a gallery or museum. It has n years since Andy and I have looked at an collection or listened to music. Once Mark ght a pair of concert tickets just so we d hear the second Beethoven quartet, a rite of mine. After twenty minutes we to leave the hall and go our separate s. Flattered? Yes, I was flattered and led. Wouldn't you be? Mark was interd in my tastes, in my opinions, in my s. He was interested in me as a person in wn right. I halfway think it was the con- that bowled me over. Andy had always ght of me as a shadow of himself, an echo. Naturally at times—t of the time, in fact—conscience nagged at When I left the house eet Mark I might feel and airy, in the teenmood. When I came home I would feel y and ashamed. It's a der we never ran into ody or stirred up any p. Andy pops home at hours and keeps the e lines busy, but even was unsuspicious. A r thing—that fact both- me as much as anyg. It seemed unfair how.

Of course the whole sitn was impossible. One last June—the first and ime I ever saw Mark in the evening—he ested two divorces. The mere suggestion of rce," Laura said, "frightened me back to y. I didn't want a divorce and I doubt did. My children and Andy, his prickly- disposition and all—the twenty years of ories we shared, the twenty years of life—t much more to me than Mark. That evening Mark and I put our spring madbehind us. We called it quits and decided would be no more secret meetings. We by the decision. To this day, I'm sure 's wife knows nothing about us."

ura sighed.

should have had the sense and the strength ep my mouth shut. I was familiar with 's jealousy, his possessiveness. But my conscience was something I hadn't ted on. It wouldn't let me rest. I worried antly because I hadn't lived up to my ards and ideals. I stewed and fretted t my sneakiness and disloyalty. I had the years of habit, of telling Andy every- Finally, six weeks ago, I broke down old him the whole story. It's the worst I could have done.

ndy went all to pieces," Laura said. "The hat Mark and I have lost all interest in other seems to make no difference to It doesn't comfort him in the least. For eeks he has acted like a crazy man. In- of blaming me, as you would expect, or ing Mark, Andy blames himself for what ened. For hour after hour, he raves on his selfishness, his meanness, his stu- . His suffering is dreadful. If anybody ves to be punished, I am the one. By hing himself Andy is not only making lf physically ill and making me feel much ; he is punishing our children. They know what goes on, though they've ably guessed part of it, but they're cer- feeling the effects of the strain and tension in our household. Tom is having nightmares, Jean's teacher has phoned twice about her homework. David pats me on the back too often and glowers at his father. Our home is falling apart.

"Andy has lost twenty pounds and looks ten years older. He can't eat, he can't sleep. He is unable to do any business. Last night he woke me at two A.M. and we rode around until broad daylight while Andy carried on about his failings, and meanwhile bombarded me with questions. He demands to know every detail of what Mark and I did, said to each other, thought, felt, imagined. Any minute detail I can manage to dredge up from my recollection—the subject is worn threadbare—only tortures him the more. And then there is another scene. I've become so confused I hardly know how I feel about anything. My nerves, too, are at the cracking point. I can't undo what has already happened. Unless Andy can put the Mark-me episode out of his mind, unless he can stop talking about it, we will both wind up as nervous wrecks."

Andy Tells His Side

"My wife is the only person who has ever loved me," forty-year-old Andy said to the counselor. A handsome but painfully thin man, his hands shook so badly he could hardly light his cigarette. "I wasn't smart enough to hold on to her love. Laura's sense of duty is the only thing that is holding together what is left of our marriage. I am sure she still thinks of Mark, often thinks of him, though she denies it. Any woman would prefer Mark to me. He is clever, popular, good-looking, successful—the kind of man my father was.

"I have failed at everything—as a husband, as a father, as a money-maker. My children have no affection or respect for me; in recent years my sons have made their indifference very plain. I just can't buy them the things kids want. I was given a first-class automobile, no jalopy, the day I qualified for a driving license. It pinched me to provide my sons with bicycles. My boyhood home had a swimming pool and a tennis court.

"My wife and children live in a shabby rundown house—I have scarcely a dime's worth of equity in it—at the unfashionable end of a street that was named for my great-grandfather. He pioneered in this state. My grandfather designed some of the first public buildings in the city. My father inherited his family's brains and brilliance. They didn't come down to me. I guess I took after my mother's people.

"My mother was the cipher in our family. But even she found it hard to hide her disappointment in me, an only child, equipped with the stodgy virtues, perhaps, but lacking in charm and flash. I don't remember ever spending a pleasant, relaxed hour with my mother; she was always dragging me to some educational talk or lecture, always anxiously watching for signs of the talents I did not possess. Both of us were afraid of my father.

"His mind worked lightning fast and he had no patience with bumblers. One autumn back when I was nine or ten my dad took me on an overnight hunting trip. I can recall how he pitched the tent and laid the fire and how we sang songs together. I was busting with pride and for once I felt close to him. But then next morning I was supposed to build up the fire and I flubbed the job. The wood I gathered was too green to burn. I flunked again when he tried to show me how to fire a shotgun. Finally when I dropped a box of shells in the water my dad was so disgusted he broke camp in the middle of the morning and we drove back home.

"When my father lost his money," Andy said, "I halfway expected Laura to run out on me. A large majority of my friends melted fast. Mark stuck, of course. I fell in love with Books won't stay banned. They won't burn. Ideas won't go to jail. In the long run of history, the censor and the inquisitor have always lost. The only sure weapon against bad ideas is better ideas. The source of better ideas is wisdom. The surest path to wisdom is a liberal education.

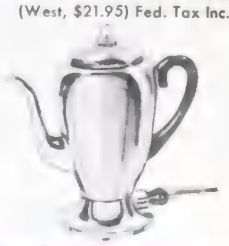
—ALFRED WHITNEY GRISWOLD:
Essays in Education
(Yale Press)



no dials to set,
Completely Automatic...
no lights to watch,
Feather-light to use!
and it makes the best coffee you've ever tasted, every time!

Beautiful Chrome
MIRRO-MATIC
Electric Percolator

$19.95
8-cup, with cord
(West, $21.95) Fed. Tax Inc.

Just put in coffee and cold water and plug it in. Makes the same good coffee every time. Keeps it drinking-hot till poured. All automatically! No dials. No lights. And pounds lighter! Pick it up and prove it to yourself.

MIRRO-MATIC Electric Percolator
Polished aluminum. Same completely automatic features in chrome model.
8-cup, only $12.95 (West, $13.95)
4-cup, only 9.95 (West, $10.50)
8-cup, Gold-tone Alumilite finish, only $13.95 (West, $14.95) your best buy...

MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

GET MIRRO-MATIC at department, hardware and home furnishing stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY
MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN
World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Discover how CARIOCA Chicken Salad

Sings with California flavor

Take a quick taste while mixing. You'll note something special in this salad. It's the sunny, summer-bright flavor of California's own ripe olives. Hurry up—and taste!

¾ cup ripe olives
1½ cups diced cooked chicken
¾ cup diced apple
½ cup diced celery
3 tbsps. lemon juice
3 tbsps. mayonnaise
3 tbsps. cream
½ tsp. prepared horseradish
Lettuce

Cut olives into large pieces. Combine olives, chicken, apple and celery; sprinkle with lemon juice. Blend the mayonnaise, cream and horseradish and mix lightly but thoroughly with chicken mixture. Serve on lettuce. Garnish generously with additional pieces of ripe olives. Serves 5 to 6.

To make more meals sing with California flavor, pack ripe olives in the picnic basket...put them on TV trays...and pass a bowlful when guests drop in. There's a bright, friendly greeting in that "welcome bowl" of California's flavor-packed ripe olives.

Free Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet

Write today for your free copy of the beautifully illustrated 16-page booklet, "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Address: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-60, 24 California Street, San Francisco 11, California.

ripe olives*
make meals SING with California flavor

*RIPE, GREEN-RIPE...WHOLE, PITTED, CHOPPED, SLICED

Laura and chose her to be my wife because she was beautiful and yet seemed gentle and soft, not headstrong and opinionated like most girls. But I had promised her quite a different marriage and future from the kind she got. I know Laura hadn't pictured herself bending over a tin tub scrubbing my work clothes. Nor had I pictured myself working with a gang of unskilled laborers. Other guys, smarter guys, would have figured a way to stay in college and complete their education. They would be licensed architects today, not poor-mouthed contractors.

"Laura stuck by me without a murmur of complaint," Andy continued and his thin face twitched. "She proved she loved me in a million ways. Regardless of the jobs I had to take, she made the labor and the constant humiliations possible to tolerate. The gangs I worked with invariably picked me as the one to needle and to rib—sometimes I think I may be too thin-skinned for my own good—but in the evenings Laura was there to offer warmth and comfort. She unfailingly took my side, backed me up. Even after our children came along I wasn't forced to take a back seat, as so often happens.

"Except for Laura's confidence and faith I'd never have got up the nerve to branch forth with a business of my own. Not that I've done any better working for myself than I did working for other people. Two of my partners resigned in succession; the key members of my construction crews hardly learn where to hang their hats before they quit. I just can't attract and hold people's loyalty. Laura is the exception. Or she used to be.

"For years I had almost daily evidence I was in my wife's heart, in her thoughts. Little things can loom big. Take my picky appetite. If I forget to eat, as I'm inclined to do, I have terrible pressure headaches. Whenever Laura packed a lunch box for me she would tuck a note in among the sandwiches, a note worth finding. Often there would be just two words: 'Darling, eat!' That's the kind of devotion I was selfish and dumb enough to lose.

"Laura thinks I didn't know she had turned away from me, that I was unsuspicious. Of course I knew when the sun went in," Andy said and beat his clenched fist against his knee. "Ever since I can remember I've walked on shifting ground in this world, but Laura was my anchor in the earth. Of course I knew my wife had changed. Until last spring, Laura automatically waited to hear my opinion on every little matter that concerned us or the children. Why, I worked out her household schedule right down to the days she washed and ironed. If I recommended a TV program she made a point of tuning in on it. If I liked a magazine article, she read it. Suddenly all that stopped. Until last spring, if I got cross and grumpy it was Laura who came and did the making up. That, too, stopped. Laura began forgetting to cook the food I liked, neglecting to buy the candles and flowers I liked to see on the table.

"For at least two years Laura had been hinting that I paint our house and repair the fence—I should have done the work long ago—but all at once last spring the hinting stopped. Why should Laura suddenly become indifferent to the appearance of our home? I wondered. Why? Several times I stopped by in the middle of the day. Laura wasn't there.

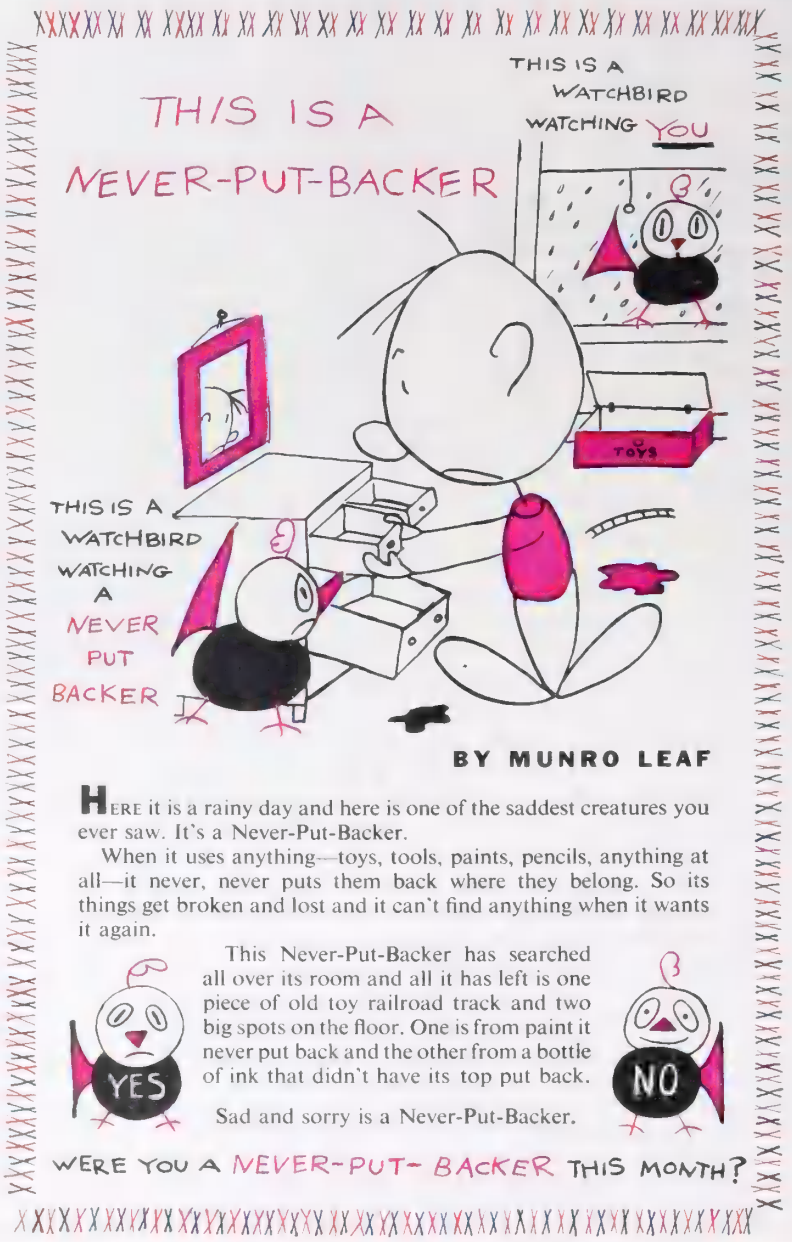
"At first I blamed her sister—Ruth delights to set my wife against me—and I tried to convince myself Laura was wasting her time with Ruth. But I couldn't kid myself very long. I knew I was in bad trouble and that my trouble couldn't be explained by a sister-in-law. There was just one answer: another man.

"If I'd treated Laura decently," Andy said and wiped perspiration from his forehead, "she would never have let me down at a time I was on the verge of bankruptcy. I practically forced my wife to step out on me. That's what haunts me now. My disposition at best is poor. Some months ago my business started going to pot—everything I touch goes bad—and I got so mean and crabby nobody could live with me. I don't blame Laura for what happened; I blame myself. But that's no help. If I could just hate Mark, I might feel better. I can't hate Mark. He is a good guy, who has stood by me often. I don't even dislike him.

"Yet I can hardly bear the thought of ever seeing Mark again, although I know I must. At night I dream of Laura and Mark together. By day Mark's face rises before me so that I can't eat and then my head throbs and aches until I think it will split. I can't bear to think of Laura being with Mark, smiling the beautiful smile she has so often smiled at me, turning her head to him in the same quick way, and then remember that my meanness—nothing else—put her there. I would give anything to undo what has happened. I would do anything to change the way I mistreated Laura and to forget how she turned from me. I can't forget. I can think of nothing else. My thoughts and my feelings and my regret are driving me mad."

The Marriage Counselor Says:

"What Andy needed to begin his cure was to do some thinking about himself and his wife instead of surrendering to his emotions. Laura's infatuation was clearly a symptom of her inner dissatisfaction. Her marriage was in a bad way before she was struck by Mark's attractions. The marriage was still in a bad way after they broke off their rather mild relationship. For many years Laura bottled up her personal feelings, desires, resentments, partly to maintain harmony and partly, I suspect, because she had a touch of the martyr in her make-up.



"Bottled-up resentments are hard to keep corked. Laura's friendship with Mark provided an outlet for her feelings. In a sense, the infatuation was like the blowing off of a safety valve. Unless the marriage improved and she was enabled to obtain some of the personal satisfactions to which she was entitled, a second and perhaps more serious explosion seemed quite possible.

"It was fairly simple for an outsider to spot Andy's trouble. He grew up, a disconsolate little boy, in the shadow of a distinguished father. Deprived of attention in his childhood, Andy was childishly determined in his r turity to be the center of everything. La cushioned the shock when his father's fortu disappeared and, without sufficient traini he was pitchforked into business. She kept ego brightly burnished, assured him whene he failed that he was misunderstood a unappreciated. Consequently Andy didn't late his numerous business failures, both as employee and as an employer, to his thorn critical—the emotionally insecure are oft highly critical of others—personality. The too, Andy was the kind of person who expe the worst and thereby succeeds in bringing the worst. Look around sometime on a crowd bus and see whose toes get stepped on. Wh Andy gloomily expected his fellow workers make him the butt of their rough kiddin they obliged. Later when he expected his em ployees to quit and hurried them along wi his sharp tongue, they, too, obliged. Whatev happened, Andy had a scapegoat in Laur This wasn't good for either of them.

"Laura's revolt, her brief turning to anoth man, almost sent Andy into emotional an mental collapse. In the end, however, her r volt was therapeutic. For Andy was intell gent, despite his avowals to the contrar After our first consultation he acknowledge he had arrived at an age where he faced tw choices. Either he could make some persona ity changes and grow up or, almost inevitabl he would lose both his home and his busine and crack up. His lamentations weren't assis ing him to change.

"Frankly, I have wondered if some of th extravagant polemics Andy directed again himself weren't designed (subconsciously of course) to draw contradictions from Laura fresh poultices for his wounded self-esteem The prolonged scenes in which he and Laur were indulging—I believe both derived a ce tain perverse kind of pleasure from their ow suffering, as is not uncommon—were harmin

CONTINUED ON PAGE 166

PERFECT COCONUT CREAM PIES IN HALF THE TIME!

1. A new complete coconut cream pie filling! Even the shredded coconut is right in the box!
2. Wonderful plain—or add a tangy touch with a delicious red jam!
3. Perfect for pies—marvelous for puddings. Try some new Jell-O Coconut Cream Pudding and Pie Filling soon.

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon
Coconut Cream

Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corp

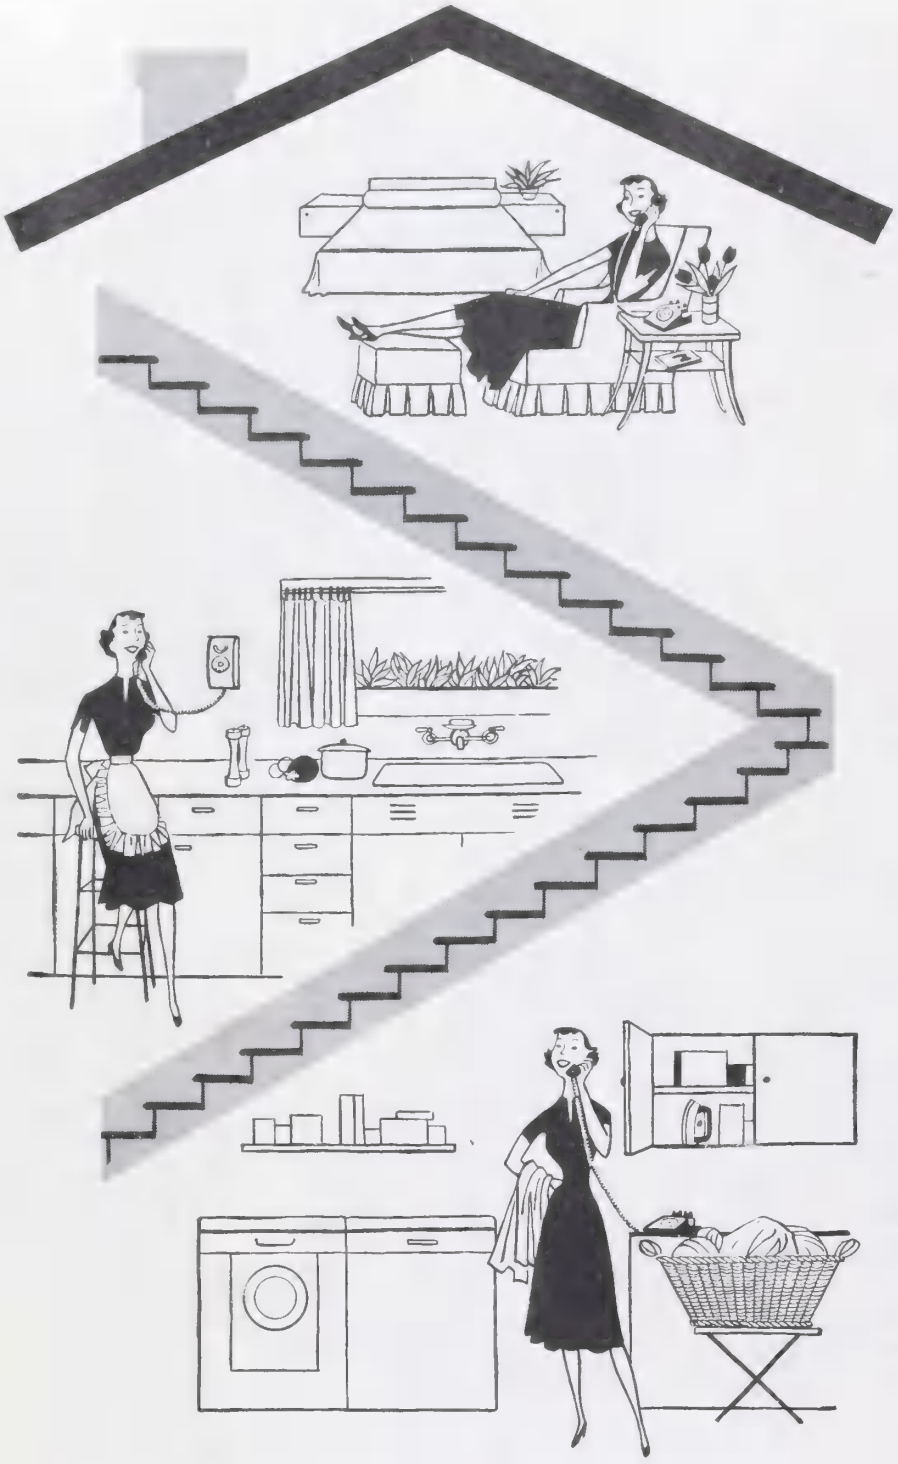
CONTINUED FROM PAGE 164

the children and their marriage. Also, Andy was keeping the situation alive. When he perceived this—Andy didn't want to keep Mark's image constantly in Laura's mind—he put a stop to the useless breast-beating, the useless cross-examinations.

"The decks were then cleared for him and Laura to make practical and overdue improvements in their lives and regimen. Andy learned that in marriage one must give as well as take. He began to listen to and applaud some of Laura's ideas and opinions instead of waiting for her to hang on every word of his. Instead of waiting for Laura to praise him, he praised her. Laura was encouraged to understand that her guilty conscience was as foolish and as futile as was Andy's regret. Like all human beings, she was entitled to a few personal thoughts, a measure of independence. When Andy stopped masterminding all her plans, she broke the habit of appealing to him for each tiny decision. Andy conceded her right to visit and entertain her sister, and she did her telephoning in the open.

Conceit is incompatible with understanding.
—TOLSTOY

"Andy's childhood and rearing had stuffed his head with false and out-of-date values. Drawing on memories of butlers and waitresses, Andy demanded too much formality, particularly at mealtimes. When he stopped insisting that adolescent boys shuck their bathrobes for well-pressed suits before appearing at the breakfast table, Laura found it easier to put flowers and candles on the dinner table. Because Andy couldn't shower Laura with emeralds (incidentally, she didn't care for jewelry), he wouldn't condescend to take her to the movies. Because he didn't live in a mansion, he couldn't be bothered to paint his house. Andy brooded because he couldn't provide his sons with private automobiles, but refused to lend David the family car on a Saturday night.



"Andy thought back to his own boyhood. He readily perceived that the time and attention of his parents would have meant considerably more to him than the material possessions they had used as substitutes for selves. Andy began to devote time, att and thought to his youngsters. He w warded with the love of his daughter a much affection as self-interested adol boys have to spare. No longer an emo adolescent himself, Andy was no long grieved when his sons preferred the con of young friends to parental company.
Andy painted his house, spruced up th den, modernized the kitchen, he was rep Laura's gratitude and pleasure. He also st being ashamed of his home.

"Laura and Andy stepped up their and civic activities. Instead of sticking by fireside while Andy fe upon and so did L
they began to prepar
the day their children be leaving them. They their neighbors in. I joined the garden
Andy joined a male club. They became
bers of the country

"Where Andy's business was concern this has a fairy-tale ring—he prospered direct result of listening to and adopting a gestion advanced by Laura. In the pa brushed aside any ideas advanced by he though he clung to and tried to absorb completely on the emotional level. Well, put in a cost-accounting system, found where the money was going and then cu wasteful techniques. When his personalit came more relaxed, when he swallowed carping, his employees stayed with him.
will never be rich, but he is now financ comfortable.

"Mark is still the firm's lawyer. Rec when I spoke to Andy on the phone—I c to obtain permission for this JOURNAL cle—I heard that Mark and his wife wer pected for dinner. 'Why not?' Andy sa me. 'Mark is my best and oldest frie never think of him in any other connec
These days I don't think of something meant nothing.'"

Editors' Note: This case history was compile condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

CONVENIENT TELEPHONES

save time and steps!

Throughout the home, telephones in handy places bring greater convenience, security and pleasure to all the family.

A telephone in the bedroom not only saves time and energy, and assures privacy, but is a great comfort, especially at night when you may be alone.

A kitchen telephone helps the busy homemaker answer calls and get things done without leaving "housekeeping headquarters." And in workshop or laundry, a handy telephone does away with "cellar stair sprints," makes things easier for everyone.

And the cost? You will find that these additional telephones will add very little to what you now pay for telephone service. They are available in eight decorator colors or two-tone combinations to harmonize with any interior. Call the business office of your local Bell telephone company.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Reminding you that someone, somewhere, would like to hear your voice today.

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTER ON PAGE 140

Vogue Design No. 8572. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece wrapped dress; 12 to 40, 30 to 40. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8351. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4545. "Easy to Make" coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.

Vogue Design No. 8523. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress or jumper dress and skirt; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8644. "Very Easy to Make" skirts; 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8583. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece wrapped dress; 12 to 42, 30 to 42. 60c.

